- (6) The courses of instruction in the various teaching institutions of the Industries Department have been so arranged as to give facilities for training both to the educated classes and the artisans, viz., weavers, chamars, dyers, calico printers, carpenters, smiths, etc. Artisans are given special facilities by exemption from the payment of fees and by the award of suitable stipends.

FIRST AID BOXES OR CUPBOARDS IN FACTORIES AND MINES IN THE PUNJAB.

*4983. Mr. M. A. Ghani : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

- (c) if answer to (a) and (b) or either of them be in the negative, reasons for not maintaining the first-aid boxes or cupboards mentioned in (a) and in not framing and enforcing the by-law mentioned in (b) ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) and (b)—Factories—employing 500 or more persons.

The reply is in the affirmative.

Mines—to which section 18 of the Indian Mines Act applies.—A box or boxes containing a sufficient supply of suitable splints and bandages, adhesive plasters, boric vaseline, cotton wool and tincture of iodine or other suitable antiseptic solution are to be maintained under the rules. These provisions are being enforced and followed.

(c) Does not arise.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : How is it that in factories employing less than 500 persons these things are not kept as a sort of safeguard ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : That was the standard fixed.

Mr. President : After putting a supplementary question the honourable member should resume his seat. I cannot allow two honourable members to keep standing at the same time.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : May I know the reasons why the Government has not provided a rule for those factories which employ persons less than 500 ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : It was not considered necessary to incur this expenditure when the number of employed is less than 500.

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : We do not say that where 499 persons are employed these things should not be kept. The number is generally fixed at 500 so that where the number is not larger unnecessary expenditure should not be incurred.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : Is the Government prepared to provide a rule that even in such factories these things should be kept ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : We are prepared to consider it.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : Thank you.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : (a), (c) and (d). About two months ago a complaint was made to the Deputy Commissioner, Lahore, by a number of Mazhbi Sikhs living near Bhikhiwind to the effect that they had been compelled to supply free grass for the Sub-Inspector's horse. The officer concerned states that the grass was paid for at market rates. The matter is under inquiry by the Additional Superintendent of Police, Kasur.

- (b) The impressment by officials of unpaid labour is absolutely prohibited.

LORRY STANDS.

*4985. Mr. M. A. Ghani : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that there are a large number of private motor lorry stands in different towns and cities in this province in general and in Lahore and Amritsar in particular ;
- (b) whether it is a fact that the lorry stands mentioned in (a) do not come within the purview of rule 53 (a) of the Punjab Motor Vehicle Rules, 1931, and are, therefore, outside the control of the registering authority ;

[Mr. M. A. Ghani.]

- (c) whether it is a fact that these lorry stands are often situated in the thickly populated parts of the towns and cities and are a constant source of inconvenience and nuisance to the residents there on account of the noise of the lorries, hooting of the horns, shouting of the hawkers and the hurry and the bustle of the passengers ;
- (d) whether he is aware that in other provinces of India, no person can run a private motor lorry stand except with the permission of the registering authority and the municipal corporation ;
- (e) whether the Government or the local bodies intend to provide lorry stands for parking the lorries free of any rent whatsoever ;
- (f) if answer to the above or any of them be in the affirmative, what steps have been taken or are likely to be taken to remove the inconvenience and nuisance mentioned in (c) and bring stands mentioned in (a) under the control of the registering authorities and municipal committees and provide free lorry stands as mentioned in (a) ;
- (g) if answer to (f) be in the negative, reasons for not taking the steps ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) Yes.

(b) Yes, if the stand is on privately owned land and not in a public place.

(c) A number of representations in this sense have lately been made to Government, and there have been communications to the press. These appear to relate primarily to conditions in Amritsar, and there is some reason to believe that many of the complaints are not entirely disinterested. In the province generally the private lorry stand would appear to be a potential nuisance rather than an actual one.

(d) Government have no information, but they doubt whether it is correct that private stands are controlled in other provinces, as this part of the question seems to suggest.

(e) Where public stands are provided at which vehicles can halt for extended periods it is reasonable that the vehicle-owners should pay a charge for the facility. It is not intended to issue any new orders in this respect.

(f) The question whether legislation should be undertaken to enable the authorities to prevent the establishment of private stands in unsuitable localities, and possibly also to control their working in certain directions, is at present engaging the attention of Government.

(g) Does not arise.

PUNJAB FRANCHISE COMMITTEE MEETING.

*4986. Mr. M. A. Ghani : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that on the 7th September, 1935, the Reforms Commissioner, Punjab, gave a notice to the members of the Punjab Franchise Committee to attend a meeting thereof in his office " at Ellerslie, Simla East, on the 21st September 1935, at 11 A.M., in order to consider Government's proposals for the delimitation of constituencies for the new Council of State " ;

- (b) if so, whether it is not a fact that by virtue of a letter purporting to be issued by the Reforms Commissioner on the 16th September, 1935, the meeting of the Franchise Committee was cancelled and thus no opportunity was given to it to consider the Government's proposals ;
- (c) if answer to (b) be in the affirmative, reasons for cancelling the meeting and for not giving the opportunity mentioned in (b) ;
- (d) what steps were taken to insure that the notice cancelling the meeting would have reached the members of the committee in time so that they might not have taken the trouble to go all the way to Simla from their respective places of residence in the different parts of the province ;
- (e) whether it is a fact that the notice cancelling the meeting was too short and did not reach certain members of the Committee personally in time and in ignorance thereof, they did go to Simla to attend the meeting only to find that it had been cancelled ;
- (f) if so, what steps have been taken to insure that in future in cases similar to the one mentioned above, sufficient notice of the cancellation of a meeting is given in order to avoid trouble, expense and harassment of the members ;
- (g) if answer to (f) be in the negative, reasons for not taking the steps ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) Yes.

(b) and (c). The letter actually was issued on the date stated. The meeting was cancelled, because, in answer to the Reforms Commissioner's original letter, only one member of the Franchise Committee wrote that he had any alteration to suggest in Government's proposals.

(d) and (e) It was considered that the posting of the notice cancelling the meeting, five days before the date of the meeting, would be enough to enable the letter to reach the homes of all the members ; and it did so reach them, so that the great majority of the members did not go to Simla. The only members that did not receive information were those that had, for one reason or another, left their homes and not less than three days before it was necessary to do so for the purpose of attending the meeting.

(f) and (g) Government do not consider that any special steps are necessary, in view of the answer to (d) and (e).

Mr. M. A. Ghani : May I know if it is the practice of the Government that when matters are referred to such committees written answers are required to be sent by the members to the President of the Committee ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : Out of which answer does this question arise ?

Mr. M. A. Ghani : In the letter addressed to the members of the committee it was stated that if any member wanted to put in certain proposals he had better communicate them to the Reforms Commissioner and the answer says that as only one member sent in the proposals the meeting was cancelled.

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : We concluded that members had no proposals to make and naturally it was unnecessary to incur expenditure on this account.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : Is it necessary for the members of a committee to send in proposals in writing ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : Especially when they were asked to do so. It is only to know whether there are any proposals. When there are no proposals it is unnecessary to incur expenditure and I thought you would approve that.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : May I know if that is the practice as regards other similar committees ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : It is not a question of practice ; it is a question of common sense.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : May I know what steps were taken by the Government to ensure that the letters reached the homes of the members ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : I think you know the ordinary presumption under the Evidence Act that a letter posted on a certain date must be presumed to have reached its destination on the due date. That is an ordinary presumption of law.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : Was the Reforms Commissioner aware that the members were at their homes ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : How can he know if you leave your house long before the date ? He is not supposed to know.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : Are the members bound to stick to their homes ?

Mr. President : Next question.

DELIMITATION OF CONSTITUENCIES.

*4987. Mr. M. A. Ghani : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that the Reforms Commissioner, Punjab, invited representations from the public criticising the provisional proposals of the Punjab Government regarding the delimitations of constituencies in this province for the consideration of the Indian Delimitation Committee ;
- (b) whether he will put a list of the representations mentioned in (a) on the table of the House ;
- (c) whether it is a fact that the copies of the representations were not supplied to the members of the Punjab Franchise Committee ;
- (d) whether it is a fact that in all such Indian Commissions and committees with whom the provincial members sit for discussion, copies of representations from the public are always supplied to the latter in order to put them in possession of the views of the public for the purpose of facilitating discussions ;

- (e) whether it is a general grievance that the members of the Punjab Franchise Committee were greatly handicapped in their discussions with the Indian Delimitation Committee on the 8rd October, 1935, on account of the non-supply to them of the copies of the representations mentioned in (c) ;
- (f) if answer to (d) and (e) or either of them be in the affirmative and answer to (c) be in the negative, reasons for not supplying the copies mentioned in (c) ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) Yes.

(b) The list is placed on the table.

(c) Yes.

(d) Government have no knowledge.

(e) Government have no knowledge.

(f) Does not arise.

RESTRICTIONS ON PUBLIC TO PUNJAB SECRETARIAT.

*4989. Mr. M. A. Ghani : Will the Honourable Finance Member be pleased to state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that every visitor to the Punjab Secretariat at (i) Lahore and (ii) Simla, has to sign a book kept in the Gate Police Room and visitors' room, respectively ;
- (b) whether it is a fact that no visitor can interview any official in the Secretariat without his first persuading a police man to send his (visitor's) card to him ;
- (c) since when the arrangement of interviews has been enforced and by whom ;
- (d) whether he is aware that the arrangement mentioned in (a) and (b) in practice, puts an unnecessary clog on the free access of the members of the public to the officials mentioned in (a) ;
- (e) whether he is aware that the arrangement mentioned in (a) and (b) is most disliked by the visitors as being unnecessarily troublesome, humiliating, obstructive and expensive ;
- (f) if answer to (d) and (e) or either of them be in the affirmative, reasons for the arrangement mentioned in (a) and (b) and steps taken by him to remove the grievances mentioned in (d) and (e) ?

Mr. F. H. Puckle (Chief Secretary) : (a) Yes.

(b) Visitors who have had the forethought to arrange an interview beforehand with the official whom they desire to see are admitted at once on signing the Visitors' Book : others are required to wait until the official whom they desire to see has intimated that he is prepared to see them.

(c) Since April 1931 under the orders of the Chief Secretary. Punjab Government's letter No. 10099 (Home-General), dated 24th March 1931 and a note communicated to the Press are laid on the table.

(d) No.

(e) No complaints have been received.

(f) The reasons for the introduction of the present system were two : (1) to keep undesirable persons out of the Secretariat and (2) to prevent officials working in the Secretariat from being disturbed in their work at all hours of the day. It is more convenient always for officials and often for visitors that the times of visits should be fixed beforehand.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : What is the meaning of "undesirable persons" ?

Mr. F. H. Puckle : "Undesirable" means a person not desirable. (Laughter).

Mr. M. A. Ghani : May I know whether the sub-inspector in charge of the gate is in a position to say whether a certain person is desirable or not desirable ? Does he hold an enquiry ?

Mr. F. H. Puckle : I do not consider it arises out of my answer.

Copy of a letter No. 10099 (H.—Genl.), dated the 24th March 1931, from the offg. Chief Secretary to Government, Punjab, to (1) Heads of Departments, (2) the Secretary, Punjab Legislative Council.

SUBJECT :—Arrangements for the admission of visitors to the Secretariat.

It has been decided to enclose, with a fence, the Secretariat compound and to use only the main gate as the ordinary entrance to the Secretariat for persons having business there. As soon as the necessary arrangements have been completed, an Enquiry Office will be located at the main gate. An officer will be constantly on duty there, and will be provided with a telephone. All visitors to the Secretariat will be requested to enter their names in a book which will be kept at the Enquiry Office. If a visitor is known to the Officer in Charge, he will be allowed to enter. If the Officer in Charge does not know the visitor, he will enquire from the officer whom the visitor states he intends to visit whether the latter desires that the visitor should be admitted.

2. It is realized that these regulations may, at any rate at first, cause a certain amount of inconvenience to members of the public and possibly also to members of Government and officials. It is suggested therefore that interviews in the Secretariat should be, as far as possible, by pre-arranged appointment. It would then be possible for, e.g., the Personal Assistant to a Member or Minister, Secretary or Head of a Department to send to the Officer in Charge of the Enquiry Office a list of visitors to whom appointments had been given. Such visitors on arrival could then be admitted when they arrive without delay.

3. The rules as regards visitors in general will not, of course, apply to members of the Legislative Council who may come and go as they wish.

Will Director Information Bureau kindly make public through the newspapers the following notice :—

"It is notified for general information that in future admittance to the Civil Secretariat will be by the main gate only. Members of the public having business in the Secretariat are advised in their own interests to make previous appointments. Otherwise they are liable to be detained at the gate until it is ascertained whether their business can be attended to. This regulation does not apply to members of the Legislative Council."

- (a) whether it is a fact that a barbed wire fencing has been put round the Punjab Secretariat at Lahore ;
- (b) whether it is a fact that on account of the fencing all accesses to the Secretariat have been closed except the main gate ;
- (c) whether it is a fact that on account of the closing of all the accesses except the main gate, all employees of the Secretariat and the visitors to it have to pass through the main gate to go to their respective destinations although they could do so more easily had the accesses not been closed ;
- (d) reasons for (i) putting the fencing and (ii) closing all accesses except the main gate ?

Mr. F. H. Puckle (Chief Secretary) : (a), (b) and (c) Yes.

(d) The honourable member is referred to the answer to part (f) of question No. *4989 (prepage).

RECRUITMENT TO PROVINCIAL CIVIL MEDICAL SERVICE.

*4992. Lala Jyoti Prasad : Will the Honourable Minister for Education be pleased to state—

(a) whether it is a fact—

- (i) that in the last selection for recruitment to the Provincial Civil Medical Service, out of the 12 men taken, only two were Hindus ;
- (ii) that out of these two also, one was taken due to his being an agriculturist and not because of his merit ;
- (iii) that non-Muslims standing first and second in the M.B., B.S. examination of the Punjab University were rejected while Muslims with much lower positions were taken ;

(b) whether Government has considered the desirability of making recruitment to the Medical Service on the basis of merit alone ?

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon : (a) (i) and (ii) Yes.

(iii) No, the non-Muslim who stood first in the final M.B., B.S. examination was selected.

(b) The selection is always made on merits with due regard to communal proportion in the Medical Service. The best men are selected from each community. The selection is made by a board of 6, out of whom 4 are members of this honourable House and the 5th is the Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals and the 6th Principal, King Edward Medical College.

COPYING AGENCY.

*4993. Lala Jyoti Prasad : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

- (a) whether a scheme for fixation of pay and re-organisation of the copying agency in the Punjab is under the consideration of the Government ;
- (b) what pay Government proposes to fix for the new recruits and the old hands ;
- (c) whether there will be any distinction between the two ; if not—why not ;

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) A general reorganization is under consideration but no scheme has been prepared so far.

(b) and (c) These questions are premature.

COPYISTS.

*4994. Lala Jyoti Prasad : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that in 1920 there was a proposal by the then Financial Commissioner to bring the English copyists on a permanent scale of Rs. 75—5—125 ;

[L. Jyoti Prasad.]

- (b) what circumstances have now compelled the Government to fix the pay of the copyists at such a low scale as Rs. 25, having no regard to length of service and without any annual increment ;
- (c) whether it is a fact that typists in deputy commissioners' offices get annual increments ;
- (d) if so, the reasons for distinction between typists and copyists as regards the increment ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) It is a fact that in 1923—not 1920 as suggested in the question—Mr. Abbott prepared a scheme to bring copy clerks on permanent scales of pay. One of the scales suggested was Rs. 75—5—125.

(b) The reorganisation of the agency is receiving the attention of the Financial Commissioner and the question of pay is under consideration.

(c) Yes, if they are not apprentice or copy clerks.

(d) Does not arise.

COPYISTS.

*4995. Lala Jyoti Prasad : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

(a) whether a letter from Sardar Jawahar Singh Dhillon, Member, Legislative Council, addressed to the Editor of the Tribune appearing in its issue of April 2, 1935, about the deplorable condition of copyists in the Punjab has come to the notice of the Government ;

(b) if the answer to (a) be in the affirmative, what action Government has taken or proposes to take in the matter ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) Yes.

(b) The letter will be taken into consideration along with other material available with Government when the reorganization of the Copying Agency is undertaken.

RECRUITMENT TO MEDICAL SERVICE.

*4996. Lala Jyoti Prasad : Will the Honourable Minister for Education kindly state—

(a) whether it is a fact that the Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals, Punjab, published an advertisement in the Tribune of the 16th September for the recruitment of sub-assistant surgeons fixing the age limit as 25 years ;

(b) whether it is also a fact that he published another advertisement in the same paper of the 12th September for the recruitment of the assistant surgeons fixing the age limit as 35 years ;

(c) whether it is also a fact that there is a difference of only three years in the courses of study of the assistant and sub-assistant surgeons ;

- (d) if the answer to (c) be in the affirmative, why this difference of ten years in the recruitment of two services is maintained ;
- (e) under the above circumstances, whether the Government is prepared to increase the age limit in the case of the recruitment of sub-assistant surgeons also ?

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon : (a) Yes.

(b) The advertisement issued in two issues of the Tribune, dated the 30th September and 2nd October, 1935, and not in the issue, dated the 12th September, 1935, as stated by the honourable member.

(c) Yes.

(d) The difference is maintained by Subsidiary Rule 3·5, the reason being that assistant surgeons, before appointment as such, have to pass F.Sc. examination and have to put in five years in the Medical College, while sub-assistant surgeons have to pass only the Matriculation examination and have to put in only four years in the Medical School. It also enables men who after passing M.B.,B.S., Punjab, proceed to Europe for further medical qualifications to be recruited to Punjab Civil Medical Service.

(e) No. In the first place a large number of medical licentiates, not exceeding the age of 25 years, is always available for employment as sub-assistant surgeons and in the second place the age limit can be extended, in special circumstances, by the Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals under Subsidiary Rule 3·7.

EXAMINERS.

*4997. Lala Jyoti Prasad : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that before 1933, examiners were appointed from senior copyists and they were considered as senior copyists drawing Rs. 100 per month as pay ;
- (b) whether it is a fact that after 1933, when old examiners were made permanent, they in certain districts like Rohtak, Jullundur and Amritsar were given the grades of Rs. 75—5—125 and Rs. 40—2—90, starting at Rs. 75 per month ;
- (c) whether it is a fact that the average income of a copyist then was more than the pay of an examiner or equal to that ;
- (d) if so, why the same grades are not given to those old copyists by the Government, who are in service since then ;
- (e) the reasons for paying the copyists at the rate of Rs. 25 per month for the whole of their lives and the newly recruited free copy clerks at the rate of Rs. 30 a month ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) Examiners were ordinarily recruited from among copyists on Rs. 80 and Rs. 100 per mensem.

(b) Yes, on Rs. 76 per mensem.

(c) There is no record from which a reply can be given.

(d) Does not arise.

(e) It is not proposed to pay copyists Rs. 25 for the whole of their lives.

Proportion of seats to which each community is entitled on local bodies ;

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : (a) A copy of Punjab Government letter No. 1020-S. (L. S.-G.—Boards), dated the 31st May 1935, is laid on the table.

(b) No such complaints have been received from or with reference to any particular local body ; but the question has been raised from time to time, by Hindus that the formula should be modified, so as to take the fact of taxation into account.

(c) and (d) Do not arise.

Mr. Muhammad Din Malak : Did the suggestion emanate from the Honourable Minister himself ?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : That question is coming up shortly.

Copy of a letter No. 1020-S. (L. S.-G.—Boards), dated the 31st May, 1935, from P. Marsden, Esq., I.C.S., Secretary to Government, Punjab, Transferred Departments, to all Commissioners of Divisions.

SUBJECT :—Proportion of seats to which each community is entitled on local bodies.*

THE proportion of seats to which each community is entitled in the case of local bodies is at present worked out on the average of population and voting strength of each community. The method of working out this formula is illustrated in the statement forwarded with Punjab Government endorsement No. 28910, dated the 23rd September, 1931. It has now been suggested to the Punjab Government (Ministry of Local Self-Government) that this formula be revised by the introduction of a third factor, namely, the amount of direct taxes paid by each community. I am, therefore, to request that the opinions of all local bodies in your division be obtained on this proposal and forwarded to Government with your own views and those of the selected Deputy Commissioners of your division.

DIRECT TAXES AND DETERMINATION OF SEATS ON LOCAL BODIES.

*5001. Khan Bahadur Mian Ahmad Yar Khan Daulatana : Will the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government please :—

  - (v) district boards during the five financial years, 1930 to 1934, from the Hindu, Sikh, Muslim, Christian and other communities in the Punjab ?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : (a) The honourable member is presumably referring to letter No. 1020-S. (L.S.-G.—Bds.), dated the 31st May, 1935, from the Secretary to Government, Punjab, Transferred Departments, to all Commissioners, in which Commissioners were requested to obtain the opinions of all local bodies on the suggestion. This letter was issued as a result of a resolution passed by the Standing Committee on Local Self-Government, and as the honourable member will see from the terms of the letter itself which has been laid on the table in reply to his previous question, the object of the letter is to elicit the views of local bodies, Commissioners and selected Deputy Commissioners on the proposal.

(b) The direct taxes which are collected by local bodies include inter alia house-tax, annual taxes on property, animals and vehicles, profession tax, motor tax, haisiyat tax and local rate.

(c) It is impossible to give this information as taxes collected from various communities are not entered separately.

Mr. Muhammad Din Malak : Did the Honourable Minister receive any deputation on the subject? If so, who were the deputationists? I mean the deputation on the question of introduction of the third factor, the amount of direct tax paid by each community.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : The honourable member has been in touch with this matter. He would know that the question had been agitated since 1923.

Mr. Muhammad Din Malak : My question is whether the Honourable Minister saw any deputation on the subject.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : A deputation consisting of a large number of Hindus insisting upon the inclusion of this as a factor in the formula.

Mr. Muhammad Din Malak : Was the Honourable Minister in possession of some material about the amount of taxes which were paid before he issued the circular in question?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : The question of adult suffrage was considered by Government in 1928 but was dropped and it is not proposed to take it up again. The other part of the question is too vague for a definite reply.

FRUIT SPECIALIST.

[Hon. Nawab Muzaffar Khan.]

There is nothing in this clause which exempts the lessee from the payment of land revenue, abiana and forest dues on the cultivation of guara, but the Irrigation Department do not assess either land revenue or abiana on crops ploughed in the soil before the girdawari takes place. Accordingly, clause XI (iv) of the lease deed provides that "no malikana or land rent will be payable for such areas as are brought under guara and for which Irrigation Department does not assess any abiana."

(d) The lessee was given possession late when time for the sowing of guara had almost expired. He could not, therefore, comply with clause VI of the lease deed in kharif 1935 but he cultivated 189·36 acres with guara against 375 acres required under the instrument of lease.

(e) Yes.

(f) The complaint was forwarded to the Irrigation Department so that assessment of guara might be made according to rules.

(g) Allegations were found to be untrue.

(h) Yes, on the crop ploughed in the soil.

(i) Action, if necessary, will be taken on the receipt of khataunis from the Irrigation Department.

(j) No.

II.—That this agreement is for a term of 5 years from the first day of March 1935 (one thousand nine hundred and thirty-five) and ending on the last day of February 1940 (one thousand nine hundred and forty), except for the rabi crop of 1939 which the lessee may have sown in a portion of Pirawala Compound land, as provided in this agreement, which crop the lessee shall be entitled to harvest by the end of May 1940 (one thousand nine hundred and forty).

III.—That the total area covered by this agreement is believed and shall be taken to be correctly described as to extent and position, but should any error, mis-statement or omission be discovered in respect of such description the same shall not annul this agreement provided that the dues payable by the lessee shall be adjusted if necessary with reference to the acreage of land leased to him over and above the 1,123 acres mentioned in clause X as finally ascertained.

IV.—That the Divisional Forest Officer for the time being in charge of the Multan Forest division (hereinafter called the Forest Officer) shall hand over to the lessee as soon as the agreement has been signed for temporary cultivation during the period of this agreement within the terms and conditions hereinafter appearing the whole of the culturable commanded area of the beldari land and the unsown portions of the Pirawala Compound land in the Khanewal Plantation, that portion of the Pirawala Compound land which is under rabi crop of 1934-35.

shall be handed over on 1st June, 1935 (one thousand nine hundred and thirty-five) after the harvesting of the crop; less the land occupied by the forest buildings, compounds, nurseries, water-courses, roads and depôts and any land required by the Forest or Irrigation Departments from time to time for the construction of irrigation water channels or for any other purpose.

V.—That in consideration of the payment of land rent, occupier's rate and malikana as provided in clauses X and XI of this agreement the lessee shall be entitled to cultivate the whole of the area actually handed over to him under the terms of clause IV of this agreement for the period commencing first day of March 1935 (one thousand nine hundred and thirty-five) and ending with the last day of February 1940 (one thousand nine hundred and forty) and last day of May 1940 (one thousand, nine hundred and forty) provided that the lessee shall use the beldari land areas for kharif crops and the Pirawala Compound land half for rabi and half for kharif, such halves to be in compact blocks, and shall hand back the area sown with kharif not later than the 29th day of February 1940 (one thousand, nine hundred and forty) and for rabi not later than 31st May 1940 (one thousand, nine hundred and forty) together with any crops not harvested on the said dates and the Forest Officer shall have full powers to use the areas as he thinks fit.

VI.—That the land is leased for the purposes of improvement by cultivation of guara crop and for temporary cultivation and may not be used in whole or in part for any other purpose. Guara will be sown over at least one-third of the cultural commanded area every year and in such a way that every part of the leased area is sown with guara at least once in five years. Guara will be ploughed in the soil according to the rules and procedure of the Irrigation Department on the Lower Bari Doab Canal.

VII.—That the lessee shall not be entitled to any compensation or remuneration in respect of any expenses incurred by him on clearing, levelling and any improvement which may be effected by him to the land leased out.

VIII.—That time is the essence of this agreement and the lessee shall not be permitted to cultivate any land which cannot be harvested before the 29th day of February 1940 (one thousand nine hundred and forty) for kharif and 31st May 1940 (one thousand, nine hundred and forty) for rabi as provided in clause V above, the dates on which he shall surrender possession of the land together with such crops as may remain standing thereon.

IX.—That water will be given for sowing the crops from the Forest Distributary for the beldari land and Pirawala Compound main from Khanewal minor for the Pirawala Compound land, the former on a basis of one cusec per hundred acres sown and for the latter proportionately to the whole area of the Pirawala Compound provided that it shall in no case exceed 6 days during kharif and 3½ days during rabi.

The Pirawala main shall be kept up thoroughly repaired and free from breaches and weak banks by the lessee during the period he is obtaining his proportionate supply. The Secretary of State gives no guarantee against supply or stoppage or shortage of water and accepts no responsibility for damage to crop due to non-receipt of water at any time. The supply of water and its regulation will be subject to the rules and regulations framed under the Canal Act VIII of 1873.

The time for proportionate distribution of water from the Pirawala main shall be determined by the Forest Officer and the lessee shall have no complaint against such orders. The lessee shall not object to the Forest Department irrigating the roadside trees whenever required from the water running in the mains of the beldari land and also to water taken for the nurseries and compounds.

X.—That the area irrigated shall be assessed at the schedule of occupier's rate applicable to the other channels on the Lower Bari Doab Canal. The lessee shall pay occupier's rate (abiana) direct to the Irrigation Department on presentation to him of the demand statement by the Forest Officer, within one week of such presentation and shall intimate the fact of his having done so in writing to the Forest Officer for his information.

XI.—That in consideration of the lessee being permitted to cultivate the area as defined in clause IV read with clause III above, the lessee shall pay to the Forest Officer the following sums of rent generally known as—

(i) Malikana at the rate of Rs. 5 (rupees five only) per acre per year for whole of the gross area leased, i.e., 1,123 acres as given in clauses III and IV. On no account shall the lessee be entitled to any remission of Malikana on account of failed crops or any other cause whatsoever.

(ii) Land rent at the rate of Rs. 2 (rupees two only) per acre matured with any crop whatsoever.

(iii) No malikana or land rent will be payable for such areas as are brought under guara and for which Irrigation Department does not assess any abiana.

XII.—That the payment of all dues under clause XI shall be made by the lessee within one week of the despatch of the bill by the Forest Officer.

[Hon. Nawab Muzaffar Khan.]

XIII.—That without prejudice to any other rights reserved to the Secretary of State he may recover from the lessee any arrears of moneys due under this agreement in the manner in which arrears of land revenue are recovered.

XIV. That the lessee shall provide the Forest Officer sixty able-bodied labourers every day for work in Khanawal Plantation at the time and place required by the Forest Officer or his duly authorised assistant in this behalf. The lessee further undertakes to increase this number to one hundred whenever called upon to do so by the Forest Officer; but whenever more than sixty coolies are required a week's notice will be given to the lessee. Secretary of State does not in any way guarantee to employ any or all labourers. No compensation whatever for any loss or inconvenience experienced by the lessee for the arrangement of this labour will be paid. The labourer employed will be paid at the rate and according to the practice current in the Khanawal Plantation of which (i.e. the rate and practice) the Forest Officer will be the sole and final judge and his decision will be final and legally binding on the lessee.

XV. That the Secretary of State does not grant to the lessee, but hereby expressly excepts and reserves to himself all rights to in or over mines and minerals, coal, gold, gold washing, earth-oil, quarries, in under or upon and also all streams, water-courses and public thoroughfares referred to in this agreement or any part thereof.

XVI.—That notwithstanding anything contained in this agreement the officials of the Forest Department shall have full powers to enter upon the land referred to in this agreement and to do all acts and things which may be necessary or experienced to carry out for the terms of this agreement or to fulfil the duties under the Indian Forest Act XVI of 1927 or any rule made thereunder or to secure the full enjoyment of the rights reserved under clause XV.

XVII.—That no buildings of any kind shall be erected by the lessee within the limits of the beldari and Pirawala land leased out to him without the permission in writing of the Forest Officer who shall have full power to refuse such permission or to modify the building plans submitted by the lessee.

The lessee shall, if required by the Forest Officer, remove all or any of the building which may have been erected before the expiry of this agreement and the lessee shall have no claim to compensation on account of any action taken by the Forest Officer under this clause.

XVIII.—That in the event of a fire occurring in any part of the Khanawal Plantation the lessee, his employees and tenants shall render all possible assistance whether called upon to do so or not, in putting out the fire as well as in tracing out any person who may set fire to the said plantation himself or aid or abet any person in setting fire to it.

XIX.—That the main water-courses for the Pirawala Compound as referred to in clause IX above, and the mains for the Beldari lands have been constructed at the expense of the Secretary of State, while the other subsidiary water-courses for irrigating the areas under cultivation will be constructed by the lessee at his own cost. No water-courses shall be constructed by the lessee except with the approval of the Forest Officer. The lessee shall also construct culverts at his own cost in accordance with the plans supplied by the Forest Officer at places where the irrigation channels cross the main roads and shall hand over all such culverts free of all charge to the Secretary of State on the expiry of this agreement. The Forest Officer shall have the right to repair any irrigation channels at the expense of the lessee if neglected or damaged by the lessee, or by his servants or agents. The Irrigation Department will have the right to construct or cause to be constructed any new water-courses or to alter the direction of the existing water-courses and the lessee shall be entitled to no compensation by reason of such action except for compensation for damage to standing crop in which case the decision of the Collector of the district shall be taken as final. All the subsidiary water-courses dug by the lessee shall be transferred free of charge to the Secretary of State and the lessee shall have no claim to compensation for said water-courses on the expiry of the lease on account of cost incurred on their construction or maintenance.

XX.—That the lessee undertakes to relinquish possession of any plot or plots of land required by the Forest Officer for the construction of buildings, or any other use out of the area held by the lessee provided that payments under clause XI shall not apply to such plots.

XXI.—That in the event of the lessee failing to abide by the provisions of clauses VI or and XIV or and of any other clause or and making default in the payment of any sum or sums of money due from him under this agreement, the Conservator shall, without prejudice to any remedies he may have, have the power to confiscate the security (deposited in accordance with clause XXII) in part or a whole and to terminate the agreement. In the event of the security being confiscated in part or in whole, the lessee shall be bound within 10 days of receiving a written notice from the Conservator calling upon him to do so to make up the security to the amount at which it stood previous to such sum or sums being recovered from it. Such recoveries may at the discretion of the Conservator include any extra charges for the dues on account of delayed payment and other expenses incurred by the Forest Department.

XXII.—That the lessee has deposited with the Secretary of State as security in Government Promissory Note 3½ per cent. for the due fulfilment of the terms of this agreement of Rs. 10,000 (Rupees ten thousand only).

XXIII.—That the lessee shall not assign, sublet or make over the said land or any part thereof to any other person except with the special permission of the Conservator in writing.

XXIV.—That the lessee before taking over the land leased to him shall submit a detailed list of the names and parentage, etc., of his tenants or agents that may work under him together with a list of all animals kept by each of them.

XXV.—That in the event of any dispute arising between the parties as to the meanings or construction of any word or term used in this agreement such dispute shall be referred to the Commissioner for the time being in charge of the Multan Civil division whose decision shall be final.

XXVI.—That this agreement is for the performance of acts in which the public is interested within the meanings of Section 74 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872.

XXVII.—That the cost of stamps for registration of this agreement should such be required shall be borne by the lessee.

AUDIT OF CENTRAL CO-OPERATIVE BANKS.

1293. Professor W. Roberts: Will the Honourable Minister for Agriculture please state—

- the charge made for audit of central co-operative banks when the system was first inaugurated;
- what changes have been made in recent years with dates;
- what are the latest proposed charges and what percentage of central banks have accepted them?

The Honourable Sardar Sir Jogendra Singh : (a) The charge made on Co-operative Societies (not only on Central Co-operative banks) for the expenses of audit, supervision, and propaganda, was originally 5 per cent. on the annual net profits.

(b) In 1919, this charge was raised to 7½ per cent., and in 1929 to 10 per cent.

(c) There is no proposal to raise this charge. The Punjab Co-operative Union has asked Central Banks to make temporary contributions to relieve its present difficulties, but this is entirely on a voluntary basis. Replies of all Central banks to this request have not yet been received.

- (b) whether it is a fact that such monopoly exists in Kangra and Hoshiarpur districts ;
- (c) whether the Government has decided to cancel all the monopolies that exist in the province, if so, why the monopoly in Hoshiarpur and Kangra districts has not been so far cancelled ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) The instructions in the letter to which the honourable member refers related to monopolies of motor vehicle traffic on roads in the plains. They were not intended to affect the powers of district magistrates and registering authorities under rules 89 and 98 of the Punjab Motor Vehicles Rules, 1931, to control the traffic on hill roads, which are in a separate category.

(b) It is understood that monopolies exist on certain hill roads in the Hoshiarpur and Kangra districts.

GOVERNMENT'S DEMANDS FOR SUPPLEMENTARY, ADDITIONAL AND TOKEN GRANTS FOR 1935-36.

POLICE—SHAHIDGANJ DISTURBANCE.

Mr. President : The Council will now resume discussion on the supplementary demand for Police.

Chaudhri Asadullah Khan (Sialkot, Muhammadan, Rural) : I referred the other day to the officials who were in charge of the situation at the time of the Shahidganj affair, namely the Deputy Commissioner and the City Magistrate as being Sikhs and therefore not creating that sense of confidence in themselves being members of the community with which the Muslim community was at variance. With regard to that I have only this much to add that these officials are still in Lahore and that the Government in order to stop the trouble any further should have sent them elsewhere. Their continuing to remain in Lahore at this very time is creating the difficulties not only for the Government, but also for those who have been externed as a result of the Shahidganj agitation.

Passing on from this fact, the mosque was demolished at 1 A. M. on the 8th, that is on the night between the 7th and the 8th. The winch about which something has been said before was brought into the Shahidganj mosque at 6 P. M. on the 7th from the side of the Landa Bazar in a hand cart. If my recollection is correct, the Chief Secretary said that before retiring on the night of the 7th, he telephoned to the Deputy Commissioner asking him whether the Deputy Commissioner knew anything about the mosque being contemplated to be demolished, and that he was assured by the Deputy Commissioner that although a very excited meeting of the Sikhs was going on, there was no chance of the mosque being demolished. The winch was already in the Shahidganj mosque at the time that the Deputy Commissioner gave that assurance to the Chief Secretary.

Mr. F. H. Puckle : On a point of order, Sir. The honourable member is misquoting me. I never said that the Deputy Commissioner gave me any assurance. I said that he informed me.

Mr. President : Will the honourable member please correct his statement, if it is wrong?

Chaudhri Asadullah Khan : Before I started on this point, I said, "if my recollection is correct." I now find that my recollection with regard to the word "assured" is not correct. I therefore substitute the word used by the Chief Secretary, that the Deputy Commissioner "informed" the Chief Secretary that the mosque would not be demolished. The winch, as I have already said was in the place at 6 P. M. on the 7th. There can only be two alternatives, (1) that the authorities did not know of the presence of the winch at the place, (2) that they did know of it. I cannot conceive of a third alternative. If the authorities knew that the winch was there, was or was not this communication communicated to the Chief Secretary? So far as I have been able to understand, this information was not, on that evening, communicated to the Government, that is, to the Chief Secretary. I speak subject to correction when I say that the Chief Secretary while making his speech on the last sitting of the Council said that the Government came to know of this winch some days afterwards. May I ask whether the Chief Secretary when he came to know that the winch was there but that the information was not communicated to him, called for an explanation from the Deputy Commissioner? If he did so, I think that that information should have been communicated to the representatives of the people here. If he did not do so, I think, I should be within my province to say that the Government was trying to suppress the same information which was suppressed by the Deputy Commissioner himself when informing the Chief Secretary that there was no apprehension whatever of the mosque being demolished.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : I think I ought to explain here that demolition work of other nature, of other buildings was going on inside the same enclosure.

Chaudhri Asadullah Khan : May I submit that these explanations may be made when the Honourable Finance Member will be making his speech in reply? May I request as a member of this honourable House that my speech be not interrupted at short intervals?

Mr. President : No interruptions please.

Chaudhri Asadullah Khan : Thank you, Sir. As I was saying, has the Government asked for an explanation from the official who was responsible for suppressing the information with regard to the winch? If the winch was taken into the place under the very nose of the police and the authorities in charge of the situation, how can Government now say that they did not know? If the winch was taken there and they knew of it, why did they suppress that information? The mosque was demolished and this winch was used as an instrument of demolition. And it is not open to the Government to plead that they were ignorant of this fact. With regard to the other part of this agitation, the procession was formed from the Badshahi mosque on the 19th after the Friday prayer. This procession marched on to Lange Mandi near the municipal water supply tank. The police held up this procession at that place from that afternoon up to the morning of the next day, that is, the 20th. But suddenly on the 20th the police was withdrawn and the crowd was allowed to march up to Delhi Gate. If any efforts had been made to disperse the crowd near that tank in Lange Mandi, the crowd would have found it easy to disperse there rather than at the Delhi Gate, because from that place there are five exits for the crowd, three through the principal gates of the town, the Lohari, the Shah Almi and the Mochi, one backwards towards Hira Mandi and a fifth through a part of Hira Mandi towards the Fort side. Moreover, the crowd had not gathered in as strong numbers on the 19th as on the 20th or on the 21st, because the crowd was considerably reinforced after the evening of the 19th. It would have been far easier for the Government to disperse the crowd on the 19th and at the place at which they had been stopped. On the other hand, the crowd is allowed to proceed to the Delhi Gate. Before the crowd reached the Delhi Gate, there was also another strategic point to stop the crowd and disperse it, that is, at the Chuna Mandi end of the Dabi Bazar. From that place as well there are five or six exits which the crowd could have utilized if adequate steps had been taken to disperse it. I say that the Government should have dispersed the crowd at these two places not only because the exits for the crowd could have been easily accessible but also because when the crowd is allowed to go nearer the place of their sentiment it would be far more difficult to disperse them there than it would be if the crowd were kept at a respectable distance from that place. Delhi Gate is far nearer to the Shahidganj mosque than the Chuna Mandi end of the Dahi Bazar or Lange Mandi. And if adequate steps had been taken to disperse the crowd there, there would have been far less trouble than there was when the crowd was allowed to proceed to Delhi Gate. The crowd proceeded to that gate and there it was blocked with wire entanglements or palisades and a squad was stationed in front of them. On the morning of the 20th firing took place, and in the meantime the crowd had been considerably reinforced from behind. There was only one exit for the crowd to use and that was to defy the squad and disperse either to the Yakki Gate side or the Akbari Gate side. That manœuvre on the part of the crowd would have been taken by the authorities as an attempt to rush through the situation. And therefore what could the crowd do except to wait and be shot down like dumb driven cattle. When the shooting takes place, the natural curiosity of the crowd behind who can not see what is happening in front would give them an occasion to leave their place and try to come as near the front as possible. And that is what actually happened. The crowd from the back of the mob diverges on towards the Yakki Gate and the Akbari Gate side. A barricade is placed near the Kotwali on the Yakki Gate side and the crowd went up and sat on the road just opposite Mian Abdul Aziz's house. There were some military lorries standing on the road opposite the Kotwali and when the police charged the crowd with a lathi charge naturally everybody in the crowd thought that they were being dispersed in order to let the military lorries pass. My inference is still more strengthened when just a few moments after the crowd had acted on the advice of the Deputy Commissioner to retreat into the municipal garden opposite Mian Abdul Aziz's house, these military lorries were made to pass on that road. The crowd would naturally think that their having been asked to leave the road open was an effort made on the part of the Government to clear the way for these lorries.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : May I ask if the honourable member is speaking about the 20th or the 21st of July?

Chaudhri Asadullah Khan : This is about the 21st of July. I am referring to the events on the morning of the 21st. This lathi charge took place on the morning of the 21st. The crowd retreats into the garden opposite Mian Abdul Aziz's house and the squad of police, even in that garden, shoots at the crowd. I am saying it on very reliable authority that one of the magistrates remonstrated with the police that that action was not justified because the Deputy Commissioner by asking the crowd to retreat into the garden had told the crowd or informed it that if they retreated into that garden they would not be further molested. Then, when these lorries pass on, the crowd joins the Circular Road along side the railway embankment and from that road comes on to this very road to which reference has already been made and they stand at a very respectable distance from the barricade erected by the authorities and some of their number take out a rope in order to demarcate the place whence the crowd should proceed no further. While this rope is being stretched across the road in front of the crowd the second shooting takes place and one of the young men who was holding the rope also succumbs to one of the shots. After these shooting reports, which was heard at a very long distance some inhabitants of that part of Lahore which is on the other side of the railway embankment (that is, Misri Shah) came on to the embankment to satisfy their natural curiosity as to what was happening. This was not a very large crowd and they did not demonstrate anything in any way which could give apprehensions to the authorities that they were going to do something against the public tranquillity. As they come on to this embankment another shooting takes place and although none of these bullets did any harm, yet the fact remains that shooting was resorted to even against some persons standing on the embankment who could do absolutely no harm to the military or the police stationed opposite Yakki Gate, because it is a fairly long distance from that place. After that twenty to fifty people gathered near the terminal tax post on the junction of the Circular Road and the Yakki Gate side road and another shooting takes place on this crowd. Before I pass on from this, I think it advisable to point out another shortcoming in the management of this affair and that is that every one here knows that the Circular Road is very frequently used for traffic from and to Gujrahwala. Hundreds of lorries pass every day and I would not be exaggerating if I stated that two lorries a minute would be the average of lorries passing on that road. No policeman, head constable or other police official was placed on the junction of this road and the Circular Road in order to caution ordinary traffic not to proceed that way because there was an apprehension that they might become victims of this shooting. This shows an utter disregard of human life and an utter disregard of public safety.

Then, shooting was also resorted to on the Akbari Gate side, but as I have not been able to discover many details about it I do not propose to refer to that. It is now stated that the Government did all that it possibly could to control the situation and that nothing was left undone. I would here invite attention to section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code which, I submit, was not brought into force in the present situation. Section 144 says :—

“In cases where, in the opinion of a District Magistrate, Chief Presidency Magistrate, Sub-divisional Magistrate, or of any other Magistrate specially empowered by the Local Government or the Chief Presidency Magistrate or the District Magistrate to act under this section immediate prevention or speedy remedy is desirable, such Magistrate may, by a written order stating the material facts of the case and served in manner provided by section 134, direct any person to abstain from a certain act or to take certain order with certain property in his possession or under his management, if such Magistrate considers that such direction is likely to prevent, or tends to prevent, obstruction, annoyance or injury, or risk of obstruction, annoyance or injury, to any person lawfully employed, or danger to human life, health or safety, or a disturbance of the public tranquillity, or a riot, or an affray.”

This section clearly gives power to the magistrate to give such order in regard to property in the possession of a person or under the management of a person if such magistrate thinks that that order would prevent any disturbance of the public tranquillity or a riot or an affray. Was there or was there not any case for the District Magistrate of Lahore or any other magistrate empowered under this section who was in charge of the situation to think that if an order under this section is made it is not only likely to prevent but it is bound to prevent the mischief that accrued afterwards. I say that there was ample case for any magistrate to take action under this section but no action was taken and I say that no greater occasion than that of the Shahidganj affair has in my knowledge arisen where this power must have been used and was not used. That is another blunder committed by the Government with regard to this Shahidganj matter.

It is said that this was not a state of martial law. I differ from that statement. This was a state of martial law in all but name. Why I make this statement is because when the crowd was ordered to retreat into the municipal garden and a lathi charge was had recourse to, some of the members of that crowd in the hurry left their shoes on the road. The Deputy Commissioner ordered one of the municipal committee sweepers to collect those shoes, bind them in a bundle and throw them into the garden where the public had retreated in order that the owners of those shoes might pick up whatever belonged to them. At this the Brigade Major came up—I believe his name is Brigade Major Beckett—and asked the sweeper to leave the shoes where they were. The Deputy Commissioner was present when this incident took place and while speaking to one of his companions who were standing nearby he said: "Our authority is now at an end." (An honourable member: May I know the source of information of the honourable member?) The source of my information is very reliable so far as I am concerned, and I am prepared to take responsibility for the truth of the facts. (Another honourable member: I hope it is not hearsay). The Deputy Commissioner spoke to this gentleman standing nearby and said: "our authority is now at an end." If that is not a state of martial law, what is? The Deputy Commissioner who is the highest authority in the district and who is specifically in charge of the situation is there. He orders the sweeper to collect the shoes and throw them where the public can get at them and a responsible military officer comes and tells that man to leave the shoes where they are. That shows that that was a state of martial law; only if the term martial law is not applied to it, it does not mean that that gives any greater right to the Government than if the matter were technically called martial law.

This is a grant to defray, in my opinion, the expenses incurred because of the Shahidganj affair, and I must regret to say that in all civilized countries the law and common sense have admitted that nobody shall be asked to pay twice for the same thing. The Muslims have paid with their blood and their lives. Are they now expected to pay in cash as well? That would be asking us to pay twice over. I regret to have to say that for the last two and a half years the effect on the Government has been rather deteriorating, and as I see that the Muslims have had no redress so far from the Government here, I make bold to address the benign person of His Majesty the King Emperor and cry out on behalf of the Muslims and say, "Give us redress."

With these words I strongly oppose the motion.

Mr. Muhammad Din Malak (Lahore city, Muhammadan, Urban):

We must be thankful to the honourable member for Hoshiarpur for giving us the opportunity to express our views on certain aspects of the Shahidganj affair. Much hair-splitting has been done on the one hand to reconcile and on the other to distinguish the oral promise made by the Deputy Commissioner to the Muslim deputation and the press communiqué he issued on the 2nd of July, 1935. In my opinion the communiqué may be taken to represent the true import of the assurance which the Deputy Commissioner had given to the Muslim community, namely, that the mosque would not be demolished until a settlement had been reached. Now, as regards this promise of the Deputy Commissioner it must be conceded that it had not been faithfully kept up to the 6th of July, when, as we all know the initiative had passed from him to the higher authorities. Before I proceed further I would like to state, that as President of the Lahore Municipal Committee and as a member of this honourable house representing the city of Lahore, I have had frequent opportunities of coming into contact with the Deputy Commissioner and the City Magistrate and I have always found them both to be thorough gentlemen of unquestionable probity. Indeed, I have often suspected in my conversations with the Deputy Commissioner, that behind the official exterior of Mr. Pratab there lurks a vein of real nationalism; and a true nationalist cannot easily abandon himself to ribald communities. It has been said that it had been a mistake to have left the control of the situation in the hands of the Sikh Deputy Commissioner and Sikh City Magistrate. It is, however, remarkable that so long as the situation had been handled by these two gentlemen nothing untoward had come to pass. (Hear, hear). It may be due and probably it was due to a feeling amongst the Sikhs themselves that they must beware of doing anything which brought disgrace to these two distinguished members of the community.

On the 6th of July a Muslim deputation had been invited by His Excellency where we had a heart-to-heart talk and discussed the various alternative solutions of the problem. During the course of the conversation His Excellency made it clear that there was little hope of the Sikhs agreeing to the demand of the Muslims, that he was receiving a deputation of the Sikhs also in the afternoon when he would try his best to persuade them to come to an amicable settlement with the Muslims, but that if the Sikhs insisted on sticking to their legal rights it would not be possible for his Government to interfere. On the following day we were again sent for, when His Excellency told us that the attitude of the Sikhs was not very conciliatory, that it was with difficulty that he had extracted a promise from them to the effect that they would not demolish the mosque until after the Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee had given its considered decision and that he only hoped that the Sikhs would keep to their words. Early the next morning or probably some time during the intervening night the Sikhs, however, proceeded to demolish the mosque, and as now we all know, without waiting for the promised considered decision of the Parbandhak Committee.

Some of us considered it permissible to infer from these facts that the mosque had been demolished at the instance and with the help of the Government. Everybody has a right to draw his own inferences from a given set of facts. My own honest conviction is that neither the Government had given any help nor had it prompted the Sikhs to demolish the mosque. (Hear, hear). The fact of the matter would appear to be that over-estimating their influence the Government had set out to attain the unattainable. On the one hand there were Sikhs who fortified by the decision of the highest tribunal in the province in their favour were adamant in their attitude. On the other there were the Muslims who refused to recognize any legal rights which, according to them, unduly and unjustifiably interfered with their religious institutions. The result was that Government failed, but it must be admitted that their failure was an honourable failure. It may also be added that in the communiqué they had issued after the demolition of the mosque the Government while admitting the Sikhs' legal rights had held them to have been morally in the wrong by precipitating the crisis. It is evident that the Government could not have reproached the Sikhs in this manner, if they had been in league with the Sikhs, no would the Sikhs have allowed to go this part of the communiqué unchallenged. (Hear, hear). There is one point, however, which lends some colour, some force to the rumour that the Government had colluded with the Sikhs in the matter of the demolition of the mosque. It has been admitted on all hands now that a crane or a winch had been used by the Sikhs in the demolition of the mosque and a large number of people suspect that this crane or winch had been requisitioned from or supplied by a department of the Government. It is a pity that so far the Government has not seen it fit to make an enquiry into the matter. It would be to the interest of all concerned that an independent enquiry was forthwith ordered into the matter of this mysterious winch.

It must be acknowledged that the Government have made two definite gestures to mollify the Muslim feelings. They have promised to hand over to the Muslims by about the beginning of the next year the mosque and its adjacent courtyard at present occupied by the Sessions Court. They have also promised to give facilities for the passage of a Bill for the protection of Muslim graveyards. An application in this connection had been made by me and the Governor General has since accorded his sanction to the introduction of the Bill on the subject. It will be introduced during the next session. The Muslim community appreciates Government's solicitude for its feelings as evidenced in these gestures. But what they cannot understand is as to why the Government has not taken any action so far to grant compensation to the injured and to the survivors of those who were killed in the Shahidganj affair. It can not appreciate as to why the Government are delaying the release of the internees, the release of those convicted in connection with the Shahidganj agitation, the refund of the security money already recovered from some of the Muslim papers, or the cancellation of security orders in the case of some others. The other day in reply to a question by my friend, Pir Akbar Ali, the Honourable Finance Member assured us that the Government contemplated taking action in this direction as soon as it was satisfied that normal conditions have returned. I do not think that the present conditions are abnormal in any way. If the Government suspects that the release of the internees or the rehabilitation of certain Muslim newspapers will again render the conditions abnormal, the Government also can again call to their help the Criminal Law Amendment Act. If you want to give anything, you must give it gracefully. Almost the entire charm and half the value of the promised concessions have gone by the board. I would strongly advise the Government to discard this halting hesitating attitude, and forthwith give effect to the promised concession. I will conclude by saying that it will be to the interest not only of the Muslims but of all concerned that the cases instituted by the Muslims should be disposed of with due despatch. I suggest in this connection that a special District Judge, preferably an I. C. S. may be deputed for the purposes as early as possible.

Mr. J. D. Anderson (Legal Remembrancer): One issue before the House, an important issue, is not so much the behaviour of the subordinate officers while the disturbances were actually in progress in Lahore as the legal position which confronted the Government early in July last. A very strong criticism was made against Government both on Monday and to-day and to appreciate the justice or injustice of it, it is necessary to consider what the legal position was with which the Government was confronted. Normally it would, I think, be my duty both to the House and to the Government to try to explain what that position was. I want the House to realize that there is a very great difficulty in the way of my doing it. There are, however, certain remarks which I would like to make. I am rather surprised that more weight has not been given by my honourable friends on the opposite benches to an incident which happened at Lahore a few days ago, an event which I myself regard as the most important event which happened since July last. I maintain that it is certainly the most hopeful of all the events which have happened since July. I refer to the filing or the institution of a civil suit to determine the status of the building which is the immediate cause of this dispute. I was overjoyed myself when I heard of the institution of the suit. I congratulate most heartily those who are responsible for instituting the suit. I think they deserve well not only of their community but of the province as a whole. I do earnestly appeal to the House, to the representatives of the people of the Punjab and through them to the people of the Punjab themselves that they will establish and maintain that atmosphere of peace and good will without which no appointment of special judges is going to enable the court to adjudicate in that calm, disinterested atmosphere which is needed ultimately to reach that just and final decision which we all hope for.

Though I am delighted at the institution of this suit it makes it difficult for me as Legal Remembrancer to try to go into a full discussion of what the legal situation was in July. Standing Order 30 of the House runs as follows:

"A member while speaking shall not refer to any matter of fact on which a judicial decision is pending."

The honourable member for Sialkot blamed the Government for not making use of the powers of the district magistrate or other magistrate under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code. For me to answer those criticisms I should have to go into what I regard as the facts about the building in the Shahidganj Gurdwara. Again and again all the High Courts of India have held that the use of section 144 must be judicial. Before answering whether the Government could or could not have employed section 144 I should have to consider the effect of the judgment of the Sikh Gurdwara Tribunal. That is a matter which is bound to come before the District Judge of Lahore and I think it will be improper for me to attempt to say anything on that point. But I do ask the House to realize that before they consider whether Government could or could not use certain powers under the law there are three factors which must be taken into consideration. One of the factors, that is the facts, is I believe well known. The second is the statute law of the province and the third is the judicial decision. I do not think that any one can form a proper opinion of what Government should or should not have done in July without weighing those things very carefully indeed. I can not say anything more than that. I should be breaking the rules of debate if I did. I have mentioned section 144. There is also section 295 of the Indian Penal Code. The answer is exactly the same. I cannot give any exposition to the House of what I regard to be the proper use of that section in a certain set of facts without discussing those facts and that I cannot do. I made certain notes about the various matters which I should have liked to put before the House. But frankly if that would mean my trying to give any statement about law here, I would prefer not to mention them. I only implore honourable members to exercise the same restraint which I have tried to show myself and beg them to take all those factors into consideration before blaming the Government. It is no good reading the bare law. You have got to apply that law to the facts and you have got to take into account also the previous decisions of the courts.

Sardar Sahib Sardar Ujjal Singh (Sikh, Urban): I was unavoidably absent on Monday last and have not had therefore the advantage and the privilege of listening to the debate initiated by Chaudhri Afzal Haq. We on these benches have so far refrained from making any reference to the Shahidganj affair lest the tension that exists now might increase. But unfortunately the ball has been set rolling and we can not allow certain statements go unchallenged. Chaudhri Afzal Haq who is a luminary of the Ahrar Party was the last person to be expected to rake up bad feelings on the floor of this House. The Ahrar Party has, as we all know, won universal admiration for the statement they issued on July 28 on this affair. I may be pardoned if I quote one or two sentences from that statement. It is said in that statement:

"After continuous deliberations extending over several weeks Majlis-i-Ahrar has come to the conclusion that the more the sacrifices the Muslims make the more they will be throwing themselves into deeper and deeper waters and when after the most important sacrifices the community encounters defeat the measures of disgrace will be so horrible that for 50 years the community will not be able to take part in any movement for the promotion of any Muslim cause."

Further on they say:—

"In our view it would be the height of bravery for the Muslim community to retrace the wrong step."

I can not understand the change in the mentality and attitude of my honourable friend now.

Chaudhri Afzal Haq: I want to enquire whether the honourable member has heard my speech or whether he has read it.

Sardar Sahib Sardar Ujjal Singh: I stated at the very outset that I have not had that privilege of hearing him, but I read his speech in the papers.

(On Chaudhri Afzal Haq rising in his seat.)

Mr. President : Order, order.

Chaudhri Afzal Haq : On a point of order, Sir.

Mr. President : The honourable member tried to raise a point of order before but he did not raise any.

Chaudhri Afzal Haq : Without reading the speech no member can base his opinion on it.

Sardar Sahib Sardar Ujjal Singh : I was going to say that the member has raised a debate on this matter with a vengeance. Several charges have been laid at the door of the Government. I am really amused to find that such charges should have emanated from the Muslim community. It is a matter of common knowledge that the Government has been over-anxious to placate the Muslims. The Government did their best not to lose the sympathy of the Muslim community in this matter. They tried to bring about compromise, but unfortunately could not succeed. They tried to explore all legal avenues to help the Muslims, but the law did not come to the rescue. In fact, they allowed unlawful demonstrations far too long and when the Muslim mob was engaged in unlawful activities the Government as a mark of appreciation of the restraint of that mob gave them a most valuable property as a gift. On the other hand moral responsibility for the trouble was thrown on the Sikhs who in spite of grave provocations had remained absolutely peaceful. Short of abdicating their authority I say that without fear of contradiction, short of abdicating their authority, the Government did everything to placate the Muslims. For three weeks the Government left the situation to be controlled by police and district authorities. When the situation passed out of their control they had to call the aid of the military and I can again say that that is the first instance of a similar kind and of a similar magnitude when firing was used to the minimum possible extent. I can say that definitely. I had the pleasure of travelling with a military officer who was present at the time of the firing and he said that at every one round, they were told to watch the result and on no other occasion of a similar nature such a restricted firing was ever done. Our Muslim friends are laying the blame at the door of the Government for doing their duty. May I ask the responsible Muslim members of this House and some honourable law-abiding members of their community what part they played to check the unlawful activities of their brethren? (Interruption). They had not even the courage to come out in the Press to condemn the unlawful activities. (Interruption). Sir, I do not want these interruptions.

Shaikh Muhammad Sadiq : If you ask questions, you will get answers.

Mr. President : I can not allow running comments.

Sardar Sahib Sardar Ujjal Singh : I said that they had not the courage to come out in the press.

Shaikh Muhammad Sadiq : We had.

Mr. President : Order, order.

Pir Akbar Ali : There was no press left.

Sardar Sahib Sardar Ujjal Singh : After the 20th of July and the 21st when the firing had taken place, when the mischief was done some honourable members came out to condemn breaches of law. They were sleeping all these three or four weeks. Had they the courage to come out earlier to face their brethren, I am sure firing would not have been resorted to. The charge is laid on the Government for not explaining their position properly to the public. As a matter of fact the charge is the other way about. Government has been giving too many explanations and too many communiqués have been issued by the Government. If these communiqués had not been issued, I am sure the Muslim mob would not have been encouraged. In one of these communiqués, as I have already referred to, a big and very valuable property was given and the result was that the Muslim agitators were encouraged and the situation went entirely out of control and the Government had to call in the aid of the military. One of the honourable members, the member for Sialkot referred to the District Magistrate and the City Magistrate. I am not defending them and I am not going to defend them as a Sikh.

Shaikh Muhammad Sadiq : He is not a Sikh as far as I know.

Sardar Sahib Sardar Ujjal Singh : I am not prepared to say that myself, though possibly the orthodox Akalis will not count one of them as a Sikh, but I can say this without any fear of contradiction that even the most brilliant specimen from amongst the British element of the Civil Service would not have handled the situation more tactfully and more efficiently than Mr. Partab has done (hear, hear and cheers). As Indians all of us ought to be proud of him (hear, hear). One honourable member had the hardihood to refer to the fact that on such occasions, Indian deputy commissioners ought to be transferred and the authority ought to be given to a European gentleman.

Shaikh Muhammad Sadiq : That is his own view.

Sardar Sahib Sardar Ujjal Singh : I agree with Mr. Sadiq. This is a matter on which the honourable member ought to have spoken with a little more thought. Does he mean to say that on every such occasion of communal riots, the deputy commissioner and the man in charge ought to be an European? (Some honourable members : No). If you let that be then you are going to bid good bye to the indianization of services. What are you going to do in the new constitution when you are forming your own cabinet? The fact of the matter is that the Muslim mob, I should say, the misguided Muslims instead of getting their grievances, if there were any grievances, removed by a friendly approach to the Sikhs, tried to intimidate the Sikh community to accept their demands and when they failed they tried to intimidate the Government and possibly with some success and encouraged by that, their agitation went on increasing. After all, what did the Government do in this matter. The Government had the only function of preserving law and order? They were no party to this affair. The highest court in the province and the courts in three judgments had definitely declared that the Shahidganj belonged to the Sikh community and the Muslims had nothing to do with it. Now, the only function of the executive Government was to enforce the findings of their courts. Their duty was the primary duty of any Government and they did not do anything beyond that. In fact our complaint is that they did not do their duty more firmly. If they had done so, I am sure, the trouble would have been nipped in the bud. Now, my honourable friends who have spoken against this demand perhaps realize, or they do not realize that a year hence they will be called upon to hold the reins of Government and the destinies of 23 millions of people of this province will be in their hands. If a situation like that were to arise, it would be interesting to speculate how that situation will be handled by these gentlemen. Would they allow it to be handled in the manner expressed by them on the floor of this House? If so, then heaven help the province.

Shaikh Muhammad Sadiq : He has not read or heard our speeches and that is why he is speaking like this.

Mr. President : Please let the honourable member have his say.

Shaikh Muhammad Sadiq : Let him have his say, but let him say right things and not wrong ones. He is imputing things which we never uttered.

Sardar Sahib Sardar Ujjal Singh : I do not refer to the speeches, I am referring to their general attitude. A very pertinent question was asked by the Honourable Finance Member when my honourable friend the member from Amritsar spoke about the rights of Mussalmans regarding Shahidganj, "What are those rights"? He has not been able to say anything in reply to this question. But I will reply to that question for him, as to whether they have any rights vested in the Shahidganj institution. I need not take the time of the House in going into the whole history of that institution, but I would refer only to one of the statements, a very pertinent statement and a report of an officer of the Government. That officer was a Mussalman, was a member of the Provincial Civil Service and was deputed by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab in 1883 to report.

Mr. President : I can not allow it to be read. The matter is sub-judice.

Sardar Sahib Sardar Ujjal Singh : If the matter is sub-judice, I need not refer to it. It is said that additional police is not required. I can not understand why there is any opposition to the sanction of this additional staff knowing the state of affairs in this province. Do you mean to say that stray assaults on law-abiding citizens should continue or do you mean to say that ten lakhs of volunteers that you are going to recruit should continue to intimidate the lawful citizens and should continue to parade the streets of Lahore? If the Sikhs were to adopt the same method, there is bound to be a clash. Do you want that such a clash should come about? If you do not want, then you must support this demand for additional police to keep the law-breakers in order. (Hear, hear). In the end I should warn the Government and I say this with a full sense of responsibility that this vacillating policy of Government in handling the situation so far is doing harm to the province. Life, property and honour of law-abiding citizens are in constant danger. No one knows that at the next turning of the street he will not accost his assailant. If this state of affairs is allowed to continue, there will be anarchy. Impression has gone abroad that Government has almost abdicated, and there is some justification for such an impression in the western districts of Campbellpore and Rawalpindi. Only the other day in a small place like Tuman in the Campbellpore district the Sikhs were not allowed to hold their religious diwan. A mob of 5 or 6 thousand collected to intimidate them. Some of the women folk were not allowed to go out of the precincts of the Gurdwara and that continued for three or four days. I do not wish to go into the details of that matter, but from what reports have reached us, I can say this that life and property and honour of the people there are not safe. A reign of terror prevails there. Unless Government takes up a firm attitude in this matter, I cannot say what the consequences might be, the Government should face this menace resolutely and it should demonstrate to the world that it is no respecter of persons or particular communities. Whosoever breaks the law, must suffer the full penalty of law. Either good sense in us all would prevail or the Government will have to handle the situation in a more firm and impartial manner. With these few words I support the demand (hear, hear).

Maulvi Mazhar Ali Azhar (East and West Central Towns, Muhammadan, Urban) (Urdu): The present opportunity has been taken apparently to discuss the Shahidganj affair which I need hardly say is a matter of vital importance and which has been agitating the whole province and the country for the last four and a half months. It is not now merely a question of the Government demand for additional police being accepted or rejected as has been wrongly suggested by the honourable member from Mian Channun (Sardar Sahib Saradar Ujjal Singh). It is a matter, as we all know, which has threatened or at any rate which threatens to disturb the peace of the province unless of course, we understand the real situation without further delay. We must, therefore, approach this problem with a full sense of responsibility and behave in a manner as will augur well for the future when the burden of running the administration will be placed on our shoulders. We should not feel shy of criticising the actions of this Government if we have to assume responsibility later on. It is not our duty to say "aye" to anything and everything which is said or done by the Government.

After these introductory remarks I would like to give a brief history of this all important problem and incidentally tell the House the part played by the parties concerned in this affair. I will not say at this stage whether the Government has acted wisely or unwisely in handling the situation or whether or not it has been guilty of gross negligence in discharging its duties in this matter. But I must say to the honourable member from Mian Channun, that if he himself accuses the Government for having adopted a vacillating policy in this connection and having thereby let the communal tension grow in the province, he should not feel perturbed if other people think it fit to similarly criticise the actions and attitude of the Government. And I must say that the honourable member just now referred to has misunderstood the attitude of Ahrars towards this problem when he referred to the statement issued by us on the 23rd of July and has considered it inconsistent with the present discussion. It appears that he has not carefully read that statement and if he has read it, he has not cared to understand the same. I may as well say that he was wrong in suggesting that this question should not have been brought under discussion at this juncture when the relations of the different communities are so much strained already. He should know that it is better that this matter is allowed to be discussed and the opportunity afforded to all to speak out their mind. I am sure that this discussion will surely help to clear the atmosphere of so many false things which have gathered round this problem. To come to the history of the question the trouble began on 28th June when first an attempt was made to demolish the mosque and when four Sikhs were buried under the debris resulting in the death of one of them. After that incident the Muslims began to start an agitation and it was on the evening of the 29th June when a huge body of Muslims gathered together and started towards the Shahidganj mosque. This huge body of Muslims had hardly reached their destination when the Deputy Commissioner, the City Magistrate and the police officers arrived at the spot and began to persuade the Muslims gathered there to disperse. I myself happened to be at the spot where I had gone on being called by the Muslims and the officers in charge of the situation. I remember perfectly well that the City Magistrate himself, and at his request I also, tried to pacify the angry mob and the City Magistrate assured the people that the demolition of the mosque had been definitely stopped and that the Sikhs would not be allowed to demolish it further unless and until some decision had been reached. I do not remember the exact words which were used on that occasion to appease the mob and it was in fact impossible to take a note of those words used on that occasion. I, therefore, do not join issue on the matter of the use of the words by the City Magistrate or by the Deputy Commissioner who had also joined us in persuading the mob to go back. It is, however, a fact and an undeniable fact that an assurance was given to the mob that the mosque would not be allowed to be demolished any further pending the decision of the Government. After the 29th the things began to move a little faster. The Muslims on the one hand founded an association and named it "Anjuman-i-Tahaffuz-i-Masjid Shahidganj" and the local officers on the other apprised the Government at Simla as to what had happened and what was happening with regard to the Shahidganj affair. On the 2nd July a deputation of the Muslims waited upon the Deputy Commissioner and tried to place before him their point of view with regard to that matter. The Deputy Commissioner gave them a patient hearing and again assured the deputationists that until some decision was reached the mosque would remain intact. Following this assurance the statement was also issued on the 2nd July over the signature of the Deputy Commissioner in which the same assurance was repeated and I think I will do well to read the relevant portion of that statement. It is as follows :—

"It must be obvious to all sane persons that such a state of affairs, if allowed to continue, is bound to embitter communal relations and endanger the peace of the city. I appeal to them to do everything in their power to contradict false and alarming rumours and to restore communal harmony. Both the mosque and the Gurdwara are perfectly safe and authorities have taken all possible measures to protect them pending settlement of the dispute."

These were the words which were used by the Deputy Commissioner in that statement. After that both the Muslims and the Sikhs tried to settle the dispute. It is now an open secret that the Muslims in a deputation met the Sikhs on the 4th July. The Muslim deputation consisted of Maulana Zafar Ali Khan, Syed Habib and Maulana Daud Ghaznavi besides others and they met Master Tara Singh and Sardar Mangal Singh and others to come to some settlement with regard to this matter. In the course of the talk between the parties Master Tara Singh made it quite plain to the Muslims that the return of the mosque to the Muslims by the Sikhs was out of the question, it was impossible for them to bring their community round to agree to it, and, therefore, some via media should be found out to arrive at some settlement. On this Maulana Daud Ghaznavi offered another solution of the difficulty and proposed that in order to appease the Muslims the Sikhs should at once undertake to repair that portion of the mosque which had been demolished and should further undertake not to demolish the mosque. It is impossible that this knotty problem may be solved in this way to the satisfaction of the Muslims, as it is the demolition of the mosque which has given them offence. Thereupon Master Tara Singh replied that the proposal deserved consideration and asked, if the Sikhs agreed to

that, would the Muslim leaders give an assurance to the effect that the Muhammadan community would take it as the final settlement of the matter and that no further trouble would ever crop up in this connection? Maulana Zafar Ali Khan was not prepared to give that undertaking. Finding that there was a deadlock, Maulana Daud Ghaznavi suggested that the Muslims should have a talk in private. The Sikhs thereupon retired, saying that as the Muslims were their guests, they themselves should withdraw. And then Maulana Daud Ghaznavi turned towards Maulana Zafar Ali Khan saying that the responsible officer of the Government about whom Maulana Zafar Ali Khan had talked to him two hours earlier in the day and who had conveyed to him the information that the Government had already decided that if the agitation continued for a few days more, the mosque would be handed over to the Muslims was simply deceiving him. Maulana Zafar Ali Khan was perfectly sure of that. Maulana Syed Habib said if Maulana Zafar Ali Khan was assured that the mosque would be given to the Muslims, he himself had very reliable information, that the Sikhs were also assured of their strong position and that some responsible officer of Government had told them also that if they cared to demolish the mosque the Government would afford adequate protection to them by posting police and military around the building and have the mosque demolished just as the mosque outside Shahalmi Gate was demolished. Now one can understand how under such circumstances the conversations could possibly succeed.

On the 6th July the Government came down from Simla with a view to effecting some suitable settlement of the matter and thus removing the tension then prevailing between the two communities. It is a matter for regret that the European element in the Government considered itself competent to deal with the matter and no Indian member or Minister was brought to Lahore by the Government. The Indian Member and Ministers who might have succeeded in persuading the leaders of both the communities to effect an amicable settlement, reached Lahore after the 8th July when the mosque had actually been demolished. But the manner in which our wise Governor and his wise Councillors attempted to bring about a settlement between the communities concerned, was one which could in no case be conducive of good results. They did not ask the leaders of both communities to consider the matter most dispassionately in order to arrive at an agreement equally honourable to both the communities leaving aside the question of legal rights. What they actually did was that they explained to the Sikhs that their legal position was unassailable and that according to the opinion of the law officers of the Government they were perfectly within their rights even to demolish the mosque and in that case even section 295, Indian Penal Code would not be applicable. Now you can imagine how this explanation could in any way be helpful to Government in bringing about the much needed amicable settlement between the two communities. Why should the Government have flung such an opinion in the face of the Sikhs at the very first instance? When the Government had explained to the Sikhs that if anybody disturbed them in their task of demolition of the mosque, he would be dealt with in a manner in which the Muslims were later on treated on the 19th, 20th and 21st of July, by meeting with lathi charges and shooting, and any Sikh who wanted to demolish the mosque would have the fullest protection of the police and the military, how could it possibly be supposed that any settlement could be arrived at?

Now I turn to another very important point. On the 6th July a deputation of the Sikhs waited upon His Excellency the Governor and told him that though they would not hold out any promise that the mosque would not be demolished, they could give an undertaking that it would not be demolished unless and until the matter was laid before and considered by the Shiromani Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee in its meeting to be held on the 8th July. But the mosque was actually demolished before the Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee had the occasion to consider the matter. Now the Shiromani Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee was not a body of men like the Majlis-i-Ahrar, the Congress and other similar bodies, but it was created under the Gurdwara Act for the management of Sikh gurdwaras. Now Government says that matters took an unexpected turn when a Sikh leader took an oath to demolish the mosque himself if no other person was prepared to do it, and he actually began to demolish the mosque on the night of the 7th July. I ask when according to the undertaking given by the deputationists the mosque was not to be demolished until the matter was considered by the Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee, why did the Government not think it worthwhile to prevent the said Sikh individual from doing an act which was likely to jeopardize the peace of the country and bring bloodshed on an extensive scale? (Hear, hear). When an individual was about to act in this way, when he brought a winch in order to demolish the mosque, why did the Government not move their little finger to stop his activity? Was their strong arm paralysed? Had all their strength vanished? When the Government and the Sikhs on the one hand and the Muslims on the other were waiting for the decision of the Parbandhak Committee was it not up to Government to see that no individual was allowed to do any act that was likely to endanger the peace and tranquillity of the province? Please look at this matter keeping all these things in view. I am not stating all this with a view simply to apportion blame, but what I want to stress upon is that under such circumstances no amicable settlement was possible.

It has been said that even the Ahrars did not care to issue their statement at the proper time. I would submit that at that time they were closely watching the trend of events. At that time it was useless for us to express our views. If we kept silent, it was because the Government had given an assurance which was interpreted to be to the effect that the mosque would not be demolished until and unless the communities concerned had arrived at some settlement acceptable to both of them. In the presence of such an assurance nobody could have believed at the time that the mosque would be demolished in the way it was done. Even after the demolition of the mosque the Government had invited the members of this House for the 17th of July with a view to explore avenues of a settlement honourable to both sides. Who could under the circumstances say that nothing would come out of all these apparently useful efforts? It was on account of this assurance that we remained silent up to the 23rd. Mr. President, I may also mention here that the fact that on the one hand the Government had given an assurance to the effect that the mosque would not be demolished until and unless the communities concerned had arrived at some settlement and on the other hand they had arranged to supply the Sikhs with a winch and other material on the 7th raises a suspicion in the mind of the most unsuspicious. These tools and plants could not have been obtained from anywhere else but from some Government department. Why did the Government give these tools to the Sikhs on hire on the dates mentioned above? The rent deeds for these tools were very probably drawn up on the 7th. If so, it only shows that the Government did know that the mosque was to be demolished and it gave an assurance to the Muslims knowing all the time that the demolition of the mosque had already been decided upon. On the 7th all roads leading to the Shahidganj mosque were closed and nobody was allowed to go to that side. A poster which was distributed in thousands alleged that on the 7th after midday the passages leading to the mosque were picketed. The military may have come on the morning of the 8th July, but the police was there to take charge of the passages. All traffic towards Shahidganj was stopped on the 7th at about noon. No one was allowed to go to Shahidganj with the exception of motor lorries which had taken tools and winch to the spot or which were removing debris from it. If the Government had taken up the position that all legal rights over the mosque belonged to the Sikhs and that they had no power to check the Sikh community from pulling down the mosque the matter would have been quite different. It would have been a quite different issue if the Government had taken up this position and declared that they had taken up that position. The Government had contemplated that a more difficult situation would arise from this incident and it was with this expectation that it gave an assurance on the one hand to the Muslims and on the other allowed the Sikhs to proceed with the work of demolishing the mosque. All the facts show that the Government was in the know of everything that happened later on and that it allowed the matters to drift and did not handle the situation properly at the right moment. Not only the officers of the Punjab Government but also the officers of the Government of India gave it in writing that legally the mosque belonged to the Sikhs and that if they intended to demolish it the Government should make arrangements for their protection. All these facts tend to show that everything was premeditated. The meeting of the Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee was to take place on the morning of the 8th and it was possible that that body might have given its decision in favour of the mosque not being demolished ; but in order to take the matter out of the hands of the Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee the mosque was hastily demolished on the night between 7th and the 8th. A member of the said committee wanted to go to the Shahidganj on the 8th in the morning but he was not allowed to go there. If a Muslim had wanted to go there the matter would have been different. But a Sikh who was a member of the Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee was not allowed to go to the spot. It was not a wise action to stop a member of the committee from proceeding to the spot. It was not a wise act of the Government officers. Had the Government put a ban on the taking of tools and plants to the spot for pulling down the building, it would have been a wise action, but to stop a member of the Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee from going there was certainly not a wise action. Perhaps the Government feared that he would remonstrate with the Sikhs who were engaged in pulling down the building. All elements to start a communal riot on a big scale were allowed to be there, but it was only by a chance that the riot did not start. Military aid was called and it included soldiers from all communities. There were Hindu, Muslim and Sikh soldiers there. Hindu and Sikh soldiers were stationed between the Akbari and Delhi gates and Muslim soldiers were posted between the Delhi Gate and Yakki Gate. The Hindu and Sikh soldiers shouted Har Har Mahadeo and Sat Siri Akal and the Muslim soldiers shouted Allah-ho-Akbar. One morning it was expected that the Muslim soldiers will start a fight with the Hindu and Sikh soldiers or vice versa. For five minutes the situation remained fraught with the greatest danger. The Muslim soldiers fasted for some days because of their injured feelings at the demolition of the mosque. The feelings of all communities were excited and had we, Ahrars, also joined hands with the Muslim public there would have been serious riots. Not only the different communities but the Muslim and the Sikh soldiers would also have fought with one another. At the time when bullets were being fired here, a question was asked in the Parliament. The question referred to communal troubles. It was asked whether the Government in view of the communal tension thought it advisable to slow down the process of Indianisation of the Army. The government did not give any reply to this question. But it does show that the Lahore situation was in mind and the Government expected that the communities would fight and afford them a chance to say that communal tension existed in India and that it was only with help of machineguns that the communities including soldiers were kept from falling at each others throat. It appears that all this trouble was started to afford an excuse for saying that Indianisation of the Army was not in the interests of India and that more of English officers and soldiers were indispensable.

Then, we know that on the 6th and 7th July the Government themselves promised that they would help in the matter if no demonstrations were made and in fact no demonstrations were made by Muslims. On the 8th a demonstration was made but the condition in the city remained quite peaceful. On the 8th a communiqué was issued by the Government. I need not recapitulate the contents of the communiqué. After this communiqué had been issued and the mosque had been demolished the Government called their Indian members of the cabinet from Simla and decided to call a meeting of the members of the Council so that a compromise could be effected between the two communities. (Interruptions). Some of the honourable members say that we ought to have given expression to our thoughts at the time when this trouble had first arisen and stopped the people from taking part in the agitation. No doubt we would have done that if we could at that time but who could have stopped this trouble by saying to them that nothing would come out of it, when the Government was telling the people that it was arranging for compromise? The people would have replied "the Government wishes that the mosque should be returned to the Muslims, The Sikhs are to be induced to return it, we are to get it, who are you to say, that nothing would come out of it"? The Government policy and action tended to give a life to the trouble and as such it was difficult nay—impossible, for us, and for the matter of that for anybody else, to stop it. The circumstances had taken such a turn that even Maulana Zafar Ali Khan in his speech of the 11th July had to say that the Anjuman-i-Tahafaz-i-Shahidganj had been dissolved and that in its place Anjuman Tahfazi-i-Aukaf-o-Masjid had been formed. This was because he had realised that the case of Shahidganj mosque had become hopelessly involved and that even he was unable to see his way out of the difficult situation that had arisen. In these very days it was brought to our notice that the Government had called a meeting of the members of the Punjab Legislative Council so that they may try to help the communities to come to some amicable understanding. If instead of calling all the members whether Sikhs or Muslims to one meeting the Government had called them separately and persuaded them to arrive at some compromise perhaps they would have succeeded. But at a time when the communal feelings were excited and the Sikhs and Muslims were at loggerheads it was not possible for members of the Council to prevail upon the communities to effect a compromise. It would have been wise for the Government, if they were sincere in their attempts, to have called a meeting of the members of the Council before they had allowed the Sikhs to proceed with the work of demolishing the mosque. If it was not possible to call a meeting of the members of the Council, they ought to have called at least the Honourable Ministers and the Honourable the Indian Member of the Executive Council in the beginning when the trouble first arose and consulted them with regard to it. Before taking any action the Government ought to have consulted the Indian Members of the cabinet. But they did not do so. When the mosque was yet standing the Honourable Sir Jogendra Singh could have gone to the Sikhs and requested them not to demolish the mosque and the Muslim Member and Minister could have gone to the Muslims and tried their best to bring their community round to a spirit of moderation. But once the mosque was demolished, the Honourable Minister for Agriculture could not go to the Sikhs and ask them to have it rebuilt. The Sikhs in their excitement could not be expected to hear that. Nor could the Muslim Members and Minister be of much use at that late stage of the matter. Here I want to refer to some remarks made by my honourable friend Sardar Sahib Sardar Ujjal Singh. He stated in his speech that the Government tried to please the Muslims by giving them the Shah Chiragh mosque or by making a declaration to that effect. This declaration which was referred to by my honourable friend is a very interesting matter and it also leads to the same inference already referred to by me. It shows what dangers the Government was anticipating but which were fortunately avoided.

[M. Mazhar Ali Azhar.]

It has been argued that in returning the Shah Chiragh Mosque to the Muslims the government showed an unnecessary favour to them and encouraged them in their unlawful activities. If the Government elected to do so, it was not because it was in any way favourably inclined towards the Muslims, but it cleverly took this step in view of certain apprehensions. I will now try to show what obliged the Government to adopt this measure. In this connection I should like to call the attention of the honourable members to the communiqués which were issued by the Government at intervals in the month of July last. In one of them it stated that "in appreciation of the great restraint exercised by the Muslim community generally in the Punjab, and especially in Lahore in the very trying circumstances of the past week, the Punjab Government has decided to hand the Shah Chiragh Mosque back to Muslim community through the Anjuman-i-Islamia, Lahore, with as little delay as possible." Prior to this, Government had issued another communiqué on the 9th which ran "The situation at Lahore up to 10 A.M. on the 9th is much more satisfactory than might reasonably have been expected. There has been no rioting, no looting, and no arson, and there has been no clash between bodies of rival communities." In a communiqué issued previously Government had stated that a few murderous assaults were committed but they were only isolated acts. A head constable who was on duty outside Akbari Gate was killed and another Sikh was also done to death. In spite of all this Government recognised in its communiqué of the 13th of July that the Muslims had exercised very great restraint and it thought it advisable to hand the Shah Chiragh Mosque back to them by way of compensation for their admirable restraint. Government tried to show that the return of this mosque was a reward to the Muslims, from which it appears that the Government expected a lot of bloodshed and communal rioting. The communiqué issued on the 9th of July indicates that the Government expected that there would be rioting, looting and arson, but the hopes of the Government were sadly blighted. If they had been satisfied by the volume and intensity of the agitation, the Government might have given the Shahidganj Mosque also. Now the minds of the people were extremely agitated in those days on account of the demolition of the mosque. When a person deeply injured and agitated by demolition of the mosque reads such a statement from the Government, he naturally thinks that if by doing some dangerous agitation the Government has given them one mosque, by doing more similar agitation it might give the other mosque also. From the communiqué of the 9th he would infer that Government expected a good deal of confusion and disorder in the city, but its hopes were not fulfilled.

By handing over this mosque the Government has not shown any favour to the Muslims. It feared that the Shahidganj agitation may not take a different course altogether. If the Sikhs and the Muslims would continue to fight, the position of Government would remain quite safe and secure. It would merely watch the show, and if need be it would play the part of an arbitrator. It would take shelter behind law and order and would do everything under the guise of upholding the dignity of the court. Thus it would escape coming into conflict with the Muslims in spite of showering its bullets on them. But the Government did not like that the Shahidganj agitation should end soon. It wanted that this matter should be prolonged and there should be a lot of stir and commotion in the province. However, it wanted to save its own skin and was extremely anxious that the agitation for the return of a mosque should not start against itself. The Government wanted to avoid that occasion sedulously. So, for precaution's sake, Government discreetly decided to hand back the mosque to the Muslims. In fact, some people were already alluding to the mosque which was in possession of the Government. And on the 12th of July, at a meeting held inside the Badshahi Mosque, Syed Ata Ullah Shah Bukhari had definitely declared that though the Muslims were crying only for the Shahidganj mosque, there was another mosque also which belonged to the Muslims and which was being used as a court room. Death sentences were passed there every-day on criminals. The Government wanted to forestall any move by the Ahrars to divert the agitation to the Shah Chiragh Mosque and wanted the trouble to be localised round the Shahidganj Mosque. Therefore, I would submit that these circumstances forced the Government to return the Shah Chiragh Mosque to the Muslims. It certainly did not show any favour to the Muslims in doing so.

Again, on the 13th of July a meeting was held at the residence of Mian Abdul Aziz, Bar-at-Law, who was once a member of this honourable House. At that meeting Maulana Zafar Ali Khan, Syed Habib, and some members of the Ahrar party were present, when the prospect of a civil disobedience campaign was not at all viewed with any favour. It was decided there that a representative meeting of capable Muslim leaders should be invited from different parts of the province and the future course of action should be chalked out and the situation arising out of the demolition of the mosque should be considered. The public meeting for the 14th had been announced earlier. The meeting was held outside Mochi Gate. But on the early morning of the 15th, Government externed some leaders from Lahore and confined them to certain places in the province. Now the situation became all the more serious and difficult. Those people who were arrested and externed from Lahore were the then revered leaders of the people. So long as they were among the people, no unpleasant or undesirable incident happened. They were not prosecuted. Simply on this plea that those gentlemen were trying to create mischief they were externed from Lahore. One was sent to Karamabad, another to Montgomery, and yet another to a different place. If after the 14th the Government had not externed some of the leaders, representatives of the Muslim community from all other parts of the province, would have met and devised some scheme to handle the situation in a satisfactory way. But after the arrest of the leaders, people remained without any guide. The Government possesses a very elaborate system of securing intelligence. They must have had information of everything that took place at the residence of Mian Abdul Aziz on the 13th of July. It was decided there that recourse should not be taken to civil disobedience. The Government, however, did not think it wise to suspend its activities for a week or so and allow the agitation to subside. So it arrested the leaders and once again excited the people. Once more the feelings of the people ran high. Besides, they were without any leader. For the 17th His Excellency had invited a meeting of the members of the Legislative Council to discuss the Shahidganj affair. The Muslim public of Lahore began to cherish a hope that the Government would now restore the mosque to the Muhammadans.

[M. Mazhar Ali Azhar.]

The arrests of the leaders had already created great commotion among the Muslims. A hartal was proclaimed on the 15th and the situation had further developed. The meetings were held at the Badshahi Mosque. One man who delivered a fiery speech on the 16th was arrested and imprisoned. At the meeting of the Councillors on the 17th it was decided that they should again meet on the 20th. In the meantime the members were asked to discuss the matter and if they arrived at any compromise they should put forward the terms of the agreement before Government. The adjournment of the Council meeting was before the public. They expected something favourable up to 20th. On the 19th a meeting was again held at the Badshahi Mosque where the question of civil disobedience was once more put forward. A young man made a fiery speech and said that he would go to the Shahidganj Mosque and he appealed to the audience that those who wanted to accompany him should take a solemn vow that they would stand by him through thick and thin and face even bullets, but would not return to their homes. Now, what did the Government do with them? They came out of the Shahi Mosque and proceeded towards the Delhi Gate. When they reached the Lange Mandi Water Works, a police force stopped them there. But the police did not arrest the processionists. I am at a loss to understand why the police allowed the processionists to proceed towards the Delhi Gate. If the police could not disperse them, could it not even arrest them? Had the Government not sufficient handcuffs? Were there no prisons? Was there no other place where Government could lock them up? Why did the Government allow the processionists and the police to enact a provocative drama throughout the night to which the people of the city and the surrounding places flocked throughout the night. The processionists had several lathi charges which were witnessed by standersby but their arrest and removal from the excited mob was not considered advisable. Had those people been arrested others might or might not have come forward to take their places. By failing to arrest the processionists the Government invited people from different parts of the city to come and watch the dramatic performance that was going on there. It thus once again made a very serious mistake and inflamed the people. In the morning, what do we see? This powerful Government which has miserably failed to arrest a mob of 400 people withdraws and allows the processionists to advance towards the Delhi Gate. When the forces of the Government accepted defeat, they beat a retreat and once again pitched themselves against the processionists outside the Delhi Gate. I ask how it was wise to allow the processionists to come to a spot which is so close to the Shahidganj Mosque. It would have been better to keep the processionists at a distance from a place which is so close to the Shahidganj Mosque. If the police force had taken a firm stand at the Lange Mandi Water Works, it would have been much better and the processionists could have been easily held up there. It is merely a lame excuse that the Government could not check the mob at the water works. After a night's stage show the powerful forces of a mighty Government withdrew before a small procession, and halted not in the Kashmiri Bazar, not in the Old Kotwali Chauk, not at the Chita Darwaza, but only at the Delhi Gate. Those brave people who had taken a vow that they would not return even if fire was opened on them, go and sit outside the Delhi Gate. On Saturday the first firing took place.

It was advanced as an excuse by Government that brickbats were thrown by the processionists at the police. Even if we admit for a moment that the brickbats were really thrown by the people, who knows that there were not any C. I. D. men in the mob? I am reminded here of Mr. Banerji from Meerut who was arrested at Lahore. A revolver was found on his person and he was sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment. From the prison he wrote a letter to the authorities saying that he was a C. I. D. man, sent by the Superintendent of the Meerut Police and the Government had to admit the truth of that statement. Similarly, it would not be surprising if there were some similar agents in the mob outside Delhi Gate who wanted to create mischief by throwing brickbats at the police. The people throughout the night had not thrown brickbats when at Lange Mandi and one cannot expect of them to be throwing brickbats when they reached Delhi Gate. But I would say that even if we suppose that there were persons who did throw brickbats at the police, the latter should have shown greater coolness and patience and should not have excited them by opening fire on them and killing them relentlessly. Even if it may be true that 20, 30 or 50 brickbats were found in possession of the crowd it was not a praiseworthy act on the part of the Government to resort to firing. The members of the Council were to meet in this House on the day of firing but later on it was decided that the proposed meeting should be held in the Government House. We did not attend that meeting. In the first place we were delayed on account of the unhappy aspect which the situation had assumed and secondly we did not receive any intimation that we were to attend at the Government House. However, the fact is that we could not attend that meeting. Then the members met in the Pipals in the evening and after a good deal of discussion it was decided that the minimum demands of the Mussalmans should be placed before the Sikhs on the following day and the Honourable Sir Jogendra Singh should go to Amritsar to place those demands before the Shiromani Gurdawara Parbhandhak Committee. The people were informed that on the following day they were to be compensated for the sacrifices they had made by facing bullets. This information resulted in the multiplication of the crowd. The hope was expressed that Muslim members of the Government should assure His Excellency that the Mussalmans would remain peaceful and His Excellency should issue instructions to the officers on the spot that firing may not be resorted to.

(At this stage Mr. President resumed the chair).

I cannot say what the Members of the Government told His Excellency but it is a fact that on the following day, that is, on 21st the military opened fire on a crowd which had not thrown at them even a small piece of stone. I should like the Government to say on the floor of this House, when the crowd had not thrown at their officers a single piece of stone, what justification they had to open fire on the people so ruthlessly? And then the Government cannot say that firing was resorted to all of a sudden because the situation had developed to an ugly aspect suddenly, because they ordered the troops to open fire after some deliberation. First the C. I. D. men who were mixing with the crowd in plain clothes were ordered to come out and when the officers saw that not a single secret service agent in plain clothes was mixing with the crowd they opened fire. Some previous speakers have referred to various aspects of this shooting. As for myself, I was not present at Yakki Gate when shooting took place there; therefore, I cannot take the responsibility for what has been said about that shooting. But as far as the shooting which took place outside the Akbari Gate is concerned, I have some interesting revelations to make. When the troops went towards Akbari Gate side people had retired beyond the Shah Muhammad Ghaus Mosque, with the exception of only a few individuals. Those also subsequently retired. The road was clear up to at least two furlongs. There are eye-witnesses who were watching these happenings from the windows of their houses. They tell us, and they are reliable gentlemen, that the people gave absolutely no provocation to the troops. And one military man went through the garden calmly and quietly and from the place where Inspector.

5 P.M.

C. I. D., was quartered shot at a person who was doing his work at a shop. This firing was simply wanton and had not the least justification. If the Government had instituted any independent enquiry they would have come to this and no other conclusion, that there was no justification whatever for opening fire on the peaceful people. But the Government is secure in its position; it knows that nobody can pull it down from the pedestal of its power, therefore it refuses to listen to reason. The Government simply smiles when the people express their deepest anguish. It is no use, I say, if the Government comes to clear its position in this House. We do not want that the Punjab Government should institute an enquiry. We want the Home Government to appoint an independent commission to go into this affair, sift all the relevant evidence about it and arrive at a decision so that the world might know who was responsible for starting this conflagration. I do not think that making appeals here to the Government or to the Sikhs will serve any useful purpose. Do we not know that on the 20th July it was decided that Sir Jogendra Singh should go to Amritsar to remonstrate with his co-religionists and on the morning of the 21st we read in the editorial of the Civil and Military Gazette which is a semi-official organ of the Government that in view of the attitude of the Musalmans no honourable community could think of arriving at a settlement with them? Having read this in the morning we foresaw what was to happen in the evening at 6 o'clock. We had concluded that it was no use to send Sir Jogendra Singh to Amritsar. However, when we learnt that Sir Jogendra Singh had been unsuccessful in his mission we clearly saw that there was no hope of a settlement. The Mussalmans then diverted their attention to the people who had gathered outside Delhi Gate. They remonstrated with the people and at last succeeded in bringing them to the Wazir Khan's Mosque. I may mention here that the attitude of the authorities with regard to the people who had gathered outside Delhi Gate was very strange and understandable. They were told at 6 o'clock that they would be fired upon if they did not disperse but nobody was arrested. However, the people were removed from the scene by the persuasions of some gentlemen and taken to the Wazir Khan Mosque. Counsel of moderation was offered, but people in good book of the Government again tried to start civil disobedience which would have plunged the whole country in disaster. When the Ahrars saw that the country was about to be plunged into the abyss of a civil disobedience movement which was bound to result in communal clash on an extensive and unprecedented scale involving the whole country from Peshawar to Cape Comorin, they issued the statement to which a reference has been made by Sardar

Sahib Sardar Ujjal Singh. The situation was this. The Mussalmans had lost all hopes of a settlement. Even His Excellency had not been able to help them. But people were again made to believe that the Government wanted them to start a campaign of civil disobedience. The Government so far has not attempted to repudiate the statement of a speaker who spoke in Amritsar on the 29th of August. He had said, "After the 21st a Government Minister told us that if the Mussalmans resorted to civil disobedience the Government would get them the mosque." The speaker even mentioned the name of the Government minister and his speech was reported in the press. There is no reason to believe that the Government did not receive the report of that meeting. But up to this time no contradiction of that statement has been made by the Government. Should we take it that the statement of the afore-mentioned speaker was based on facts? The circumstances tend to show that the Government officers let the danger assume a more serious form by their own actions. I am constrained to remark that the Government Members did not fully realize their responsibility at that time.

Now the Government has the question of releasing the internees and cancelling the securities demanded from certain newspapers before them. But this is not so important as the matters to which I have drawn their attention. The Government should convince the people and this House that they have been and are prepared to do their duty in regard to these matters. We all know that the question of releasing the internees and cancelling the securities demanded from papers is of a secondary nature. The Government will have to release the internees and cancel the securities of newspapers sooner or later. Therefore, we should invite their attention to more vital issues. They should weigh the situation well even now and do the needful as soon as possible. We still believe that if the Government officers had not allowed the things to drift to more disastrous consequences by interning Maulana Zafar Ali Khan and his associates on the 15th of July, they might have been able to avert the catastrophe. With these words, Sir, I oppose the demand under consideration.

Sardar Arjan Singh (Hoshiarpur and Kangra, Sikh, Rural): Of all the points that have been raised in this Shahidganj discussion, I think none was marked more by a spirit of communalism than the one that threw the suggestion that the officers in charge of the town were Sikhs and that the solution was that they should have by this time been removed. I think the glowing tribute paid by Mr. Muhammad Din Malak who had more occasions to come into contact with these officers than any one of the members of the House has certainly taken the sting out of this venomous attack. I think I should also, while making a few observations, make one or two remarks about the speeches made by our friend from Sialkot. Of the suggestions that he made one was, and that was for the Government, that it would have been certainly better for the Government to allow the Sikhs, and the Muslims to proceed in the direction of the Gurdwara on the morning of the 8th July. I doubt very much whether he intended it as a joke or whether he suggested this seriously. I think the Government would have certainly been charged with malfeasance and misfeasance and I think there would have been a feast of bloodshed if both the communities in the atmosphere that was created that morning had been allowed to proceed to the Gurdwara unhampered by the police and forces of the military. The debate, as has been remarked, has been initiated by my friend Chaudhri Afzal Haq who belongs to my district. When Sardar Ujjal Singh was making a few remarks regarding the points referred to by Chaudhri Afzal Haq exception was taken to his remarks because it was pointed out that Sardar Ujjal Singh was not present on that day. Reference has been made to the statement issued on the 23rd July in which the authors of the statement warned their own community that they were taking the wrong steps. That was the best advice that could be given to members of his community. But the suggestions that the honourable member made in his speech on Monday last were not quite consistent with the sentiments and the good advice that he gave to his community in that statement. It has been pointed out that certainly Government have taken a rather more severe action than was warranted by the facts and the exigencies of the situation. He was pleased to remark that perhaps the Government would not have stood in need of a single constable had the Government handled the situation in a proper way. As to what the proper way was, what the proper steps which the Government could have taken were we were not told very much. Every one of us wishes that this thing should have been managed in a way in which the tax payer would not have been put to extra expenditure. But unfortunately the facts of the situation were there and the Government were certainly charged with the duty of maintaining peace and order. He pointed out, and I think very rightly, that he appreciated certain steps that had been taken by Government, though to-day our friend, Maulvi Mazhar Ali has taken exception to the steps which Government have taken before the demolition of the building. The honourable member, Chaudhri Afzal Haq, pointed out that it was certainly in the fitness of things that the Government showed a solicitude to see the members of both the communities. This was appreciated by the honourable member and I think every one of us endorses that view of his that the Government were certainly inspired by the best of motives and that they were trying to avert the clash between the two communities when they came here on the 5th or the 6th of July. The members of both the communities were allowed to see His Excellency the Governor and I think other Members of Government were also present. The situation was explained to the members of the respective communities. The Muslim deputationists pointed out that they thought they had certain rights in the building but the Government pointed out to them that so far as the legal rights were concerned, Government had absolutely nothing to say. The rights of the Sikhs have been established by the judgment of the highest tribunal of the province. And so far as the legal rights, therefore, were concerned—(An honourable member: Right to build?) I mean rights in the building, rights to do anything with the building which ownership thereof connotes, rights to do anything with the article over which legal possession was held. So far as the legal rights were concerned, therefore, there was no question. But the Government were anxious that some settlement should be arrived at which might be accepted by both the parties. The Government on the same day saw certain Sikh members and the Sikhs had their say. They clearly indicated in the clearest terms what their position in the matter was. They said that it was very difficult for them to take any other position except that they had established their rights over the building and that they could not budge an inch from the position that had been taken up, and that if a concession was made perhaps it might lead to some further trouble. It might lead to some further demand for certain other concessions. Again, the Government explained to the Sikhs that that position was perhaps right but that Government did not want that there should be bloodshed, that the harmony and good relations between the two communities should be in no way disturbed. That was the position which the Government took on the 6th of July. The Government have made it quite clear in their communiqué that they wanted the Sikhs to give them some assurance that they would not touch the building. The Sikh members said that they would do all that they could to prevail upon the members of their community but that they were not willing to give an undertaking themselves on behalf of the community to the Government, and they further said that if the Government told the Muslims that the Sikhs had given some undertaking or the Government published some undertaking or some assurance as having been given by the Sikhs, the Sikhs would deny in the Press that they had given any such undertaking to the Government. That was the position on the 6th. And, therefore, to say that the Government were interested, or biased, that they were not concerned very much with the position of the Muslim community, that the Indian members of the Cabinet were not present on that particular day—that is news to me—to say all this I think would be contrary to facts. The decision of the Sikhs and the position of Government were made clear.

Some capital was made out of the winch. We have been hearing about it since the last two or three days, what this winch was, how it came there and so on. I think the Honourable Finance Member was pleased to remark that it had been forgotten by honourable members that building operations and demolition of buildings were already in progress there and that it was not with the set purpose of demolishing the alleged mosque that the winch was brought in on that particular day.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : On a point of personal explanation. I said that demolition of other buildings was going on at the same time within the same enclosure and even if anybody had noticed the winch, they would not necessarily have thought that it was meant to be used for the mosque.

Sardar Arjan Singh : Regarding the story of the winch it is said that mystery surrounds it. I do not know how the Government would be in any way responsible for the introduction of the winch or how it was introduced there.

I now proceed to the demand before us. The relevancy of the Shahidganj affair is confined to the question whether additional police is needed or not. The charge may be laid against the Government that they have not tried to conciliate the Muslims and failing which they should have tried to control the situation. In that connection I wish to make one or two observations. It was on the 9th July that the Government issued a communiqué in which they pointed out that they had come to the conclusion that the rights in the building certainly rested with the Sikhs but that they condemned the provocative nature of the work that the Sikhs had done. And they further pointed out that the "moral responsibility" for the consequences that would follow would be with the Sikhs. Whether consciously or unconsciously, Government in that communiqué committed themselves to a line of action which no Government should have done. As a matter of fact, the executive government is concerned with the maintenance of law and order and is concerned with the enforcement of rights, with the execution of decrees that have been passed by civil courts. When Government went to pin the moral responsibility with the one section which had the legal rights, they certainly went in the wrong direction. In fact when any Government undertakes the responsibility of apportioning legal rights and moral responsibilities, it undertakes, I think, an arduous duty because moral rights and responsibilities can never be defined and have never been defined. If the Government takes leave of legal rights it certainly endangers itself and takes a line which might be fraught with harm for itself in the long run. If the Government were to enforce a moral responsibility, nobody would be secure. Nobody would be satisfied with a certain decree passed in his favour if his rights cannot be ensured. He should be trembling with the fear that the deputy commissioner, the district judge or the sessions judge or the superintendent of police of the district might still come at any time and might say: "The legal right is with you but the moral rights are with another, and, therefore, you will not be allowed to do what you like with regard to the property although there has been an adjudication in respect of it in your favour." Furthermore, the Government said that the Sikhs would be responsible morally for the consequences. No more untenable situation would have been created by any Government. On the one hand, there is a mob of law breakers. They say that by mere force they would take possession of a certain building and the Government say that because that mob takes it into its head to take possession of the building by force, the moral responsibility lies with those who ask for the enforcement of their legal rights. I have mentioned this fact with a view to show that at least the Government did all that they could to appease the Muslim mob by pointing out that the moral responsibility lay with the Sikhs.

Regarding the other action which has been referred to by speaker after-speaker, namely the decision to hand over the Shah Chiragh mosque to the Muslims, I, as a Sikh, would not take the least objection to the Government making over that mosque to the Muslims because the Muslims have been asking for the restoration of that building because it was a mosque and the Government recognised in that communique that that was certainly a mosque. But I would certainly take exception to the reason which the Government give. They say, in appreciation of the restraint which has been exercised by the Muslim community during the last week in the Punjab generally and in Lahore in particular, they would make over that mosque to that community. Another communique had been issued by the Government on the 8th in which it was pointed out that at about twenty minutes past ten, a Sikh had been murdered in broad daylight on the King's highway, it was also pointed out in that very communique, I think, that a certain Muslim mob wanted to proceed to the Shahidganj gurdwara and that they could not be restrained until and unless the Government had had recourse to lathi charge. And the third incident was also mentioned in that very communique and that was the murder of Harnam Singh, head constable, while on duty. These three incidents were before the Government and the Government still considered that there was a restraint exercised by the Muslim community. If that was restraint one is at a loss to understand what lack of restraint would mean in the opinion of Government. Even here, I would say that the Government did all that as a conciliatory measure so that they could appease the Muslim mob. They failed miserably in doing that. There is yet another action, and that is the exemption of the sword from the Arms Act in the province. Even here, I do not find fault with the Government for what they have done. Let the sword be exempted from the operation of the Arms Act. But here again, the time chosen by the Government certainly was not judicious. It was on the other hand most inopportune. When there were mobs all round, when there were demonstrations all round, demonstrations of crowds running up to lakhs of people, in the bazars of this very capital of the province, was that the time for Government to take this decision? What has been the effect of that step? There have been demonstrations, there have been mobs, there have been processions with naked swords, hatchets, spades, everywhere. It is a position which the Government have had to handle and let us see how they handle the situation.

The fourth was that the Finance Member was pleased to make an announcement on the 24th of October that he was prepared to do certain things in connection with the Shahidganj prisoners. He was pleased to announce that he was prepared to release the prisoners who were sentenced in connection with the Shahidganj affair, provided the agitation took a constitutional line. The members of this House must have read in the papers that there has been a recent meeting in which there was a demand made for ten lakhs of volunteers, instead of one lakh previously decided upon. What these ten lakhs of volunteers are going to do and what their programme is going to be is not known to us, but perhaps Government knows. Government has done all that it could have done and it has laid itself open to the charge that it was following a weak-kneed policy and a policy of drift. If in spite of all that Government has done it has not been able to restore peace and calm atmosphere, the only course left open to the Government is to come up with this demand for additional police. With these words I support the demand under discussion.

Thakur Pancha n Chand (Kangra, non-Muhammadan, Rural): A good deal has been said by honourable members on both sides of the House about the Shahidganj affair, but I want to place before the House my dispassionate view of the situation. The Shahidganj affair is an eye opener to all the communities living in the province. For the last four or five months we are having a reign of terror in the Punjab under the garb of this agitation, and I think by this time Government must have realised the consequences of favouring one community at the expense of another community, and I hope Government will not commit such a mistake in future. It is the sacred duty of the benign Government to protect the legal rights and the property of its subjects at any cost. Government has to see also that rights established by the courts are given effect to and that no party is allowed to take the law in its own hands. If the Government fails in its duty, then there is no government worth the name. Several honourable members of this House have criticised the Government for not handling the situation tactfully. If by tact is meant the restoration of property, then surely the Government has failed. Government was most anxious to have the matter settled amicably, so much so that it came down from Simla, but the Muhammadans wanted to threaten the Government and they succeeded to some extent. It is most unfair to accuse the Government of any favour or partiality. The Government was too anxious to settle the matter but without infringing the legal rights of the other community. If the honourable members wanted that the Government should have slept over the matter when innocent people were attacked or when the military and the police were being injured or when the Government motor cars were being damaged, then I think they did not realise the situation. When I read the statement published in the Punjab Gazette regarding the Shahidganj agitation, I was simply surprised and the impression that was created in my mind was this that the Government was following a policy of weakness. In fact the Government should have suppressed the agitation in the very beginning with a strong hand. Even now the agitation in the province has not subsided. A few days back a man, simply because he belonged to another community, was stabbed in the broad day light in the capital of the province. Then various conferences have been held and threats have been given, and it is suggested that ten lakhs of volunteers are to be enlisted for the upkeep of this agitation, the economic boycott is going on and the poor shopkeepers are suffering from it. In the circumstances, when the property and the life of the people are in danger, it is the duty of Government to maintain law and order at any cost. I do not think that Government will be able to cope with the situation by the addition of 300 constables. If Government is determined to keep law and order, it will have to incur more expense and the representatives of our community are ready to help Government in this matter. With these words I support the motion.

Pir Akbar Ali (Ferozepore, Muhammadan, Rural) (Urdu): After hearing such lengthy speeches as have been delivered by some honourable members, I had no mind to speak on the subject under discussion. But the Government as well as some Sikh members have raised certain points which have not so far been answered and which ought to be answered by the Muslim members. From the attitude the Government have adopted in this matter one can conclude that they do not like to know the real facts. But here as we have taken an oath to perform our duties as members of the House most conscientiously. I think we are in duty bound to state the real facts before the House. We cannot say who demolished the mosque or how it was demolished, but one thing is clear that the Government had a hand in the matter. The firing at the peaceful mob was absolutely uncalled for and the Government has not been able to show its justification. We have seen that on certain previous occasions the Government had sent some fifty thousand persons to jail. The mob that collected outside the Delhi Gate did not even exceed twenty thousand. They were unarmed and peaceful. I do not see why they could not have been arrested. My honourable friend, Shaikh Muhammad Sadiq, has made the position of the Muslims quite clear. You talk of the legal position of the Sikhs, but you ignore the fact that even the decision of the highest tribunal of the province cannot retract a bit from the real significance of a mosque. A mosque remains a mosque for ever and to demolish, defile or damage it is clearly an offence under section 295, Indian Penal Code, in spite of the expert opinion obtaining on the point. Besides the mosque could be preserved under the Ancient Monuments Preservation Act but the Government did not care to do so. In my opinion, the Government have entirely failed in their duty. They could have consulted the two Muslim members of the cabinet or some well-known Ulemas on the point. I say that a mosque or as a matter of fact any place of worship cannot be demolished under any law whatsoever. The Muslims are enjoined by the Holy Quran that they should protect all places of worship, and places of worship include mosques as well as temples and gurdwaras. According to shariat if a mosque is demolished, its site cannot be put to any use other than that of a mosque. It is binding according to the shariat on the Muslims that they should protect their mosques. In the present case the Muslims regard the demolition of the Shahidganj mosque a dishonour to them as a community. They will continue to regard it as an insult to them as a class so long as the site of the mosque is not returned to them. In the Holy Quran it is enjoined upon the Muslims to fight and even to court death for the protection of places of worship. From the point of view of the Holy Quran the legal position of the Muslims with regard to the demolition of the Shahidganj mosque is what I have explained just now.

On the 17th July members of the Council were called. Amongst them were included the Hindus, Muslims and Sikhs. Although the Hindus had no connection with this affair still they were called, and if the Sikhs and Muslims could not arrive at a settlement, it was due to the presence of the Hindu members. On the 17th July a meeting of the members was called by Government; and a poster was prepared by the members in the said meeting for circulation. After which the meeting adjourned. The Muslims separated to consider their case and the Sikhs and the Hindu members met to consider their case. The Muslim members requested Chaudhri Chhotu Ram to place on their behalf before the Sikh members the Muslim demand. After that meeting, another meeting of the members was again called on the 20th July. On arriving here I came to know that the meeting would be held in the Government House. But before the members met in the Government House, the firing was resorted to. Anyhow the members met in the Government House and Shaikh Muhammad Sadiq made a speech in which he asked, whether if demands of the Muslims were found to be reasonable, the Government would accept them. The answer was that they would be accepted provided they happened to be reasonable. The Muslims placed before the Sikhs their proposal. The Sikhs on their side were lectured by honourable Raja Narendara Nath. I need not mention the details of that lecture. In short it was decided that members should meet again in the "Pipals." In that meeting I requested Raja Sahib, whose heart throbs at the slight pain to a lamb or chicken, declined to take pity on the Muslims who were after all human beings and refused to advise the Sikhs to effect some compromise with the Muslims. Another member at that time asked me not to press Raja Sahib for he had no sympathy with the Muslims. Then the Sikh members approached the Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee but without success. It was not a question of personal property. It was a question of self-respect of a community. The Muslims considered it as death of the whole community if the mosque was not restored to them. If we wanted that the mosque should be returned to us it was because we wanted to keep intact our honour as a class. We had no intention to injure the feelings of any other community by getting the mosque. The legal position of the mosque from the point of view of the Muslims is again what I have now explained.

Next comes the question of compensation to the survivors of those who were killed in the Shahidganj firing. When we demand compensation for the survivors of our martyrs we do not mean to demand the price of their blood. We want compensation for their survivors. It is for God to compensate the martyrs. Nobody can compensate them. The third thing demanded by us is that those leaders of the Muslims who have been externed or interned in this connection should be allowed to return or set free as the case may be. Our leaders have been interned without cause being shown for it. No case has been brought against them to find out what crime they had committed. The public is not acquainted with their guilt. Further, the publication of Muslim papers has been stopped. There are very few Muslim organs. Out of them half have been stopped. This means that the right of speech has been taken away from the Muslims. At present the Muslims cannot place their grievances before the public or the Government because on the one hand the publication of their papers has been stopped and on the other their leaders have been interned. We demand that our leaders should be set free and restrictions against the publication of our papers should be removed. I see no reason why Government should have any objection against these demands of the Muslims. I also think that the Sikhs and Hindus can have no objection against these demands. The Government's action with regard to Shahidganj affair has been very much appreciated by the Sikhs. Let me make it clear to the Sikhs and also to the Hindus that if ever the same thing happened with regard to a temple or a gurdwara the Muslims will not behave as their sister communities have behaved. They would, on the other hand, sympathise with them and help them in all possible ways. The religion of the Muslims makes it binding upon them to protect all places of worship, be they temples or gurdwaras or mosques. If the Hindus were to say that Muslims have been guilty of demolishing temples, let them understand that if any Muhammadan did such a thing he did it against the preachings of his religion. And in future if any Muslim will demolish any place of worship he will be guilty of disobeying the behests of his religion and as such will not remain a Muslim. You are going to get reforms which mean that there will be a majority rule. If in the Punjab the Muslims are in majority, then I assure you that they will not injure the feelings of their sister communities by demolishing temples and gurdwaras, and if they will do any such thing, they will no longer remain Muslims. Therefore, you should not worry about the future. If the Government had consulted the Honourable Ministers, I think the position would have been quite different. Government consulted them when it was too late. (Interruption). The Honourable Ministers are present and they have not admitted that they were consulted. How can they make such a statement knowing that if they admitted that they were consulted, then the next question to be asked would be, what did they propose? They cannot say that they had agreed to the proposal of demolishing the mosque. (An honourable member: They must have said that the mosque should be demolished.) I am a Muslim and I cannot entertain such suspicions about the honesty of our Ministers. If we for the sake of argument admit that the Ministers were not consulted because they were not here at that time, the question arises why Sir Fazl-i-Husain who was here in the Punjab at that time was not consulted. I am sure he would have given a very sound advice with regard to this matter. If Sir Fazl-i-Husain had been consulted and approached, he would surely have prevailed upon the communities to effect a compromise with the Muslims and the other communities would have respected his advice and agreed to it. We Muslims, Hindus and Sikhs have to live in this country and as such we should try to live peacefully like brothers. We should try to make our mutual relations cordial. If our relations remained strained, we will not make any progress in the future under the reforms. We have not only to compete with the other provinces like the United Provinces and the Bombay Presidency, but we have also in co-operation with those provinces to compete with the rest of the world so as to win the respect of other countries. We have to progress and it cannot be done until we become united and remove all causes of friction. If the Government is on the wrong we should have the moral courage to condemn it. The Sikhs are a very brave people and they have the courage to say what is true. I hope in the present case they will not hide the truth merely for the sake of winning the good will of the Government. A community which is brave is also benevolent and as such I am sure that the Sikhs will realize their mistake and make amends for it by allowing the Muslims to have their right of prayer in the mosque. I hope the Sikhs are large-hearted and they will give back the mosque to the Muslims even without demanding its price. I am sure a time will come when their conscience will prick them and they will realise their mistake and will try to make amends, by restoring the mosque to the Muslims. At present we are opposing this demand of Rs. 72,000 which is for the police for the reason that the police had failed to tackle the situation properly and did not even inform the Secretary that the mosque was being demolished and that it was because of their incompetency that the military had been called. Such a police is not wanted and if the present police is the favourite of the Government, then let the Government find out some other source to defray the charges of the police department. (Interruption) Pandit Ji (Mr. N. C. Pandit) is an able member of the Council. We expect that he would try to bring about some settlement between the Sikhs and Muslims and not indulge in such light-hearted remarks. We have stated the mistakes made by some other members of his community and they have left the chamber. But here he is interrupting and interfering at every step. We expected that his influence would be on the side of good and he would try to reconcile the Sikhs and Muslims. If we learn to show regard for others and if one community begins to hold in reverence the saints and holy men of another community there will be no trouble and mischief in the world. Tolerance is a great factor in social relationship. If we acquire the simple virtue of respecting the susceptibilities of other people and act on the principle of toleration, the worries and miseries which are peculiar to this wretched country, will come to an end. You want that you and your elders should be respected, but you do not want to show a similar regard for others.

6 P.M.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit : Is the honourable member in order in making personal remarks? I have said not a word on this subject and yet he is directing his remark to me.

Pir Akbar Ali : Sir, I am not directing my remark to any particular person. I am addressing some honourable members.

Mr. President : The honourable member is addressing a section of the House. He should address the Chair?

Pir Akbar Ali : Very well, Sir. Through you I would submit to the honourable members that they should show respect to the revered persons and saints of other communities and they should show due regard for their temples and holy places.

Mr. President : I would request the honourable member not to repeat the same thing over again.

Pir Akbar Ali : Some honourable members have referred to certain incidents in this connection which have no special bearing on this subject. The cut motion relates to a demand for additional police required in connection with Shahidganj agitation. It can be either supported or opposed. But it is not necessary in this case to mention incidents which are not at all related to the point at issue. Reference has been made to the murders which took place at Shahdara and outside Mochi Gate. It is really painful that some honourable members have repeated these things here. I do not think for a moment that the Sikhs and the Muslims have become so degenerate and base that they will praise and eulogise such dastardly attacks on innocent people and will approve of such heinous crimes. No sane and sensible man can like these things. No Muslim will ever help or encourage a murderer. If you will condemn such a murderer, I will denounce him with greater frankness and vigour. Acts of this kind are against religion, against morals, and against society. A certain man runs amuck. It does not matter whether he is a Sikh or a Muhammadan. He behaves like a mad man. He loses command of himself. His sense and wisdom bid him good bye. It is the way of a mad man to behave madly. A mad man has no religion. He is neither a Hindu, nor a Sikh nor a Muhammadan. If he were sensible, he would not behave in that way. For the acts of one person, the whole community should not be run down. It is not just or fair. Such stray incidents cannot spoil the fair name of a community. Only a mad man will approve of a mad act. A man who is in his senses will never extol such an act. The Muslims and the Sikhs who are sensible and wise will never side with persons of their community as are guilty of dastardly attacks and heinous crimes.

In supporting this demand for additional police some honourable members have been pleased to remark that in dispersing the mob outside the Delhi Gate only minimum force was used. And in order to meet the situation that had arisen out of the Shahidganj agitation, the government wants Rs. 72,670 for the appointment of additional police. I fail to understand how the government says that minimum force was applied in this case. When the government found that the police had failed to disperse the mob, it sent for the military from outside and yet it is asserted that only minimum force was employed in dispersing the mob. What is the result of the so-called minimum force? Fifteen men were killed outright; 80 men were severely wounded and were entered in the hospitals, and the number of other injured persons could not be ascertained and yet it is avowed that minimum force was employed for this purpose. If this is the result of minimum force, what would have been the result of maximum force? Perhaps in that case all the men gathered outside the Delhi Gate would have been shot dead and the Muslim population of Lahore would have been mercilessly wounded. This is stated to be the use of minimum force. But, alas, we are living in a slave country where everything is permissible. Had this incident occurred in England and had anybody died there in this way, the society of that place would never have forgotten this occurrence and it would have gone down in the history of that country. The English would have never forgotten this incident. They would not have allowed the culprits to escape with impunity. They would have made the life of the government of the time so miserable that the responsible officers would have thought it fit to resign their posts. But in this slave country, India, government can do whatever it pleases, persecute the people to its heart's content and say that it has used the least force in molesting and torturing them. This is the height of our slavery and helplessness. We cannot raise even a voice of protest against this oppression and high-handedness. The death of a coloured man means nothing. You may kill as many as you like; no one will question you. However, I am inclined to think that the government is merciful and good, but it has bungled, hopelessly bungled, in this case. Perhaps, it will also admit that it has made a serious mistake in this matter. The government has wisdom. It should try to understand that it is not a joke to lay down one's life. Those people who died on account of firing had parents and relations. If some people foolishly approve of this mistake of the government, it should not in any way feel flattered but should frankly admit that it has really made a serious blunder in this case.

It has been said again and again that we have now to see the end and result of this knotty problem. I say that the result will be prepared by us and the end will be created by us. It is not right to say that we have yet to see the result of this whole affair. We should face this problem boldly and should do our utmost to solve it in such a way that all differences should disappear and the settlement should be honourable to either party. The consequences will prove a blessing to us hereafter. These very unpleasant incidents which have taken place so far might unite the two communities which are now at daggers drawn, and they might once again live in mutual goodwill and amity. They should not allow a third party to make a fool of them and have the upper hand. I for one do not admit that the government tried to bring the two communities into a clash and embitter their mutual relations. I do not think that a strong government can stoop so low as to make the various communities under it fight against each other and cut each other's throat. As I have said already these happenings may be a blessing for the future only if the Government learns to profit by its past errors and does not allow a repetition of the mistakes which have led to such fatal consequences both for the communities concerned and the Government. The Government should abstain from interfering in any way with the religious affairs of any community. In accordance with the Persian saying بدین خود موسی بدین خود they should allow Muslims, Sikhs and

[Pir Akbar Ali.]

Hindus to move in their respective spheres in whatever way they like to move. They should make every effort to avert a clash between the communities on religious issues because such clashes, as we all have seen, result in most unpleasant happenings. I should like to tell those honourable members who have tried in their speeches to defend the Government that the Government is not so weak that it should stand in need of being defended by them. Some honourable members have tried to elucidate the legal aspect of this affair. They say that the legal position of the Sikhs is unimpeachable but morally they have erred. I do not propose to adjudicate upon the legal and moral position of the Sikhs. However, I am glad that some Sikh gentlemen did not hesitate to admit the above view of the Government that the attitude of the Sikhs was condemnable to a certain extent.

Sardar Sahib Sardar Ujjal Singh : I never said that.

Pir Akbar Ali : Who says that you said so ; you neither listen nor try to understand. I am not in the habit of accusing others and then answering counter-accusations.

Mr. President : Will the honourable member please speak to the motion ?

Pir Akbar Ali : I was referring to the mosque in question. I should like everyone here to remember that the mosque is held sacred by Mussalmans. If anybody interferes with their rights in this respect he will be giving rise to a quarrel and the responsibility of starting the friction will be on his shoulders. Nobody is prepared to submit to the dictation of other people in matters religious. You know that the Sikhs took out a big procession in Amritsar to urge their right to wear kirpans. Similarly, you cannot and should not as a matter of fact object to the Mussalmans bringing out processions in order to protest against the demolition of their mosque. The fact is that the Government has not so far proceeded to argue with the Mussalmans nor have they explained the constitutional aspect of the question to them. People know this much that the Government is generally moved to accept a demand if a number of people urge it vehemently enough. If the people erred they erred on account of the peculiar attitude of the Government. Why, then, be so harsh upon them ? It is past 6 o'clock now and I see that the honourable members are anxious to go. You also would like me to finish. Therefore, I will resume my seat after inviting the attention of the Government just to one point. An honourable member has characterised the restoration of Shah Chiragh mosque as a favour shown by the Government to the Mussalmans. He has said that the Government favours one community at the cost of another community. I will just explain to him that the Government has shown no special favour to the Mussalmans. You know that if a person steals my bullock and returns it after sometime after some pressure is put on him he will be doing me no favour. He should thank his stars if I do not demand compensation for the inconvenience which I had to experience on account of the theft of my bullock. Similarly, the Government had no business to convert a mosque into its sessions court. When better counsels prevailed if it restored the mosque to Mussalmans it only restored the thing which was long over due. Therefore, the question of favour does not arise. I hope the Government will calmly consider this question and will try to find a reasonable solution of this knotty problem. I am not one of those who think that the Government is not sympathetic; I believe that the Government is quite sympathetic. It has always helped us in times of need and in fact after a very short time we ourselves will constitute the Government. What is required at this time is this that the Government should not let things take an ugly turn through its negligence. For instance, Government have committed a mistake by bringing forward a demand in the present form. Such a demand is likely to offend some people. It has certainly done so. The Government could ask for money in some other form, why offend people by bringing forward demands of this type? Such demands only create unpleasantness which it is the duty of every sane person to avoid. We have wasted our two precious days over this demand. And if we benefit by our errors after hearing all the speeches delivered in these two days, I think these two days will prove to be as valuable as two years. I want that all sections of this honourable House should unanimously reject the demand now before the House so that it may be impressed upon the Government once for all that it should not repeat such mistakes in future. I never say anything which I do not believe to be reasonable and if any of the honourable members present here will convince me that any portion of my speech was based on misunderstanding I shall certainly withdraw my remarks.

- (b) forwarding note by the Deputy Commissioner, Ludhiana, on the above inspection note to the Commissioner, Jullundur division ;
- (c) letter No. 3399-D. C., dated the 18th July, 1935, from the Commissioner, Jullundur division, to the Deputy Commissioner, Ludhiana ;
- (d) resolution No. 792, dated the 26th August, 1935, passed by the Municipal Committee, Ludhiana, along with the President's letter No. 847-E.-D., dated the 24th August, 1935, to the Deputy Commissioner, Ludhiana ?

(ii) Will he please state—

- (a) what action the Commissioner, Jullundur division, took on resolution No. 792, dated the 26th August, 1935, and on what date the Deputy Commissioner, Ludhiana, informed the committee about the action taken on resolution No. 792, dated the 26th August, 1935 ;
- (b) why the letter mentioned in (ii) (a) was kept in the office of the Deputy Commissioner, Ludhiana, for such a long time ;
- (c) what action he contemplates to take after going through the papers mentioned in (i) ?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : (i) (a) to (d) Government do not consider it in the public interest to lay the papers on the table.

(ii) (a) and (b) The Commissioner issued certain instructions to the Deputy Commissioner with regard to the resolution passed by the committee, but these instructions were not passed on to the committee because the Deputy Commissioner wished to refer the matter back to the Commissioner. The Commissioner now proposes to dispose of the matter after personal discussion with the Deputy Commissioner at Ludhiana.

(c) None for the present.

REMISSION OF LAND REVENUE IN HOSHIARPUR DISTRICT.

*5009. Sardar Arjan Singh : Will the Honourable Revenue Member kindly state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that the kharif crops, 1935, have heavily suffered in the Hoshiarpur district on account of scarcity of rain ;
- (b) if so, whether the Government proposes to grant any remission in the land revenue dues of the said district ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) No.

(b) Does not arise.

SIKHS IN INDUSTRIES DEPARTMENT.

*5010. Sardar Arjan Singh : Will the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government please state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that there is inadequate representation of the Sikhs in the Industries Department ;
- (b) if answer to part (a) is in the affirmative, what steps the Government propose to take to give due share to the Sikhs in the services of this department ?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : (a) Sikhs hold approximately 9 per cent. of the appointments in the Industries Department. Whether this representation is or is not adequate, is a matter of opinion.

(b) The policy of Government was stated by the Honourable Finance Member in a debate in the Punjab Legislative Council on the 19th of July, 1927. This is still the policy of Government and Government will continue to carry out the requirements of the formula contained in the said statement of policy.

SIKHS IN EDUCATION DEPARTMENT.

*5011. Sardar Arjan Singh : Will the Honourable Minister for Education please state—

- (a) whether he is aware that the Sikh press has been ventilating the grievances of the Sikhs in regard to their inadequate representation in the Education Department ;
- (b) whether any resolutions have been submitted to the Government on the above subject ;
- (c) if so, what action the Government has taken or proposes to take in the matter ?

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon : (a) and (b) Yes.
(c) The policy of Government was stated by the Honourable Finance Member in a debate in the Legislative Council on the 19th of July, 1927. This is still the policy of Government and the Government continue to carry out the requirements of the formula contained in the said statement of policy.

PUNJAB CO-OPERATIVE UNION.

*5012. Sardar Arjan Singh : Will the Honourable Minister for Agriculture kindly state—

- (a) the functions of the Punjab Co-operative Union, Ltd., Lahore ;
- (b) the number of members of the Union communitywise ;
- (c) whether he is aware that there is a feeling of dissatisfaction amongst the non-Muslims with regard to the personnel of the Union inasmuch as the non-Muslims are practically unrepresented on it ;
- (d) whether under the present system of election there is any scope for a member of a non-Muslim community to get elected to the Union ;
- (e) if not, what steps the Government propose to take to secure adequate representation of the non-Muslims ;
- (f) whether Government propose to introduce the system of a single transferrable vote ?

The Honourable Sardar Sir Jogendra Singh : (a) The functions of the Punjab Co-operative Union are briefly :

- (1) Audit of all co-operative societies in the province.
- (2) Supervision of co-operative societies in the province.
- (3) Training of co-operators and co-operative staff.
- (4) General propaganda, and promotion of the interests of co-operators and their societies.

(b) The total membership of the Co-operative Union is 199. As the members are—

- (a) co-operative banks and societies which are not classified communally, and
  - (b) a limited number of officials of the Co-operative Department ex-officio ; the number cannot be given by communities.
- (c) Dissatisfaction has been expressed by non-Muslims, but it is incorrect to say that non-Muslims are practically unrepresented, there being 12 non-Muslim representatives (in addition to the Registrar, Co-operative Societies) as against 19 Muslims.
- (d) The figures given under (c) above show that it is evidently possible for a non-Muslim to secure election.
- (e) and (f) The Union is a self-governing co-operative body and Government has no direct power to introduce any changes. It has, however, drawn the attention of the Union to the demand from non-Muslims for a change in the system of election. The present question will similarly be brought to the Union's notice.

MUSLIM DOGAR ZAMINDARS OF ROHTAK.

*5013. Chaudhri Afzal Haq : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that Muslim Dogar zamindars of Rohtak district are not treated as statutory agriculturists ;

[Ch. Afzal Haq.]

(b) whether the Muslim Dogars of all other districts are classed as statutory agriculturists ;

(c) what Government intends to do in the matter ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : The honourable member is referred to the reply given to his previous question No. *3470<sup>1</sup> asked on the 28th June 1934. Government is not prepared to distinguish between Muslim Dogars and Dogars of other religions.

MEDICAL SCHOOL, AMRITSAR.

*5014. Chaudhri Afzal Haq : Will the Honourable Minister for Education be pleased to state—

(a) why the Muslim students of the Medical School, Amritsar, have resigned from the Students' Union of the School ;

(b) why the non-science students were refused admission to the Medical School, Amritsar, this year when there is no such rule in the prospectus of the School ?

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon : (a) Government are not aware that the Muslim students have resigned from the Students' Union. They are informed that the Muslim students are still members of that Union.

(b) It is provided in paragraph 6 of section II—" Admission " of the prospectus of the Medical School, Amritsar, for the year 1935-36, that for the purposes of admission to the School preference will be given to those who passed in Physics and Chemistry in the Matriculation or any higher examination. Students who possessed these qualifications were, therefore, given preference over those who were without them.

SUPPLY OF MEAT TO PATIENTS IN CIVIL HOSPITAL, AMRITSAR.

*5015. Chaudhri Afzal Haq : Will the Honourable Minister for Education be pleased to state—

(a) whether it has been brought to the notice of the Government that recently jhatka meat was supplied to the patients in the Civil Hospital, Amritsar, and the Muslim patients refused to take their meals ;

(b) what steps were taken by the hospital authorities to redress the grievance of the Muslims in this respect ?

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon : (a) and (b) Yes. The facts are as follows :—

Before June, 1935, the only meat issued in the hospital was that which was given under a special order of the visiting doctor for special cases, e. g., Diabetes. The meat under question was not cooked in the hospital kitchen. It was cooked somewhere by a woman friend of a patient and two Muslim patients lying next to him objected to its being served so close to them. Seven or eight other Muslim patients refused also to take their food. Meat of every description has thereafter been banned from hospital diet, since when, I am glad to say, there has been no trouble.

FEEs IN MEDICAL SCHOOL, AMRITSAR.

*5016. Chaudhri Afzal Haq : Will the Honourable Minister for Education be pleased to state—

- (a) whether the fees in the Medical School, Amritsar, have been increased ;
- (b) whether it is a fact that the students have protested against the increase on the ground of the present economical depression ;
- (c) what Government proposes to do in the matter ?

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon : (a) and (b) Yes.

(c) Government have already issued orders that the increased scale of fees should apply only to the students admitted to the Medical School, Amritsar, in the year 1935 and onwards and not to students who are already on the rolls of the school.

COMMUNAL REPRESENTATION IN PROVINCIAL VETERINARY SERVICE.

*5017. Sardar Jawahar Singh Dhillon : Will the Honourable Minister for Agriculture be pleased to state—

- (a) the number of Muslims, Hindus and Sikhs in the Provincial Veterinary Service separately ;
- (b) what steps he proposes to take with a view to adjust the proportions of various communities according to the policy stated by Governor in Council on the 19th July, 1927 ?

The Honourable Sardar Sir Jogendra Singh : (a)—

|         |    |    |    |    |    |
|---------|----|----|----|----|----|
| Muslims | .. | .. | .. | .. | 13 |
| Hindus  | .. | .. | .. | .. | 3  |
| Sikhs   | .. | .. | .. | .. | 4  |

(b) The need of giving Hindus and Sikhs adequate representation will be kept in view and such steps as may be necessary and feasible will be taken from time to time.

TRANSFERS IN AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

*5018. Sardar Jawahar Singh Dhillon : Will the Honourable Minister for Agriculture be pleased to state—

- (a) the names of officers in the Agricultural Department who have been in their present stations for more than five years (including any leave they took during the period) ;
- (b) how long they have been there ;
- (c) whether he intends to transfer such officers as in the case of other services, e.g., Provincial Civil Service ?

The Honourable Sardar Sir Jogendra Singh : (a) and (b) Officers of the Agricultural Department may be divided into three classes according to the nature of work on which they are employed. These classes are :—

- (a) teaching in the Punjab Agricultural College, Lyallpur ;
- (b) research work ;
- (c) district, demonstration and propaganda.

As regards the first two classes, the officers are not normally transferred. They expect indeed to spend the whole of their service where they are first posted. Statement No. I attached gives a list of the officers in these two classes who have been stationed at Lyallpur or elsewhere for more than five years. Statement No. II contains a list of officers employed on district work who have been stationed at their present headquarters for more than five years. It may be noted that in some cases service at these stations has not been absolutely continuous. Thus Khan Bahadur Maulvi Fateh-un-Din was posted originally as Deputy Director of Agriculture, Jullundur, on the 13th January, 1928, but during the six years seven months which have elapsed meantime, he was transferred to Lahore for a period of six months to officiate in another post returning to the same headquarters on the conclusion of that officiating service. Similarly Q. Samiullah officiated as Deputy Director of Agriculture, Rawalpindi, for a short period and returned to Sargodha, and M. Ijaz Ahmad spent one year and eight months at Gujranwala in the middle of the period that he is shown in the statement as having spent at Gurdaspur.

(c) It is not intended to transfer officers of the teaching and research sections, whilst officers engaged on district work will be transferred from time to time according to the needs of the public service.

(a) whether the promotion in question given as a temporary measure and without considering the claims of seniors has been reversed ;

(b) if not, whether he intends to take steps to reverse it now ?

The Honourable Sardar Sir Jogendra Singh : (a) No.

(b) No ; but in filling a permanent vacancy claims of seniors will be considered.

SIKHS IN BUILDINGS AND ROADS AND HYDRO-ELECTRIC BRANCHES.

*5020. Sardar Jawahar Singh Dhillon : Will the Honourable Minister for Agriculture be pleased to state—

(a) the percentage of Sikhs and their emoluments separately in the Buildings and Roads and Hydro-Electric Branches of the Public Works Department Secretariat ;

(b) what steps he proposes to take to increase the representation of Sikhs with a view to bring it in accord with the policy stated by the Governor in Council on the 19th July, 1927 ?

The Honourable Sardar Sir Jogendra Singh : (a) The percentage of Sikhs and their emoluments in the Buildings and Roads Secretariat is as follows :—

|                                    |    |    |    |      |

| Percentage of emoluments . . . . . | .. | .. | .. | 5.00 |

There is no separate Secretariat for the Electricity Branch.

(b) The policy of Government was stated by the Honourable Finance Member in a debate in the Legislative Council on 19th July, 1927. That is still the policy in accordance with which action is taken from time to time as the necessity for recruitment, or retrenchment, arises, but Government will in future recruitment keep the desirability of recruiting Sikhs in view.

CONSTRUCTION OF DRAINAGE AND PAVEMENTS IN MOHALLA MUHAMMADPURA, JULLUNDUR CITY.

*5021. Maulvi Mazhar Ali Azhar : Will the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government be pleased to state—

(a) whether it is a fact that a certain sum has been apportioned by the Municipal Committee, Jullundur City, for the construction of drainage and pavements in Mohalla Muhammadpura, Jullundur City ;

(b) whether it is a fact that the municipal committee applied to the Commissioner of the division and the Superintending Engineer of the Public Health Circle, Lahore, a year ago for the approval and sanction of the scheme ;

(c) if replies to (a) and (b) be in the affirmative, why the case is being delayed so long and whether anything has been done in the matter ?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : (a) No. Towards the end of the year 1933 the Committee prepared plans and estimates amounting to Rs. 69,660 for the extension of subsidiary drainage scheme in which Mohalla Muhammadpura was also included.

(b) and (c) More than a year ago, the Committee submitted the scheme for the administrative approval and technical sanction of the authorities.

concerned. About the same time the Committee applied for a grant-in-aid equal to 50 per cent. of the total cost of the scheme, but the application was rejected by the Sanitary Board for want of funds, first in December, 1934, and again in September, 1935. The Board, however, has promised to consider the matter later when funds become available.

UNAUTHORISED PROJECTION IN MOHALLA MALI GANJ, LUDHIANA.

*5022. Khan Sahib Chaudhri Riasat Ali : Will the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government very kindly state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that one Lala Nand Lal built a projection on his house in Mohalla Mali Ganj, Ludhiana, which was ordered by the Executive Officer of the Municipal Committee, Ludhiana, to be demolished, as it was an unauthorised projection ;
- (b) whether it is a fact that the Committee served Lala Nand Lal with notices under sections 172, 195 and 220 of the Punjab Municipal Act and that Lala Nand Lal filed a civil suit in a law court for injunction restraining the Committee from demolishing the said projection ;
- (c) whether it is a fact that the said Lala Nand Lal gave a certain statement before the Executive Officer and the President relating to the ex-Secretary, Khalifa Kamal-ud-Din ;
- (d) whether it is a fact that the President wrote a letter to the Deputy Commissioner in this connection ;
- (e) if replies to (c) and (d) are in the affirmative, whether he will lay on the table of the Council the documents mentioned therein ;
- (f) what action the Government proposes to take in this matter ?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : (a), (b), (c) and (d) Yes.

(e) The necessary documents are laid on the table.

(f) None ; as the committee has already removed Khalifa Kamal-ud-Din from its service.

Copy of a demi-official letter No. 872-E.D., dated the 2nd of September, 1935, from the President, Municipal Committee, Ludhiana, to the Deputy Commissioner, Ludhiana.

Lala Nand Lal, Proprietor, Kailash Soda Water Factory and Hotel, Ludhiana, applied to me on 23rd August, 1935, for payment to him out of the provident fund moneys due to ex-Secretary, Khalifa Kamal-ud-Din, of Rs. 100 due from him to Lala Nand Lal, on account of hundi and receipt executed by the ex-Secretary in October, 1933. He produced the receipt duly stamped and signed by the ex-Secretary, along with his application. I knew that there had been litigation between Lala Nand Lal and the Committee since 1933 ; and the fact that during this period there had been some money transaction between him and the ex-Secretary roused my suspicions and induced me to make further inquiry into the matter. I sent for Lala Nand Lal, and recorded his statement, of which the translation in English is submitted herewith.

This statement, by itself, throws ample light on the ex-Secretary's integrity, and his loyalty to the Committee. The inquiry may, I am afraid, lead to disclosures still more serious. The municipal files relating to Lala Nand Lal's application of 1931 for permission to build his house and barhao, as well as the municipal despatch register for 1931 are missing from the municipal record room. The proceedings book of the buildings sub-committee exists, and furnishes evidence that these applications were made and disposed of in 1931.

Mr. Dadashi, our Legal Advisor, who is defending the Committee in the civil suit, points out certain circumstances, supported by the municipal file, showing that the disappearance of the files and register for 1931 could be, not by accident, but by design.

I am making inquiries, and I am afraid some other employees may also be involved.

[Hon. Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang.]

Statement of Lala Nand Lal, son of Lala Kirpa Ram, Proprietor, Kailash Soda Water Factory and Hotel, Ludhiana.

(Translated from Urdu).

The application, dated 23rd August, 1935, Ext. P/1, was given by me. The receipt in English, Ext. P/2, which is attached to the application, Ext. P/1, was written by Khalifa Kamal-ud-Din, formerly Secretary to the committee. This receipt was written in my presence on 20th October, 1933, in the Secretary's office. He signed the receipt at two places in my presence. This receipt was in respect of a hundi, dated the 20th October, 1933, for Rs. 100. I had paid Rs. 100 on account of this hundi to Khalifa Sahib in his office. I have not received back this amount as yet. Probably in May, 1933, I filed a civil suit against the Committee in the court of Mr. Joshua, Additional Sub-Judge. The Committee gave me notices under sections 195, 172 and 220 requiring me to demolish the barhao of my house in Maligunj. My suit was for grant of permanent injunction against these notices. Ext. P/3 is the copy of my plaint, which was sent to the Committee through the Court, and bears my signature. This suit was dismissed on 22nd February, 1934, for my non-appearance in court. The marriage of my niece was being celebrated in those days, and I was busy. That day, i.e., 22nd February, 1934, Khalifa Kamal-ud-Din also came to my house to attend the ceremony in the evening. He told me that my suit had been dismissed for default and that I should apply for re-trial of the suit. I said that I was busy those days, and that I had one month's limitation period, and that I would apply as soon as I was free. He said to me in reply that Chatter Singh had reported that day that the barhao should be demolished and nobody should be informed about it; that the Executive Officer ordered him and Overseer to demolish the barhao that very day; that he (Khalifa Kamal-ud-Din) had made such a report that I would obtain time to apply for re-hearing of the suit but that the Executive Officer had ordered the Overseer to pull down the barhao forthwith. On getting this information, I made the application the very next day, i.e., on 23rd February, 1934, and my suit was restored.

I gave the English application, dated 17th July, 1933, Ext. P/4, to the Committee. In 1931 I applied to the Committee to erect my house and barhao. The permission to build the house was granted, but the permission to build the barhao was refused. I have not with me at this moment the Committee's orders on my application. I will make a search, and, if found, I would produce them. In the beginning of this month, Khalifa Kamal-ud-Din came to my house to take measurements of my barhao and the street. On the day before, he came to my shop and told me that if I returned to him his receipt for the money and paid him Rs. 125 more, he would go to the spot the next day and make a report in my favour. I told him that if he had my work done, I would return him the receipt for Rs. 100, but could not pay more, because I had already spent a lot on the case, and could not afford more.

- (i) (a) whether it is a fact that on the inundation canals (for instance, the Eastern Canal, Ferozepore district), sugarcane crop is sown before the canals begin to flow by the help of well water and is harvested long after water has ceased to flow in the inundation canals and thus this crop chiefly depends upon well water; (b) if so, whether he proposes to reduce water rates on sugarcane crop on the inundation canals;

(b) if so, whether he proposes to take any action in the matter ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (i) (a) and (b) The rate for sugarcane on the non-perennial channels is already lower, namely Rs. 9 per acre against Rs. 11 on the perennial channels on account of the help of well water required on the former to mature the crop.

(ii) (a) Yes.

(b) (i) The water rates for all the rabi crops on the non-perennial channels are already lower than those levied on the perennial channels.

SUBJECT :—Revision of Wards of the Ludhiana Municipality.

YOUR letter No. 946/E.D., dated the 17th of September, 1935.

I invite your attention to paragraph 1 of this office memo. No. 5917/L.F.C., dated the 29th of July 1935, and say that the lists prepared by the Tahsildar were not voters lists in the strict sense of the word. They were just rough lists prepared for estimating the number of voters in each ward for adjusting the disparity of the number of voters in various wards. These lists cannot, therefore, be supplied.

The voting strength of each of the proposed wards, as estimated by the Tahsildar and communicated to the higher authorities is, however, given below along with the figures of voting strength in the existing wards according to the voters lists prepared in 1932 and also the number of voters as estimated by the Tahsildar in the existing wards.

Copy of resolution No. 1047, dated the 24th of September, 1935, passed at an Adjourned Ordinary Meeting of the Ludhiana Municipal Committee.

1047. Letter no. 6624, dated 19th August, 1935, from the Deputy Commissioner, Ludhiana, in reply to letter No. 809, dated 8th August, 1935, regarding voters' lists mohalla-wise for Hindu and Muslim wards saying that he regrets that the information cannot be supplied so long as the proposal is not advertised for objections by the local Government.

Proposal of Haji Khwaja Muhammad Azam seconded by L. Tilak Ram, that the Deputy Commissioner be requested to send the copy of the plan and the list of voters ward-wise to the municipal office for the members and the public to see and submit their objections till 25th October, 1935, as without them the Committee and the public cannot submit any objections. The papers be sent early.

Agreed to unanimously.

Copy of resolution No. 1089, passed at an Urgent Ordinary Meeting of the Ludhiana Municipal Committee, held on 12th October 1935, in the Town Hall.

1089. Proposal of Haji Khwaja Muhammad Azam seconded by Mian Muhammad Abdullah and Lala Tilak Ram that new wards have been notified in Punjab Government notification no. 39009, dated 11th September 1935, a copy of which has been received to-day from the office of the Deputy Commissioner, Ludhiana. As per this notification objections have to be filed till 25th of October 1935. The Deputy Commissioner, Ludhiana, has not so far supplied information on the basis of which objections have to be filed in spite of regular correspondence with him on the subject. The matter is of great importance and should be taken up in to-day's meeting before the commencement of the agenda.

Carried by majority that this item be taken up to-day before the commencement of the Agenda.

Subsequently the following proposal was put up before the house :—

Proposal of Lala Tilak Ram seconded by Pandit Muni Lal Kalia and Haji Khwaja Muhammad Azam that as per Punjab Government notification no. 30009, dated 11th September, 1935, the date for the submission of objections is 25th October 1935. The Deputy Commissioner was requested to send voters' lists and the plans but the Deputy Commissioner wrote back that the list could not be submitted before the proposed wards were advertised for public objections which meant that the information will be sent after notification of the proposed wards. On receipt of the notification the Committee by resolution no. 1047, dated 24th September, 1935, requested the Deputy Commissioner to send the voters' lists mohalla-wise and the plan in connection therewith. But the Deputy Commissioner did not supply the rough lists which were prepared at the expense of the Committee under orders of the Deputy Commissioner, Ludhiana. The Committee, therefore, authorises the President to bring this matter to the notice of the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government by means of a telegram so that the Committee may be supplied with the required rough list of voters mohalla-wise prepared at the expense of the Committee under orders of the Deputy Commissioner. A copy of all correspondence on the subject be sent along with this resolution. As this will take time, the time limit for objections may kindly be extended, to enable the Committee to record its opinion.

Resolved by a majority of votes 10 for and 2 against that the proposal is agreed to.
Dissented to by Mr. Sarb Krishan and Mian Raushan Din.

TENTS TO ZILLADAR.

*5028. Mian Nurullah : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that naib-tahsildars get tents at Government cost and are allowed conveyance allowance in addition to the fixed travelling allowance, while zilladars are paid no conveyance allowance in addition to the fixed travelling allowance and do not get tents at Government cost ;
- (b) if the answer to above be in the affirmative, the reasons for not allowing a Government tent and any conveyance allowance to a zilladar in addition to the fixed travelling allowance which covers his daily travelling allowance and the cost of the maintenance of two horses ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) No : naib-tahsildars are provided with tents, but not with conveyance allowance in addition to fixed travelling allowance.

(b) It is considered that the provision of tents to zilladars is unnecessary because other accommodation is available.

ALLOWANCE TO ZILLADARS.

*5029. Mian Nurullah : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that every zilladar has to maintain a riding horse and a pack horse ;
- (b) whether a zilladar gets only Rs. 97-8-0 per mensem as his fixed travelling allowance which includes the daily allowance and the cost of maintenance of two horses ;
- (c) whether a naib-tahsildar is required to maintain only one horse ;
- (d) whether a naib-tahsildar is paid Rs. 90 per mensem as his fixed travelling allowance ;

[Mian Nurullah.]

- (e) whether a naib-tahsildar is paid a separate conveyance allowance in addition to his fixed travelling allowance ;
- (f) the reasons for not treating a zilladar on the same footing as regards fixed travelling allowance and conveyance allowance as a tahsildar ;
- (g) what action Government proposes to take in the matter ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a), (b), (c) and (d) Yes.

- (e) No.
- (f) Does not arise : presumably the honourable member refers to naib-tahsildars, not tahsildars.
- (g) Does not arise.

FODDER AND VEGETABLES, ETC., GROWN IN GOVERNMENT REST HOUSES.

*5030. Mian Nurullah : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

- (a) whether fodder and vegetable, etc., grown by Government servants in Government Rest Houses of the Irrigation Branch are charged land revenue and water-rate, etc. ;
- (b) whether Government have laid any instructions regarding the above, if so, whether Government is prepared to lay them on the table ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) Water rates are charged, but no land revenue is leviable.

(b) Does not arise so far as water rates are concerned. For land revenue the honourable member is referred to paragraphs 80 and 81 of the Financial Commissioner's Standing Order No. 28.

GROWING OF VEGETABLES, ETC., IN GOVERNMENT RESIDENCES.

*5031. Mian Nurullah : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that Irrigation officers are allowed to attach three acres of area with their residence for growing vegetables and fodder, etc., for their private use ;
- (b) whether canal overseers and zilladars are allowed any land with their residences provided by the Government ; if not, why not ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) Officers are required to maintain properly an area up to 3 acres of the land attached to their residential quarters.

(b) The honourable member is referred to the replies given to his question No. *4788.<sup>1</sup>

PUNKHA COOLIES TO ZILLADARS AND OVERSEERS.

*5032. Mian Nurullah : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

- (a) whether zilladars and overseers are not allowed any punkha coolies ;
- (b) whether clerks and munshis of the Irrigation Branch are allowed punkha coolies ;
- (c) whether naib-tahsildars are also allowed punkha coolies ;
- (d) the reasons for not allowing punkha coolies to zilladars and overseers ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : The honourable member is referred to the answers given to question No. *4787.<sup>1</sup>

SUPPLY OF WATER FROM ZAMINDARI OUTLETS.

*5033. Mian Nurullah : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

- (a) whether Government allows the use of water to brick kilns, and factories and for the purpose of watering road-side trees, etc., from the zamindari outlets ;
- (b) whether such area is not accounted for in fixing the size of the outlets ;
- (c) if so, why the Irrigation Department compels the zamindars to allow the use of water for the purpose of watering road-side trees, etc., without increasing the size of the outlet in view of the additional area ;
- (d) whether the size of the outlet is fixed according to the allotted area ;
- (e) whether zamindars suffer loss when such water is allowed while Government gets the payment for such miscellaneous use ;
- (f) why such water is allowed without paying any regard to the additional area and increasing the size of the outlet and what action Government contemplates taking in the matter ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) Yes, so long as the amount of water used is inappreciable and can be spread without detriment to crop irrigation.

(b) If the demand for these miscellaneous purposes were appreciable or interfered with crop irrigation supplies a separate supply for this purpose is given either by the grant of a separate outlet or an increase in an existing outlet.

(c) Does not arise.

(d) The size of an outlet during only crop irrigation is fixed on the allotted area.

(e) Government has no reason to believe that the present practice causes loss to zamindars or is unduly favourable to Government.

[Hon. Nawab Muzaffar Khan.]

(f) The general policy of Government is to allow water used from a zamindari watercourse for miscellaneous purposes (filling village tanks, kacha brick making, and pisa work) by zamindars themselves free of charge.

Supplies of water for watering road-side trees, factory tanks, or other commercial undertakings such as brick burning on a large scale are charged for, and the water for the purpose if an appreciable amount is involved is supplied from a source other than the zamindar's watercourse.

PRELIMINARY WATERING.

*5034. Mian Nurullah : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that under rule 22 of the Canal and Drainage Act charges are to be levied for preliminary watering when no crop is sown ;
- (b) whether in practice no charges are levied on such fields during the time they are watered while charges are levied during the period of the next crop if the field has remained unsown for the previous crop ; if so, why the rule has not been so amended ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) Yes.

(b) Yes. The present practice is in accordance with rule 22 in which there is nothing to show that the reference is to the same crop only.

DISTRIBUTION OF PARCHAS.

*5035. Mian Nurullah : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

- (e) whether it is a fact that in some cases a patwari cannot visit villages in his charge before the lapse of a month in each case;

Subject :—RULES FOR WORKING THE GREEN MANURING CONCESSION.

With reference to Irrigation Branch notifications no. 906-R.L., dated 2nd May, 1929, no. 469-S.-Rev., dated 28th May, 1932, and no. 473-S.-Rev., dated 28th May 1932, I am directed by the Governor-in-Council to issue the following rule for working the green manuring concession :—

As soon as green manure is ploughed in a field, the patwari will make a suitable note in his khasra and intimate the fact to the zilladar, who will then within 14 days of the date of receiving such intimation, arrange to inspect the field and verify the patwari's note in the khasra. When inspecting the field the zilladar should scrape away the soil in several places to satisfy himself that the whole crop and not only the roots have been ploughed in. No remission will be given if only the roots are ploughed in after the crop has been cut.

2. I am to add that Deputy Collectors, Sub-Divisional Officers and Executive Engineers should make a point of checking some proportion of green manure remission during partial and in khasra aatal.

[Hon. Nawab Muzaffar Khan.]

Subject :—REMISSIONS ON CROPS.

I HAVE the honour to state that a Council question was put in the last session of the Punjab Legislative Council with a view to draw attention to the fact that in some instances when toria follows cotton and wheat follows toria, both crops are assessed to water rates, the implication being that it is not possible to mature both crops, and, therefore that the earlier crop should be remitted. The question was examined in consultation with a few Superintending Engineers and the following orders are now issued for guidance :—

- (1) The case of two crops sown in the same harvest is provided for in rule 25 of the Rules issued under the Canal Act and Occupiers' rate will be assessed for the crop that comes to maturity. For purposes of this rule the year should be considered as divided into four seasons, viz., kharif, zaid kharif, rabi and zaid rabi.
- (2) As regards the sowing of a crop in a field in which a crop belonging to another season has failed, the zilladar should act strictly in accordance with the kharaba rules, and should not recommend or should refuse remission, according as the area is under the operation of the Ordinary or Special kharaba Rules, if the crop is cut or grazed before inspection. The Executive Engineer can, however, use his discretion in the latter case on the cultivator filing an appeal against the zilladar's decision and allow the remission provided the applicant can prove to his satisfaction that no benefit was obtained from the crop before it was cut.
2. This office letter No. 3557-58-Rev., dated the 22nd February 1932, is hereby cancelled.
3. This disposes of your letter No. _____, dated _____.

[Mian Nurullah.]

- (b) whether it is a fact that such cases are sent for preliminary investigation to the zilladars; if so, the authority for this practice;
- (c) whether the rules of the Canal Act also lay down definite procedure regarding investigation of such cases; if not, what Government proposes to do in the matter?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) Yes.

(b) Yes. As regards the authority for this practice attention of the honourable member is invited to paragraph 18·9 of Revenue Manual and the reply to part (e) in his question No. *4780<sup>1</sup> of 1935.

- (a) whether he is aware that under section 32 of the Canal Act the Divisional Canal Officer is the only person who can stop supply of water to any water-course;
- (b) whether in practice it is not the Divisional Officer but the Sub-Divisional Canal Officer who regulates the proper flow of water in distributaries and minors, &c.;
- (c) whether under section 32 of the Canal Act a Sub-Divisional Canal Officer has not the authority to stop supply to any minor or distributary without the sanction of the Divisional Canal Officer even for regulation purposes;
- (d) what Government proposes to do to enforce this regulation?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) Yes.

(b) and (c). Section 32 of the Canal Act relates to stoppage of supply to a watercourse. The question of regulation of supply in distributaries and minors is not dealt with in this section.

(d) Does not arise.

*5046. Mian Nurullah : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

- (c) whether later on, on being pointed out drainage arrangements were made by the authorities by constructing sink wells, &c. ;
- (d) how many sink wells were constructed and at what cost this drainage scheme was constructed ;
- (e) whether it is a fact that the sink wells and the whole original scheme failed to work and new nalis have now to be dug ;
- (f) the cause of the failure of this scheme and who is responsible for it ;
- (g) whether the Government is aware that the whole of the foul drainage water is now stored on the open grassy plots on the pucca road-side and that it adversely affects the health of the residents of these quarters as well as the patients of the civil hospital which is situated quite close to this site ;

[Mian Nurullah.]

- (h) what action Government is prepared to take to stop this nuisance and why the question of a drainage scheme was not considered at the time of the construction of these quarters ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) Ceiling fans only are provided.

(b) No.

(c) They are not supplied.

(d) Does not arise, but I may add for the information of the honourable member that there is no question of any invidious distinction. The deputy collectors and zilladars have not asked for the fans as according to the Rules the supply of fans results in the enhancement of rent of the residential buildings.

APPOINTMENTS OF LAMBARDARS.

HINDUS IN THE OFFICE OF DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION.

*5051. Lala Bhagat Ram : Will the Honourable Minister for Education please state—

- (a) the number of posts held by the Hindus and Muslims in the following grades of the Director of Public Instruction's office :—
  - (i) Rs. 250—10—350.
  - (ii) Rs. 100—8—180/10—250 ;
  - (iii) Rs. 75—5—105/150 ;
- (b) whether it is a fact that the representation of Hindus in these grades especially (i) and (ii) is not according to their proportionate representation ;
- (c) whether it is a fact that there are at present two vacancies in the grade of Rs. 75—5—150 and one in the grade of stenographers ;
- (d) if so, whether Government intends to fill these posts by selecting suitable Hindus ?

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon : (a) (i) Hindus.. Nil.

| (ii) Hindu ..   | .. | 1 |
| Muslims         | .. | 8 |
| (iii) Hindus .. | .. | 6 |
| Muslims ..      | .. | 7 |

(b) The meaning of proportionate representation is not understood. If the honourable member means according to population, then the honourable member's community is likely to lose considerably. It is not possible to ensure 56 per cent. Muslim representation and 26·8 per cent. Hindus representation in each separate office in the Education Department. But the honourable member can rest assured that the Department will do its best to remove communal disproportions in the Department as a whole.

(c) and (d) Policy of Government in this respect has been explained by the Honourable Finance Member time and again in this House. It was explained by Honourable Member for Finance on July 19th, 1927 on the floor of this House.

Sardar Sahib Sardar Ujjal Singh : Will the Honourable Minister be pleased to supply the information with regard to the Sikhs ?

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon : Yes, with great pleasure, if the honourable member tables a question.

UNSTARRED QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

HEALTH CENTRES.

1297. Maulvi Mazhar Ali Azhar : Will the Honourable Minister for Education be pleased to state—

- (a) the total number of health centres in the Punjab ;
- (b) the number of health centres opened this year ;
- (c) the approximate area attached to each centre ;
- (d) the districts which have health centres and those which have none so far ;
- (e) the ways in which the work of the health visitors has proved useful ;
- (f) if the answer to (e) above be in the affirmative, whether Government contemplate to extend it to all the districts in the province ;
- (g) the starting salary of a health visitor and its grade and whether it has been reduced recently ;
- (h) whether the Government has reasons to believe that the salary cannot attract any better class people to join the Punjab Health School for health visitors' course on account of its inadequacy ;

[M. Mazhar Ali Azhar.]

- (i) whether Government contemplate revising the grade of health visitors' pay ;
- (j) whether health visitors are expected to train a certain number of daïs by giving lectures to them as well as demonstrating practical work to them ;
- (k) the expense of the upkeep of a health centre and the proportion of it borne by the Government ;
- (l) whether there is sufficient arrangement of protection for the lady health visitors when sent to rural maternity and children welfare work ;
- (m) whether the Principal of Punjab Health School has also the duty of inspecting the various centres of health and whether Government has sanctioned a special allowance for the duties of inspection entrusted to her ; if not, the reasons for the same ;
- (n) whether the services under the Punjab Health School are provincialized while the services of the workers attached to maternity and child welfare or health centres are not provincialized ; if so, the reasons for this difference ;
- (o) whether the services of sanitary inspectors are provincialized while those of the health visitors and inspectors of health visiting centres are not provincialized ; if so, the reasons for this difference ;
- (p) if the answer to part (o) be in the negative, whether Government proposes to consider the possibility and advisability of provincializing the services of health visitors and those of inspectors of health centres ?

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon : (a) 75.

(b) 11.

(c) The area attached to each centre is determined by the average number of births in the population resident therein. Each centre serves an area in which 300 births occur annually.

(d) The districts which have health centres are the following :—

|                |                   |
|----------------|-------------------|
| 1. Rohtak.     | 13. Sialkot.      |
| 2. Gurgaon.    | 14. Gujranwala.   |
| 3. Karnal.     | 15. Sheikhupura.  |
| 4. Ambala.     | 16. Gujrat.       |
| 5. Simla.      | 17. Jhelum.       |
| 6. Kangra.     | 18. Rawalpindi.   |
| 7. Jullundur.  | 19. Attock.       |
| 8. Ludhiana.   | 20. Montgomery.   |
| 9. Ferozepore. | 21. Lyallpur.     |
| 10. Lahore.    | 22. Jhang.        |
| 11. Amritsar.  | 23. Multan.       |
| 12. Gurdaspur. | 24. Muzaffargarh. |

The districts which have no health centres are :—

1. Hissar.
2. Hoshiarpur.
3. Shahpur.
4. Mianwali.
5. Dera Ghazi Khan.

(e) The ways in which the work of the health centres has proved useful may be gathered from the statistics of the work done in the year 1934 :

(1) Ante Natal care and observation.

14,182 Ante Natal cases were seen at home.
 16,784 re-visits were made to these cases.
 7,878 Ante Natal cases attended the welfare centre.
 12,086 re-visits were made by the above cases.

(2) Care of confined Mothers.

16,556 mothers received trained attendance at the time of labour, under the guidance of the health visitors, and were visited by them during puerperium.

At 6,864 of the above cases, the health visitors were actually present at the time of labour.

For 372 labour cases requiring medical aid, the necessary arrangements were made by health visitors, thus reducing the maternal mortality very considerably.

815 abortions and 328 still births came under the notice of the health visitors and the mothers were given necessary advice and care.

(3) Infant and Child Care.

28,855 infants were visited at home and 76,910 re-visits made.

(4) 1,488 indigenous dais were under training in 1934 while 713 dais have already received the Punjab Central Midwives Board Indigenous Dais Certificate after undergoing training at these health centres.

(f) Local bodies which generally maintain the health centres are being constantly urged to extend the work as far as their financial resources permit.

(g) Health visitors start in the scale of Rs. 75—5—120, which is subject to 15 per cent. cut. The maximum of the grade was Rs. 150 which was reduced in 1931 on account of financial stringency.

(h) No.

(i) No.

(j) Yes.

(k) Rs. 2,000 approximately. Government pays a certain percentage of the salary of health visitors in the form of grants-in-aid. In the year 1934 this percentage was approximately 35, but this year the percentage has increased to nearly 45.

(l) Yes. No complaints have been received. The ladies are widely and genuinely respected for the noble duties they discharge.

[Hon. Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon.]

(m) The answer to the first part of the question is in the affirmative. The Principal, Punjab Health School, is also the inspectress of health visitors and health centres in the Punjab. She gets a consolidated salary of Rs. 300—20—500 per mensem.

(n) This is so. It is not advisable to centralize this work. The local people must be allowed some scope for doing something for themselves. Substantial financial aid is given by Red Cross and the Government.

(o) There are strong arguments in favour of decentralizing the sanitary inspectors service, but there are no reasons for immediate action in this direction.

(p) Inspectresses of health centres should certainly be on a provincial cadre, but it is doubtful whether health visitors should be brought on a provincial cadre. At present their cost is borne partly by Red Cross, partly by local bodies, partly by Government and partly by local donations and subscriptions. If they were provincialized, the whole burden will fall on the provincial tax-payers in general.

GOVERNMENT'S DEMANDS FOR SUPPLEMENTARY, ADDITIONAL AND TOKEN GRANTS.

POLICE—SHAHIDGANJ DISTURBANCE (CONCLUDED).

Kanwar Mamraj Singh Chohan (Ambala-cum-Simla, non-Muhamadan, Rural) (Urdu): I rise to oppose this demand, but my reasons for doing so are entirely different from those that have actuated other members to oppose it. The government has demanded a supplementary sum of Rs. 72,670 for the appointment of additional police, required in connection with the situation that had arisen out of the Shahidganj agitation. Now the government wants to levy this tax on the whole province and realize this sum from those poor people who had nothing whatever to do with the Shahidganj affair. If a similar incident had occurred elsewhere, if it had happened in that unfortunate part of the province to which I unfortunately belong, I am sure the government would have punished only the people of that place and would have imposed this penalty on those poor creatures only. It would not have put the burden of this expenditure on the provincial revenue. On account of bigotry and fanaticism such incidents can take place anywhere. They can happen either for want of toleration on the part of the people or for some mistakes on the part of the officers. But in all such cases government has realized in the past the penalty for additional police from those people for whose sake the additional police is appointed. For instance, punitive police was posted in Bajnaur, Ambala district when two Sikhs murdered four butchers. Punitive police was posted in that area and its expenditure was realised from the inhabitants of that ilaga. The whole expenditure amounted to 10 or 12 thousand rupees and the people were made to pay in order to defray the charges of the punitive police. The Government can very well realise the cost of the additional police in the same way from the public of Lahore because the circumstances in both cases are identical. I do not propose at this time to go into the details of this affair and lay the blame at the door of the Hindus, the Sikhs or the Muslims. Nor do I want to emphasise that the whole trouble arose on account of the Government's negligence. What I want to emphasise at this time is that the Lahore public, Hindus, Sikhs, Christians and Muslims alike should be made to pay towards the expenditure of the additional police brought to cope with the Shahidganj affair and the burden of this expenditure should not be put on the shoulders of other peaceful people of the province. By putting this burden on the shoulders of the whole public of the province the Government is unnecessarily taxing the innocent Hindus, Muslims and Sikhs of the province who had nothing whatever to do with the Shahidganj affair. It is necessary that in view of the principles of justice and equity the cost of the additional police employed in connection with the Shahidganj agitation should be levied from the Hindus, Muslims or Sikhs of Lahore who took law into their own hands, so that they may learn a lesson for the future.

Khan Bahadur Sardar Habib Ullah: Why not ask the Lahore Municipal Committee to pay the amount? (Laughter).

Kanwar Mamraj Singh Chohan: I have heard the speeches of my honourable friends attentively and I think no one of them has objected to the employment of additional police. The police was employed even before the day of the unhappy occurrence and a number of them were present even before that in Lahore because their presence was considered necessary. When nobody has raised objection to the employment of additional police force to cope with the Shahidganj agitation, I think, they should agree with me that the cost of that police force be realised from the Lahore people. I know Mussalmans are generous, good-natured and broadminded people. I would submit to them that they should consider this question more calmly. The question of the demolition of a mosque is not the only question involved in this affair. They have to broaden their outlook. As a majority community in this province they are to form the new Government under the coming constitution. They will be in an overwhelming majority here and everything will depend upon their good will. Now, there are temples belonging to every community throughout the Punjab, temples of Sikhs, Hindus and Christians. Mussalmans should convince all these communities from the outset that they would respect the places of worship of all communities and that temples of every community would be safe when the sceptre of authority passes on to them in this country. If other communities are convinced from the very beginning that the attitude of Muslims will be generous when they come to power they will stand a good chance of making reforms a success and forming a consolidated Government. Otherwise they will lose their prestige from the very beginning. It is high time that the Mussalmans should learn to respect the susceptibilities of the Hindus and the Sikhs. If they do not learn this the Hindus and the Sikhs will form a strong minority party and will create parties among the Muhammadans themselves and it will be very difficult for the Mussalmans in those circumstances to carry on the work of a stable Government. Therefore Mussalmans will do well to placate Hindus and Sikhs from the beginning. If they do not do it they will have to suffer in the end.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan (Ambala division, North-East, Muhammadan, Rural): I rise to oppose the demand under consideration. In making this opposition I am aware that we should make speeches in a manner in which conciliation should be sought after. With this criterion in view I am disappointed at the speech made by the Sikh member, I mean Sardar Ujjal Singh, which I think was rather fiery. He has made a speech which will arouse the passions of those who suffered during the affair rather than pacify them. It has been asked, why has the Muslim community made so much of this small affair? If it were a worldly affair, if it were a question of life and death that concerned this world alone, the Muslims might perhaps be blamed for raising such a hue and cry. This is a religious affair and this fact has been overlooked by all the speakers. The Muslim will not allow anything which he thinks touches his religion. He will even sacrifice his life for a religious cause. The Muslims have lost everything in the world except religion and that is perhaps responsible for the great enthusiasm and the great sacrifices which the Muslims have made for this small affair.

Sardar Ujjal Singh stated that the Government had showered favours on the Mussalmans in this unfortunate controversy. The Inquiry Committee found that fifteen men were killed and a hundred or fifty were wounded—there are different estimates as to this number. If that is a favour then I should suggest to Sardar Ujjal Singh that he should press on the Sikhs to make an application to Government for this sort of favours to their community. Does he think that the killing of these unfortunate men, who lost their lives for doing what they believed in good faith an act of religious merit, is a favour to the Muslim community? It may be to some other community but the Muslims set a very high value on human life. In this connection I quote Sa'adi's well known lines:—

مردی که ملک - راسر زمین - نیز زد که نه چکد بر زمین

It means that if you shed a single drop of human blood the kingdom of the whole earth is not worth it. Can any other religion here place a still higher estimate and value on human life? Even the return of the Shahid-ganj mosque is no recompense for all the blood that was shed. Is that any favour? I think to call it a favour is a misnomer of the worst type which I think Sardar Ujjal Singh should have taken care not to mention. Perhaps he may set a very low value on human life, in any case he cannot claim to lay such a high value on human life as we do. (An honourable member : What about the value of the lives of the Sikhs?) I will come to that point later.

The question of the restoration of the Shah Chiragh mosque has been very ably dealt with by my friend the member from Ferozepore and I need not go into it. If the Government has restored the Shah Chiragh mosque to the Muslims, that is the result of a long agitation. It has taken as much as 25 years or thereabout, and the Muslims have been pressing for the restoration of that mosque and if Government has restored it in response to the public opinion and the religious sentiment, it has not done anything extraordinary.

One thing which the honourable Sardar Ujjal Singh said was that the Sikh officer who dealt with the situation was so tactful that no other member of the I. C. S., even the most brilliant of them, could have dealt with it more tactfully. The Muslims will remember the happenings probably for centuries, and the action was taken against a community which has stood by the Government through thick and thin, and a community which supplied Government with recruits during the war and those men fought against Turkey. And this is how Government has dealt with the community, and I think that is a very sorry recompense and a very poor reward for the sacrifices which the Muslims have made for the Government. Then he says that the handling of the situation was more tactful than it could possibly have been by any other brilliant member of the Indian Civil Service. But I submit that the situation could have been very easily saved by even an officer of a lower grade than the Deputy Commissioner himself. I can illustrate my point by quoting an incident that happened in 1922. In that year about 80,000 meos had collected in a village called Taoru in the Nuh tahsil. There were two parties among them. Both the parties were armed to the teeth with swords, chavvies, gandasas and guns. They were almost ready to fight and if they had been allowed to fight there would have been so much bloodshed the like of which none would have seen before or would have seen thereafter in Lahore. You know how easily the meos get excited and when excited they can understand nothing about them.

They lose their heads. If there is any doubt about it, see what they did at Alwar recently. But the deputy superintendent and a tahsildar kept them in check for two days and one night and then prevented further trouble among them. (An honourable member : Who was that tahsildar ?) He was a humble servant of Government. Not a single soul was killed. The present situation is nothing compared with that, and yet that situation was handled without the loss of even a single life whereas in the present case many lives were lost. I submit that the present situation could have been handled better and all the bloodshed could have been prevented. Again coming to the question of favours shown by Government to the Muslims which the honourable member for the Sikh Urban constituency alleged yesterday, it is possible that the Government had shown some favours to them, but it cannot be said that Government showed undue favour or partiality to them.

I shall submit presently what the Government should have done to prevent the situation from arising. I am really surprised that no honourable member ever touched that point. However, I shall bring it prominently to the view of this honourable House. When this trouble began to gather in proportion, when the Sikhs began to come to Lahore they should have been prevented from assembling at Lahore. The Honourable Finance Member in answer to a question put by the honourable member for Ferozepore, the other day, said that the Sikhs came singly or individually or in small parties and that was why they were not prevented. Is that the answer which one should expect from the Government ? Does the Honourable Member mean that if the whole of the Punjab population had assembled at Lahore in order to raise some revolution, he would not have prevented them if they had come singly or in small parties ? Surely he would have taken strong measures to prevent their coming to Lahore. Similarly they should have adopted measures to prevent the Sikhs gathering at Lahore. The failure to do this amounts to a culpable negligence on the part of the Government and no amount of sophistry or argument can absolve the Deputy Commissioner of this folly. If they so desire they can of course justify themselves by quoting figures or crooked argument :—

که عاجز می توان کردن ز کج بخشی نلامون را

Arguments can be advanced for and against anything in order to justify the attitude of Government. But when you look at the plain fact, you can never absolve the Government from the blame that attaches to them, for the negligence which they were guilty of in the beginning, in allowing so many Sikhs to gather in Lahore. That was the time when a single stitch could have saved nine. But they allowed things to drift. Of course His Excellency the Governor was not in Lahore at that time ; but it was up to the Deputy Commissioner to have kept him informed of everything which happened hourly and every minute and taken steps to stop the inrush of Sikhs into Lahore. He did nothing of the kind and yet no blame is proposed to be attached to him for his failure to do so. I may state that a European commissioner was made to retire prematurely simply because of a single mistake which he committed in connection with the collection of Jats in a small village in the Rohtak district in 1916 or thereabout which resulted in riots.

Now the Sikhs gathered inside the Shahidganj Gurdwara in large numbers. I do not know exactly how many collected there; but they were allowed to gather there and be prepared for all contingencies that might happen there. Now, what was the duty of the Government under such circumstances? The Government should have taken possession of the mosque and the Hindus, Sikhs and Muslims should have been prevented from going there. This was suggested even then; but then the Government said that it felt some difficulty in adopting this course, and that there were some obstacles in its way. I say there was absolutely no obstacle. The obstacle alleged was that the Sikhs would have taken it ill if that course had been followed and would have brought Jathas. They would not have done that. They would have agreed to wait till the Government came to a decision in the matter. Much has been made of the fact that the Sikhs possessed legal rights over this Shahidganj, that it had been adjudicated by the Gurdwara Tribunal in their favour. We are all aware of it although I do not know whether ownership had been established in their favour. I think it is only possession that had been established. Further suppose A is the owner of a house and he begins to collect a crowd and preach sedition against Government. Is it contended that Government would allow it to go on? Similarly, even if the Sikhs had been in possession of the Shahidganj, is it contended that the Government were justified in allowing things to go on as they did? Surely the Government is to blame for having allowed things in the Shahidganj to proceed as they did. This is the second blame on the part of the Government. I am not in the know of things behind the curtain, but I say that His Excellency the Governor himself was of this opinion. It seems that some people frightened him of the agitation which the Sikhs had started some years ago.

Sardar Sahib Sardar Ujjal Singh complained that the Government did not prevent the Muslim congregations from making unlawful demonstrations. I submit that they were making only lawful demonstrations. Here is a mosque which is as important to a Muslim as his own heart. Do you think that a Muslim would remain cool and happy when the mosque is being demolished? If the Government had taken possession of the mosque even temporarily and prevented its demolition, the Muslims would have kept patience awaiting the decision of the Government. The Government should have done this even at the risk of displeasing the Sikhs. The Government should not have displeased a large community like the Muslims by the attitude it adopted, a community which is several times bigger than the Sikhs whom the Government was afraid of displeasing. It is well-known that the Muslims when excited over a religious matter know no restraint. They are capable of creating no little amount of trouble when they are excited over a religious question. It was therefore not proper for the Government to have provoked them. It should have arranged to hand over the building to the Mussalmans even at the risk of displeasing a minority community as it was Muslim's mosque. I say that that would have been fair and just. It was also a case of expediency. When the question of expediency comes in you sometimes sacrifice even justice. I am simply looking at it from the point of view of expediency. Moreover there was right on the side of the Muslims in this case. For instance take this Shah Chiragh Mosque case. The Muslims kept quiet for all these years. The Muslims never objected to its being used for so many years for a worldly purpose and they could have gone on like that for a number of years more. But to demolish it is a different thing altogether. Therefore I say this objection has no value, this question of legal rights being in the way of Government. Were there any more legal rights in this case than there were in connection with the prevention of Muslims from going into a mosque as was done some years ago? Was there anything more reprehensible for the Government taking action against the Sikhs and preventing ingress of the Sikhs into the Gurdwara than in the matter of the prevention of Muslims from going into the mosque when it was used for political talk? So I say there is no excuse on the part of the Government not to have taken up that attitude and that action would have prevented all this situation from worsening as it has worsened. That would have prevented so much innocent blood which has been shed and that would have prevented the wounding of the feelings of the great community of Muslims. So, whoever is responsible for all this trouble should not go Scot-free. He must have the full retribution laid upon his shoulders—there must at least be one or two men responsible for all these troubles and who have not taken proper action in time—and it will be like a healing balm for the wounded Muslims to take action against them. I am one of those who believe in the good faith of others and I believe in the good faith of Government though it sometimes makes mistakes. But I never say that the Government did anything deliberately. If Government has committed a mistake there is time to restore that confidence which has been shaken by the acts of Government. I do not think the Muslims are justified in believing that the Government did anything intentionally. I will never accept that theory. The theory has been raised by one or two members that the Government wanted the two communities to fight on the principle of "divide and rule"

چو درخان بیم خوف دارند و بهم سرود درمیان کلروانی سلیم

If the thieves fight amongst themselves then the caravan goes safe. Even by any stretch of imagination if you could pin yourself to be persuaded to the belief that Government did it there are facts which falsify it and I say that Government has not done it because if it could be done without Government involving itself it would have been something. But in this Government has almost become a party and Government could not become a party against a great Muslim community. The Government is now a party against both because both communities yesterday did not speak well of the Government as is usual in such cases. But I have now submitted that there is some chance of meeting the situation.

As I was mentioning the mistakes of the Government there is also another fact, a horrible thing. The firing on the 21st was unjustifiable. My honourable friend from Sialkot made it plain yesterday that the Muslim crowd could have been very well stopped either at Wazir Khan Mosque or at Dabbi Bazar or at Chuna Mandi. They were not prevented at any of these places. They were allowed and yet some friends say that the Deputy Commissioner is not to be blamed for his negligence. The Deputy Commissioner was the man on the spot. He could have taken steps to prevent the mob at one of these places and if this was done the bloodshed on the 21st could have been prevented and still there are some men who say that the Deputy Commissioner controlled the situation in a manner in which any other member of the I.C.S. could not have done. I do not know how the other members of the civil service would take this fulsome praise. My honourable friend made it plain yesterday that it was possible to prevent these men at the mosque. When a Muslim sees another Muslim being butchered, do you think that anything, even bullets, will stop him? This demolition of the mosque was much more than butchering a man. That is the value the Muslims put upon the demolition of a mosque. They were attempted to be stopped when they had come to the mosque which they saw having been demolished, with their own eyes. They were not even then enraged as the crowd on the 20th. They were doing nothing and they could have been stopped by means of a barricade.

[Ch. Allah Dad Khan.]

Mr. President : There should be a limit to repetitions. The honourable member is repeating the arguments advanced by other speakers.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan : I was giving a different version.

Mr. President : I request the honourable member not to indulge in repetition again.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan : The other mistake which has not been so far brought out is that many men were shot at several times. It was found that there were three bullets on the body of one man and in dispersing the crowd no warning was given. The magistrate did not give the order to fire at one front, if you call it a front and he protested afterwards that the police opened fire without his personal orders. Again a man whose name is Muhammad Shafi came to take the dead body of a relative and he was fired at by a revolver by a police officer. Was the police officer asked by the magistrate in charge to do so? All these facts have not been stated. They need a full enquiry. The other facts into which I need not go as it would be a repetition according to your ruling, Sir, have been clearly brought out by the other speakers who have spoken before me. So in view of those facts which have been stated by other honourable members and in view of the facts which I have given to-day, the question is worth being investigated by impartial men. My honourable friend, Mr. Puckle, the other day quoted a line from Sa'adi :—

تر پاک باش برادر مدار از کس باد

زنند جامه ناپاک زدن بر سنگ

He repeated this when he was supporting the Criminal Law Amendment Bill. I hope he understands the meaning of it. It is that if a man is pure he should not shirk any sort of investigation. Why, then, does the Government shirk an enquiry? That clearly shows, if you take it conversely, that the Government is not clean and therefore shirks an enquiry. If the Government is clean it should not shirk. The washerman washes the dirty clothes and not white clothes not spoiled by spots. Why is it that the Government has not undertaken any enquiry? I have to-day given so many facts about officers and about this firing. I hope in view of these facts the Government will undertake an enquiry. It will be in the interests of Government. I have already said that the Government was actuated by bona fide motives, whatever mistakes they might have committed. The mistakes can be overlooked by the people and the Government will be rid of further suspicion if it holds an enquiry. All these matters which I have mentioned may form the subjects for enquiry and that would give a great satisfaction to the Muslim community.

One thing before I come to the practical solution of the problem. All members have more or less condemned the Government for its policy, in one aspect or in another. All that is of course plain and that is a matter into which I need not go. All members have found fault with the Government and the only thing that the Government can do is to hold an enquiry. That is another reason for holding an enquiry. While on this point I would say just one or two words about my friends the Ahrars. The Ahrars in the beginning were against the general community of the Muslims.

Mr. President : The honourable member is not relevant in bringing in the Ahrars.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan : I mean to say that the things are so serious and full of mistakes that even the Ahrars who were supporters of the Government have now condemned the Government.

Chaudhri Afzal Haq : We never supported the Government.

Mr. President : May I point out that in discussing the matter under consideration the honourable members will be well advised if they base their speeches and arguments on facts personally known to or verified by them? If possible they should not base their speeches on rumours and assumptions.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan : I was talking of the errors committed by the Government in firing upon the mob. This point was not touched by any other member. The idea that the crowd was unruly is erroneous and that is plain from the fact that on the very night preceding which the firing was resorted to the police pickets were withdrawn from Lahore city. Is it not an abundant testimony of the peaceful behaviour of the mob? If they had been unruly in any way, the police pickets would never have been withdrawn, after the firing. This firing, if at all, would only have exasperated the mob.

Having said so much I must now come to proposals for conciliation. I say it is no use throwing mud by the Muslims on the Sikhs and by the Sikhs on the Muslims and by both of them on the Government. We have to live in this country for ever and we have to pull on with each other for ever and we have to be good neighbours. Let us then try to arrive at a solution of this problem. I appeal to the Government that it will give practical shape to my suggestions for conciliation. This question has to be solved and there have been many proposals for solution none of which has met up to this time with the approval of the Government. I make another suggestion that even at this belated hour, the mosque should be taken possession of by the Government under the Criminal Law and no Sikh, Muslim or Hindu should be allowed to go to it. (An honourable member : Under what sections?) Let me finish and I will quote the sections. When the Sikhs find that the mosque is now in the possession of the Government they will come to the Muslims to arrive at a settlement and when the Muslims find that Sikhs are no more in possession of the mosque they will also minimise their demands and after that the question would be left to the leaders to settle. But the Government's part will have been done in taking possession of the building. After this both the communities will come together. The Sikhs cannot have that feelings of sanctity about the mosque which we Muslims have. They do not regard every inch of it as worth lakhs of rupees as we do. If they attach any value to it, it is only as a valued property and they should be prepared to give it up for a lakh or so. What is a lakh or two to a big community like the Sikhs? Now there are two communities at logger-heads and I think the third is coming in very shortly or has already come in. So the water of good-will has to be poured on the burning fire. The Sikhs can have the market value only of the site. The Muslims regard it as a sacred place and consider it above any value. Why should not the Sikhs take the money which the Government can arrange either from Muslims or in some other way, if the Muslims are not in a position to pay? There is no other possibility of additional police being employed. Already we are being asked to sanction Rs. 73,000. In future they will ask for more. Do you think a war-like community like the Sikhs should show this petty-mindedness?

Mr. President : Irrelevancy also has a limit. Is this the argument of the honourable member for voting against the demand? The motion before the House is for money to engage additional police and not for effecting conciliation between communities. (Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan wanted to say something). I do not allow my ruling to be discussed or criticised.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan: After the question is solved the Muslims will be ready to vote for the demand. If the Muslims find that there is a possibility of these mistakes being rectified, they will vote for it.

Mr. President : The honourable member may proceed.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan : I have said enough. With these words I resume my seat.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit (Hoshiarpur, non-Muhammadan, Rural) : I was greatly hesitating whether to speak on this motion or not. The question has been constantly agitating my mind whether we should take part in this discussion or not, and up to the last minute my idea was to refrain from taking part in this debate. But somehow or other certain remarks made by some speakers regarding the attitude of the leader of the Punjab Hindus, Raja Narendra Nath, made me decide that I should really explain the position which we have taken all through this unfortunate and painful controversy. So far as the Hindus are concerned, I repudiate the suggestion and the insinuation made by Pir Akbar Ali that Raja Narendra Nath at any time egged on the Sikhs not to come to any terms with the Muslims. That is really a very mean suggestion because I know that Raja Narendra Nath with all his party was trying his utmost to bring about a conciliatory atmosphere.

Pir Akbar Ali : I take exception to the word "mean."

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit : I withdraw the word. Honourable members who were invited by His Excellency the Governor to take part in these deliberations were doing their utmost to ease the situation. As a matter of fact every Hindu living in Lahore realises that so long as there is peace and order in this city, they are safe, otherwise if swords are to be brandished by 40 or 50 thousand on one side and 20 thousand on the other, then the only community that will suffer will be the Hindu community which is regarded as a peaceful community by both of the other communities, the Sikhs and the Muslims. On that ground we were very anxious and we have been throughout very anxious that this painful controversy should end to the mutual satisfaction of all parties. The point really is very simple. My honourable friends who have made very hot speeches and very moderate speeches and speeches of all kinds should try to grasp that point. Here is a community in possession of a particular religious institution. The highest court in the land has given a decision in their favour and it has been declared not once but many times and by the highest tribunal in the Punjab that the place belongs to the Sikhs and they have got a legal right to retain possession of it. On the other hand the other community thinks that the mosque really belongs to them not by any legal right but by moral right, a word introduced by the Government unfortunately in their communiqué. How is this matter to be decided? That is a plain and simple question. One community says "we are in possession of it and the law gives us the right to be there and the other community thinks that it has got the God-given right to be there because this is their place of worship.

Mr. President : The honourable member is irrelevant. Cases are pending in courts which will decide them in due course.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit : If you had permitted me to finish my sentence, you would have realised that I was coming to this point that there was a legal and lawful method, so long as the case was tried in the courts of law; and that there was the other method which was sought to be adopted by the crowd which was at that time unfortunately not led, by legally-minded people. Question was whether the Government should have permitted the mob to take possession of what had been given to the Sikhs by courts of law. That was the sole point for the Government. In order to maintain peace and in order to see that there should be no bloodshed, the Government are called upon to ask for more police. The question is whether the House will give them this grant or not. That was the point to which I was coming. There were only two methods by which this question could be approached. First was the legal right of everyone to go to courts of law to ask them to give their decision. This decision unfortunately went, from the point of view of Mussalmans against them and there was the other course which everybody knew was being pursued which was that possession should be taken by show of force. And if the two parties had come together anywhere near the mosque there would have been undoubtedly more bloodshed than the killing of fifteen or thirty men only. There would certainly have been any amount of bloodshed and any amount of that horror which the people of Lahore had been apprehending in their minds at least in those days. Therefore, if the Government, in order to keep the parties apart was under the painful duty of getting more men to keep peace and order, that course was the right course for the Government to pursue and the Council should see that point. I wish to present also another perspective to the House from which to view the matter. To-morrow, as has been emphasised by honourable members on all sides, when the rule over this province passes into the hands of the majority community, the Sikhs and Hindus fight about a particular gurdwara—not the Muhammadans—but let us say the Hindus and Sikhs fight, what would be the attitude of the Muhammadan Government? Will they permit the two communities to come to blows or would they have police placed at all places so that the two parties may not come to blows? Would they then be justified in refusing the grant to the Government if in those circumstances the police force employed was inadequate and the Government were under the necessity of adding some more policemen to their forces? That situation should be seen in this light. Take the case of the Hindus and Sikhs and forget for the moment that it is the Muhammadans and the Sikhs that are fighting at present. If the police force then appears to be inadequate, the question would be for the Muhammadan or the majority community in power to see that these two communities do not come to blows.

So far as I am concerned, I am willing to pay a tribute to the Muslim mob. The Muslim mob, as the Government in fact stated at that time, did not behave like a wild mob. It was an orderly mob. They did no looting; there was no burning of houses; there was no murders all round as there were in 1927 and 1928. And I, as a Hindu, feel that I should pay a tribute to that leaderless mob which behaved in a very restrained manner. I am not talking of those who were proceeding to the gurdwara but of the mob as a whole which passed through the streets and bazars without molesting anybody as a mob. Undoubtedly there were three or four assaults but they were the assaults of individuals on individuals. I would request honourable members to draw a distinction between the assaults by individuals on individuals and assaults of the mob as a whole on the peaceful citizens. That tribute, I think, must be paid and Government was justified in saying that the mob acted with restraint which was not to be found in 1927 or which in more recent days was not found in Ferozabad where we learn that the mob went and burnt Hindu houses with all the women and children therein. That leaderless mob had behaved much better than those which had leaders and which, under the lead of the leaders had committed great mischief in years past. That tribute, I think, is due to the Muslim mob on this occasion, and I may tell my Muslim friends what I as a Hindu, not only I, but many other people who have talked to me, many shopkeepers and others who had passed their nights and days in terror, in those days feel about the conduct of the mob. No doubt it was a mental terror but the demonstrations were such that no peaceful man could sleep in peace knowing not when the mob may get out of hand or may get out of its own temper and start burning or looting and destroying houses as we have seen happening many a time. Though those were nights of terror passed by the peaceful citizens of Lahore, I am stating the bare truth when I say that that leaderless mob acted with restraint so far as the peaceful citizens of Lahore were concerned. And that is a thing on which I congratulate the mob but not the leaders who only incited those feelings.

who, knowing very well that such a state of affairs was bound to occur inflamed the religious passion, appealed to the fanaticism of a community which according to them and according to us, places religion before everything else, religion as they understand it—though our view of religion is entirely different. That is one thing. At the same time I think the Government cannot escape the blame for writing certain foolish communiqués which were bound to give a wrong impression to the people, why, they have actually given that wrong impression that while the legal right was with the Sikhs, the sympathies of the Government so far as Government were concerned, were with the Muslims. Otherwise I cannot for the life of me understand why at such a critical juncture Government went on to declare that the moral right is something different from the legal right. That was not the proper time to draw this distinction. I dare say that even such an acute person, such a shrewd politician as Shaikh Muhammad Sadiq could not make the distinction between the legal right and the moral right. All Muhammadans understood that so far as the Government were concerned their sympathies were entirely with the other community than with the Sikhs, and this was, I think, a very grave blunder on the part of the writer of the communiqué. What was at the back of the mind of the writer we do not know, but they should have realised that these words were bound to be misunderstood and misconstrued and that, at a time, when the Government should have been very careful in regard to the use of words. Those words have done enough mischief and Government should in future take a lesson that when a certain thing is to be done at a critical moment it should be done so plainly as to be above board and free from all liability to misconstruction.

The demand before us has also to be viewed from other angles. The incidents of the Shahidganj affair has intensified communal bitterness in Lahore, in the province and even outside the province, in the North-West Frontier province for example. I went to Peshawar the other day and I found that from Nowshera a deputation of Hindus came to Peshawar informed the Hindu leaders in Peshawar that their shops were being picketed. The Hindus were not permitted to carry on their peaceful avocation of shopkeeping and many people had to leave the town. Similarly, incidents with regard to the boycott movement which is the direct outcome of this affair show that communal feelings have become so bitter that in many places where the Hindus and Sikhs are living in very small numbers they have found it impossible to carry on their profession of trade, money-lending or agriculture. That has been unfortunately the effect of this agitation on the minds of the public at large.

There is another act of the Government which cannot be understood by those who are regarded as a peaceful community. One could have understood that the Government should have permitted the carrying of the sword at a time when there was peace in the province. But at this time to proclaim that in the district of Lahore the licence restriction for keeping the sword is taken away is highly unwise. For, what do we see as a result of this? We see crowds on both sides with naked swords, with axes and other weapons. (An honourable member: Kirpans?) Yes, a sword means and includes a kirpan. If the honourable member knows the meaning of the term he would not have interrogated me. I am referring to both the communities and not to one of them. When members of the two communities armed in this manner parade the bazar, and the streets of the city, just consider what the result is likely to be. The Government should have thought of this. It is just like the keeping of a magazine of powder. At any time the match might be lit and cause the explosion. The crowds on both sides may lose control and many innocent people may suffer. The consequences are unthinkable, and we do not understand the wisdom underlying this removal of the ban on the use of the sword. I am not saying this because it is the Muslims or the Sikhs who are concerned. I would have said exactly the same thing had the Hindus been involved in exhibitions of this kind. Those who like to see the Punjab progress in peace and order, do not like these exhibitions of sword and kirpan and other weapons in this way. The only object which strikes one's view is that the one party wishes to see that the other is overawed by this action. I may state here that when I read the order, on the 7th of October, I wrote in a newspaper, that in future all elections would be contested by the Sikhs and Muslims with processions with naked swords drawn on both sides. During election time processions exhibiting weapons would be taken, I mean ordinary elections, not the communal elections but elections between Muslims and Muslims and Hindus and Hindus. Hardly did I know then that within fifteen days my forebodings would prove true, and that is what has happened. There is here a warning to the Government. That was a great blunder committed by Government.

There is one other thing. I was very pained to hear the speech of my friend Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan whom I now and then admire for his frankness. What did he say? He propounded the proposition which if he was in power and which if acted upon would make the minority communities fly away from this province. He said that because Muslims are in the majority on that ground the Government should have sided with them and should not have sided with the Sikhs, that is to say, should not have taken the side of law and order. (Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan : I gave other facts also.) Yes. The honourable member gave other facts also to support that argument. I do think that he should have followed the speeches and given expression to sentiments like other friends of his who have spoken. And I must here pay a tribute that the speeches made by his neighbour, Malak Muhammad Din, was conceived in a conciliatory spirit and did justice to all parties. And I do appeal to my Muslim friends and the Government that they should try to inspire confidence in the hearts of the minorities so that those minorities might acclaim the rule of the majority as the best rule over the province. I do say this and I will go on saying this whether my advice is listened to or not, that you can only rule this province by good-will, by winning the confidence of the minority and going a long way by making certain amount of sacrifices, just as the Hindus are doing in other provinces for the Muslim minorities there. (An honourable member : Where?) I can give the House hundreds of instances about other provinces where the Muhammadans are in the minority and the Hindus have shown their good-will by electing them as presidents of councils, by making them Ministers and Chief Minister, by allowing Hindi and Urdu stand on the same footing. All these instances could be recounted. But even if they are not behaving in that manner, even if elsewhere the majorities are not acquitting themselves well, this province, as the frontier province, should give the lead to the rest of India. If in this province the three communities go on fighting, you may take it from me that there would be an invasion from the north-west side and if there is internecine turmoil it cannot be stopped. Therefore we must understand that we are not only the guardians of the people in the Punjab. We are the guardians of the people living throughout India. Therefore it becomes the duty of our Muhammadan brethren to take a long view of things and not a short and narrow view.

Whatever be their mistakes in the past, they should take a lesson from those who have been the rulers in the land. The name of Akbar is held in great esteem by all Hindus because he was a tolerant ruler. I am appealing to the sense of patriotism and the sense of justice and of fairness of the Muhammadans. Are the Hindus and the Sikhs to live in peace under the Muhammadan rule or not? Is it not time that they should show by their example when their hearts are lacerated that they are not thinking in terms of religion? Have the Hindus and Sikhs got one God and the Muhammadans another? If there is only one God, why should one section be agitated over the question that this place of worship is a place of worship of God of another community? Do they not know that there are many temples and places belonging to the Hindus in the possession of Muslims? They know it. I paid a visit to Benares last Christmas and on the sacred Ganges I saw a place looking half-temple and half-mosque. I asked the people there how that was and I was told that it was a temple once.

Pir Akbar Ali : You are wrong.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit : You do not know what you are talking. This half-temple and half-mosque was situated in Benares on the sacred Ganges. I am just submitting, as Pir Akbar Ali said, that if all houses of worship are one, if God is one, then why make a noise about this particular house of worship if it is in the possession of Sikhs? (An honourable member : Why demolish the house of God? Do not demolish it). I therefore appeal to my friends that they should take a long view of things. We do want peace and as a Hindu I will do my share in any movement for peace and conciliation, and nobody would be more glad than the Hindu community in this province in placing peace above everything else. Therefore it is an appeal to them that it is high time that for the sake of those who lost their lives in the Shahidganj affair and to avoid bloodshed or any rioting in the name of religion they should see things in the right way and not quite in the manner in which they are doing. They must remember that if both communities behave as they are doing to-day there cannot be any peace. One has to give way. Why ask the minority community to give way? Why should not the majority give way and thus win the confidence of the minority communities living in this province especially when the law courts have given the decision in favour of the Sikhs? I am making this appeal to them that they should go and preach from house tops that the time has come when as rulers of the future Punjab they should cease this hostile spirit and win the confidence of the two communities. With these words I support the grant under discussion.

Sardar Sampuran Singh (Lyallpur, Sikh, Rural): In the "Tempest," Shakespeare has said: "Most busy when busiless." We have taken about three days over this discussion and what are we discussing? Sikhs are saying that a certain place in law and by possession belongs to them, and another community has now taken it into its head that 170 years ago this place belonged to it; though everybody knows that the building has been in the other community's possession for all this time, but just because this community happens to be in a majority in this province it thinks it has every right to get the building back if not by law at least by force. In a nutshell that is the crux of the debate, and the members are simply wasting their time by repetition. The place has belonged to us for 170 years, this is a place of worship for us and we want to keep it. It is a sacred place for us and the law courts have given it to us. How many days will we spend on this and with what result? "Most busy when business."

A point has been raised that the Sikhs have done a great sacrilege by demolishing this building which the Muhammadans called a mosque and the Sikhs called a part of their gurdwara. Now naturally one thinks that when the Sikhs allowed this building to stand there for almost two hundred years specially when there was no question of anybody questioning their right, why should they now think of demolishing it, as a matter of fact they have demolished it? Why should they have done that? I have thought over this question. I have been very closely in touch with the Sikhs, I was so even during the days when this controversy began. I even suggested at that time that it was no use demolishing this building because it was worth while keeping it as a trophy of the past and a relic of the past greatness of the Sikhs. I asked, why should they think of demolishing it? I think perhaps it was in a weak moment that the idea of demolishing that building was conceived; and why? Because some of us thought that as long as this mosque remains intact this question will again and again crop up every year or every five years, and therefore, why not do away with it? It was this mentality of the Muhammadan community, all the time interfering with and questioning the rights of the Sikhs to do anything which they wanted to do with this building, which was responsible for the Sikhs doing away with the building. That was the real germ and that is how the idea of demolishing that building was conceived, and I would say that the responsibility of getting it demolished lies with the Muhammadans and not with the Sikhs.

It has been repeatedly stated that Government had something to do with this act of the Sikhs. I do not hold brief for the Government nor is it my object that I should go out of my way to defend what they did and what they did not; but I know it from my personal knowledge, as during those days I was in touch with all the Sikh leaders who were acting at that time at Lahore, that the Sikhs never thought that the Government would allow it to be demolished or would appreciate its demolition. They actually started to demolish this building at the dead of night when perhaps they thought that nobody would get time to stop the process of demolition. (An honourable member: When was it demolished?) It was about midnight. I got this news early in the morning at Lyallpur on the telephone that quite a considerable portion of that building had already been demolished. Nobody at that time knew what was going on and if I am not mistaken perhaps it was quite a considerable time after the work was begun that the Government came to know about it. A good deal of time has been spent upon attacking Government on that despicable small thing called the winch-crab. (An honourable member: Some one called it a wench) (laughter). I think that one sentence from me should remove all those doubts. This winch-crab was procured by a Sikh named Dhayan Singh who came from Gujranwala. Had any gentleman even cared to enquire from any responsible Sikh who could have told you all about it long ago? It is not Government property at all and it is such a small thing that it was not found to be of much use. It was used for a few minutes and then it broke down, I did go there myself the next day and saw people pulling down the pillars with ropes by hand and it was by hand that the building was mostly demolished. I am saying all this from my personal knowledge. (An honourable member: Then it was not Government property): (The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd: No). I will certainly blame the Government for one thing, that their policy in dealing with this question was a very halting one. If they had been firm from the very beginning, perhaps so many Muhammadan lives would not have been lost and so much mischief would not have been done. Perhaps the Government wanted to give them a long rope. They thought that after a few days the Mussalmans would come to their senses and nothing untoward would happen. I think to their bitter experience the Government learned that in such matters in this country a halting policy is not practical politics.

It has been said that the Government gave an assurance that the building will not be demolished till the Shiromani Gurdwara Committee had considered the matter at their meeting. I think there is a little confusion in this respect. Firstly the Shiromani Gurdwara Committee is not the body which is controlling or running this institution. The institution which controls this buildings is the local Gurdwara Committee constituted by the Sikhs of Lahore and the neighbouring districts. Secondly, the holding of a meeting by the Shiromani Gurdwara Committee had nothing to do with the demolition of this building or the keeping of it. This building was purely under the control of the local committee and therefore there is no sense in the Deputy Commissioner or any other official giving any such assurance to Muhammadans. If he did so he meant to infringe the rights of the Sikhs over that building. That was certainly an illegal assurance and the Muhammadan gentlemen should not have taken that assurance at its face value even if it was ever given.

It has been said on the floor of the House and the words have come even from the head of the Government, His Excellency the Governor, that the moral responsibility of demolishing this building lay with the Sikhs. I have been a student of law and I have tried to study this point. So far as jurisprudence is concerned, you will find that law is always based on morality and not on immorality. The law is always moral; and if the Sikhs had a legal right to demolish that property, certainly their action in demolishing that building is moral and no sort of moral responsibility can lie at the door of the Sikhs. It has been suggested again and again that Raja Narendra Nath and other Hindus in a way encouraged the attitude of the Sikhs and did not allow reconciliation to be brought about between the two sister communities. I may assure the House that there is nobody in this province who is more keen to bring about reconciliation between the two sister communities and to bring about peace in the province than Raja Narendra Nath. (Hear, hear). I think perhaps I am not letting out a secret if I said that Raja Narendra Nath and some of the most important Hindu leaders were not only for reconciliation but actually tried their best to make the Sikhs accede to a very great extent to the demands of the Muhammadans. How anxious and keen Raja Sahib was in the matter. every member of the House must have realised from his attitude at the meeting held at the Pipals. If things had been really left to Raja Sahib perhaps to-day we would have been calling him weak. Thank God we did not agree with Raja Sahib.

I submit that all this clamour is due to the feeling of one community to be supreme in the province. I am afraid they should have waited till the reforms had actually come into force. They are bound to come and I may say to-day on the floor of this House that the Sikhs will not submit to this kind of treatment and they will not let their sacred places on such excuse, as the shape of a building or for some other reason to be attacked and snatched away from them. We will always be out to establish our rights and claims, and do everything possible to safeguard our interests. (An honourable member: And ignore the rights of others?) Certainly not. In the end I will appeal to my Muhammadan brethren that no Government will be possible unless we co-operate with one another and recognise the rights of each community. It would be too much to expect from us that having held that building for over 170 years and having held it as a sacred place of our worship we should have given it up because some people in the town of Lahore took the idea into their head and some hundreds followed them, and several of the leaders whether they believed in the genuineness of their right or not, held up their position as they thought it was the cry of the whole community. It is indeed too much to expect from us to surrender to them our rights. We are not out for that. I have to say only one word about the speech of Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan. I congratulate him on the beautiful way he handled a situation in some district in the South-Eastern Punjab. With that congratulation I would only say that if he were given some bigger post of responsibility to-day I am afraid he would be able to run the province in as beautiful a way as he did in a smaller sphere at that time.

Khan Bahadur Mian Mushtaq Ahmad Gurmani (Non-official, nominated) (Urdu): It is very unfortunate that the debate on this motion has taken a communal trend and has surcharged the atmosphere with communal bitterness. I have listened to some of the speeches with a deep sense of disappointment. Certain remarks against one community and the other have indeed shocked and pained me. This exhibition of distrust and intolerance is most deplorable. We are unmindful of the mischief that these utterances will do. Our sorrowful plight cannot be better described than by quoting the couplet of the great Indian poet and reformer, Akbar of Allahabad. He says:—

اپنی مقارون سے حافہ کس رہے ہیں جال کا
طائر وں پر سحر ہے صیاد کے اقبال کا

The question before the House has unnecessarily been complicated by deviating from the main issue. The point for consideration is whether an increase in the additional police is essential and whether the existing state of affairs in the province justifies its continuation. I consider it inexpedient to recount the unpleasant and unfortunate happenings of the past. Any reference to these unfortunate happenings will stir up feelings of bitterness and make the situation worse. I would, therefore, answer the reproaches and uncalled for attacks made by my Sikh colleagues, with silence. I would, however, like to throw some light on one or two points. It has been argued that legal and moral responsibilities cannot go separate. It has been said that the Shahidganj mosque was the property of the Sikhs and they were legally and morally justified in demolishing it and that the Government had wrongly accused them of the moral responsibility. I may be permitted to say that even a legal act becomes a moral offence if the intention is bad. If a man buys a cow for sacrifice and takes it to the slaughter house in a procession through non-Muslim quarters he can certainly be charged of a moral offence though he is a legal owner of the animal and has every right to kill it. Or if a man buys a Quran or a Bible and throws it into fire or tears it before a Muslim or Christian crowd he will be guilty of a moral offence even though he is the legal owner of the book. As the question of legal rights of Sikhs and Muslims on the Shahidganj mosque is pending before the court I would refrain from making any comments over it. But I cannot help saying that it was most unfortunate and undesirable that the Sikhs in an afternoon in their weak moment decided to demolish the mosque and thus injured the feelings of their sister community. The Government has been accused of tactlessness in promising the return of the Shah Chiragh mosque to the Muslims. I have been pained to hear these remarks. Probably my friend is not aware that the Government had promised to return this mosque to the Muslims long ago and what they have now done is to have announced a probable date on which this promise would be fulfilled. My Sikh friends would much rather have taken a lead from this gesture than express their annoyance over it. As regards the exemption of swords from the operation of the Arms Act I may point out that the Government's action is based on justice. It is only fair that every community or section of the population should have equal rights to carry arms for self-defence. This decision of the Government cannot be termed as partial. It has as a matter of fact removed partiality and discrimination. We must realize that all of us have to live together and our prosperity and progress depends upon our unity and mutual goodwill. We should cultivate in ourselves the spirit of toleration and mutual goodwill and respect and regard for the feelings of others. I sincerely appeal to all my colleagues in the name of their religion and motherland to strive for peace and live as one happy family. We should learn a lesson from the glorious examples set by our forefathers. Is it not a fact that Mian Mir Sahib, a Muslim Saint, was given the privilege of laying the foundation stone of the great Sikh temple, the Golden Temple of Amritsar? Do we not find even to-day large jagirs attached to Sikh temples which were granted and attached with those shrines by the Muslim rulers? It would be a great shame if we do not maintain our great traditions.

I would now try to explain my point of view regarding the real issue before the House. The Government's case is fully explained in the explanatory memorandum on supplementary estimates. The Government had to raise the strength of the additional police to meet the grave and abnormal situation arising from the Shahidganj agitation and in order to relieve the police summoned from other districts of the province. No one can challenge the necessity of employing additional police in a grave situation which threatened the peace of the province. It is noteworthy to mention here that as long as the police was in charge of the situation not a single shot was fired on the mob. The firing took place when the control of the situation was handed over to the military on account of the inadequacy of the police. It is possible that if there had been sufficient police to control the situation the firing would not have taken place. Though the situation shows signs of steady improvement the danger of its revival is not yet over. I would much rather bear the burden of an additional police than see a repetition of firing. I know the province can ill-afford to bear such extra burdens but it rests with us to avoid these expenses by creating an atmosphere of peace. I would have been glad if this expenditure had been made unnecessary, by settling this dispute among ourselves and setting the controversy at rest. But until that fortunate time comes the additional police is indispensable.

The House should also realize that the summoning of reserve police from other districts to Lahore entails a lot of expenditure and upsets the work in the districts. The district police reserves are not maintained merely for emergencies but also to help in the general duties. In my district the police reserve is engaged in anti-cattle lifting campaign. Cattle lifting is a regular curse in many western districts of the Punjab and Muzaffargarh was probably the worst sufferer. Mr. Durrant, the Superintendent of Police, started a strenuous campaign to stop this evil. Mr. Garbett, Commissioner, Multan Division, when he visited the district first took a vow from the leading men of the district that they will sincerely co-operate with the administration to eradicate the evil of cattle lifting from Muzaffargarh in commemoration of Their Majesties' Silver Jubilee. Mr. Durrant organised police parties to raid the houses of cattle thieves and strengthened the river patrolling and naka bandi forces. The results have been astonishing. The crime has gone down considerably and it is steadily decreasing. The recovery of stolen cattle has attained a very high percentage. Now if the Muzaffargarh reserve is summoned to Lahore how much loss will it mean to Muzaffargarh district?

I would not be very long now and I would say just one thing more before I conclude. My non-Muslim friends have expressed apprehensions against the Muslim majority and the Muslim rule in future. Let me assure them, that these ideas are based on misgivings. In the Punjab the Muslims and non-Muslims are well balanced and there can be no danger of a predominant Muslim majority. Nowhere can a Government be a success if it does not enjoy the confidence and co-operation of minorities and the Muslims have never lost sight of this principle. Moreover, the past history of the Muslim rule in the Punjab is a clear evidence of this principle. The Sikhs should be the last to entertain doubts about the goodwill of Muslims because they came into existence and flourished during the Muslim rule. It is time that we should revive the high traditions of goodwill and mutual trust without which we cannot progress and prosper. We must try to make our great province a place of happiness and peace. All of us are seated in one boat and in safety of the boat lies our own safety. We should unitedly try to steer it through the disturbed waters. I hope my friends will not be led away by sentiments in opposing this grant and will like practical men support the motion before the House. I support the motion before the house.

(At this stage Mr. President left the chair and it was occupied by the Deputy President.)

Shaikh Abdul Ghani (West Punjab Towns, Muhammadan, Urban) : It is really a misfortune for a member of this House to catch your eyes, Mr. President, after two days regular practice in standing up and sitting down and to be allowed to speak when nearly everybody else has had his say and almost every one wants that the debate should be closed. But one aspect of the question has throughout been lost sight of by nearly every member who has stood up and taken part in this debate. I do not think it was present in the mind of the honourable member who started the debate that ultimately this debate would degenerate—I am sorry to say so—into a sort of wrangle between co-wives. (An honourable member : "Who is the husband ?") You all know who is your husband. Do you not know that so far ? I do not think there was any occasion either for the Hindus, the Muslims or the Sikhs to lay the blame on one another. All that was relevant to the issue before the House was whether a grant for additional police in connection with Shahidganj should be voted upon or not. I may be permitted at this stage to submit that you, Mr. President, have been very indulgent and as a result all sorts of irrelevancies have crept into the debate and we have taken thrice the time that we ought to have taken to discuss a matter of this nature. I do not think that I am called upon to answer most of the members who had brought in things and given them a communal colour on the floor of this House. Nor do I think that there could be any justification for giving characters to various officers who had to participate in this unfortunate affair from time to time. But anyhow all this has been done and done quite unnecessarily and done by members some of whom are prominent members of this House. The simple question before you is whether Government stands absolved in what they did on the occasion of the Shahidganj agitation. I can justly claim that not a single member of this House on the non-official side including even my esteemed friend, Malak Muhammad Din and Pandit Nanak Chand, has supported the Government in what they did during the Shahidganj dispute. I concede that several of them had their different points of view, but they are all unanimous in condemning what the Government did. Some say that the Government failed because they did not do a certain thing. Others say Government failed because they were one-sided and were partial to a particular community. Again another section gets up and says, "No, they failed because they did not appraise the situation." But the condemnation is universal. There is not a single voice so far as the non-official benches are concerned which did not condemn the Government action. I again repeat that the condemnation is universal, consistent and thorough. After all this, one could have expected that some reply, convincing reply would be forthcoming from the official benches. We have been told not only here in this House but even in communiqués that the Government has throughout tried to adhere to legal principles, but my chief complaint, personally I would submit, is that the Government in this case has ignored law altogether. Government has not followed law and that is why we, who spent the best part of our lives in supporting law and order, and some of whom are as good citizens as anybody else in this House, for no love of agitation, for no desire to kick up a row, for no lust to abuse the Government, or for no love of setting one community by the other, get up one after another on this side of the House and blame the Government. We are not satisfied that the Government actually appreciated the legal position or the Government actually did according to what the requirements of the law demanded. That is what is agitating our minds. There is a sense of injustice, a sense of wrong done that makes us uneasy and to add insult to injury we are told at every stage that the Muslims have been favoured and the Government takes its ultimate stand upon the law of the land and vindicates its policy by a reference to the legal principles. I would submit that this position taken up by the Government is absolutely fallacious. I will not be long but I will just in brief touch the main legal points that are involved in the position. In the first instance, has not the Government or its members who are responsible for advising the Government on matters legal come across section 99 of the Indian Penal Code? Does not that section say that there is no right of private defence of person or property when there is time to have recourse to the authorities? Is it not the first principle of law so far as the protection of rights of individuals is concerned? Well, if this is the law of the land, could there be any justification for allowing jathas to enter the Gurdwara parading through the city with raised weapons such as hatchets, Kirpans and all sorts of offensive things? If the Government knew, if the police knew, if the district authorities were aware that there was going to be a dispute over the Shahidganj Mosque and a likelihood of the breach of the peace why did they tolerate this menace to society? This is the legal position. There is no right of private defence of property or person left in the Sikhs and they cannot exercise it after the police is cognisant of the dispute and they cannot be permitted to thus assemble there; they cannot be permitted in any way, by any threat of force, to maintain that right once the authorities take cognisance of the thing. Why was all this allowed? It might be that some honest mistake was made by certain persons on the spot. But has the Government the grace to admit this? Has Government made any attempt so far to pacify our feelings by telling us that they were in the wrong, by using a word of six letters "regret." The legal position was not realised or appreciated at the moment. After that, when the police and the district authorities and everybody knew fully well that there was likelihood of a breach of the peace, what did they do? They prevented all ingress to that Gurdwara; they prevented all ingress to buildings and houses adjacent to the Gurdwara or just near it. They closed the high way to the public. What were the consequences? Supposing I had a house near the Gurdwara, that house belonged to me for the last seven generations, I had perfect rights of ownership in that house; nobody could prevent me from having my free ingress into that House. The Government put a ban; they prevented me from entering that house. My private rights of property were interfered with. Why was it done? To uphold the rights of Sikhs to enter the Gurdwara. I ask in the name of justice and fairness, why is it that you upheld the rights of the Sikhs to the Gurdwara and ignored or took away equally sacred rights of others? This plea of upholding judicial rights of the Sikhs falls to the ground. You say that you have been administering justice. You say that you take your stand on law. Do you think that the law is so absurd as to allow such invidious distinctions? There is another aspect of this question, a most important one, which has been lost sight of throughout? The case is sub-judice. But I will give an assurance that my dealing with the point would not in any way interfere with the course of justice. There is alleged to be a tomb inside that Gurdwara. It is claimed that it was the tomb of a Pir, a Murshid of Aurangzeb. The tomb of Kaku Shah is alleged to be within the precincts of the Gurdwara; it has been there for centuries. I was the other day reading the evidence of the patwari in the case which is sub-judice and is going on in the court of a Lahore magistrate. It appears from revenue records that a particular person is a Mutwali of the tomb.

A member while speaking shall not refer to any matter of fact on which a judicial decision is pending.

Shaikh Abdul Ghani : I abide by your ruling, but what I understand from the passage which has been read out to me is that I am not debarred from saying that there is a tomb called Kaku Shah's tomb that is within the precincts of the Shahidganj Gurdwara. There are certain rights of certain persons in that tomb. Certain persons have the right of ingress to that tomb, the right to worship and to see that the tomb is not in any way interfered with. All these points can be touched upon though the matter is sub-judice. What I was submitting was simply this that certain Muslims are alleged to have certain rights in that tomb which was within the precincts of the Gurdwara. What justification can there be for the Government to prevent me, for instance, for once to pay a visit to that place out of respect for that saint? What justification is there for the Government to ask me not to enter the Gurdwara? What justification can there be for the Government to ask the Sikhs to completely possess that building and not allow any Muslim to enter it? Why did they post police and military there? Was it the idea that Muslims should not have ingress to that tomb to worship and that Sikhs should be left in the perfect enjoyment of what is there enclosed within the building? What I am submitting is that in their anxiety to preserve and maintain the Sikh's right of possession, they lost sight of the fact, that they were trampling upon an equally sacred right of the Muslims. I would not go so far as to accuse them of deliberate sacrifice of Muslim claims, but they in their zeal were so carried away that they lost sight of the fact that there was a tomb of a Muhammadan saint inside and that Muslims had been exercising the right of worship over it. Again in the mob that wanted to go up to the Shahidganj and who were subjected to firing there might be persons who were proceeding to the tomb and whose legal right to do so was unquestionable, and who were entitled under the law to as much protection as the Sikhs—were forcibly prevented from the exercise of their vested right. The result was that people who were equally entitled, as much entitled as the Sikhs were to remain in possession of the Gurdwara, were debarred from entering that Gurdwara. Here again I say that there was a serious miscarriage of the law of the land. My submission is that it is just possible in that upheaval, I would call it so, under the stress of circumstances in those very very great difficulties, the officers who were on the spot or other high officials who were concerned with the Shahidganj embroglio may not have appreciated or realised the legal position, but I think after such a long time, after the lapse of months, now everybody realises that mistakes were committed in the handling of that affair and especially legal mistakes. Certain sections of the population were debarred from the exercise of their legal rights and the Government itself forcibly kept them at bay. If this is the position and if the Honourable Finance Member agrees with me that his Government did commit mistakes, then of course here is an opportunity for his government to allay the feelings of the muslims. This motion of my learned friend gives the Government an opportunity to come out with an expression of regret and say on the floor of this House, that the difficulties of the situation were abnormal, we did our best to keep the situation under control, we are human beings and so are our officers, but certain things that were illegal and against which you take just offence were committed, we realise the intensity of your feelings and we are sorry for them. If this is done, then I for one would be satisfied and I am sure many persons, would also be satisfied with what the Government did. After all, it is no pleasure for us, having been with the Government throughout our lives, having been doing what we could on the side of order and good government, now to find ourselves pitched here by the force of circumstances against the Government, why, because we feel, honestly feel that Government has not been just to us, consciously or unconsciously they have committed acts and done things that give us offence and here is an opportunity for the Government, if they really care, if they have any regard for the feelings of those whom they govern, that they might get up and say "here we are, we committed these mistakes and we are sorry for them". I was expecting the Legal Remembrancer to throw light on these involved and tangled points of law. He took shelter behind the excuse that the matter was sub-judice and that they could not use section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, because they could only use it judicially. Who asked the Government to use this section unjudicially? Are we here to ask the Government to commit illegalities? Can there be any object in us to ask the Government to do things that are not strictly justified by law? We are responsible citizens, representatives of the people. We know that we are here to help the Government at every reasonable step, we could not have asked the Government in any way to do things that are not justified strictly by law. Simply to get up and say that they are enjoined by law to make a judicial use of section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, and as the House knows, they could not have proceeded otherwise, simply on this assurance of the learned Legal Remembrancer we should absolve the Government of all acts of illegality that they have committed, it is too much to expect. I do not think this policy of hush hush would help the Government. They should come out with a complete defence, if they have any. There are many points other than these which could be urged, but this is neither the occasion nor the time for me to dilate upon those, because after all the Government is not on trial here. It was only to explain a few legal fallacies that I gave you just a few instances wherein the Government mishandled the situation and acted against the law of the land. If the Government agrees with me there is an occasion for them to say that they had no intention of disobeying the law of the land, but as the situation was abnormal, their difficulties were enormous at the moment and they did things which might be interpreted to militate against the law of the country and so they are sorry for that. I think so far as the Government are concerned, many of the Muslims would be satisfied on that point. (Hear, hear.) There is yet another aspect of the question. The Government has been accused of being partial to Muslims. I do not think the gentlemen who brought forward that charge were serious. They must have made this remark in jest rather than in earnest. But had not a similar situation arisen previously and had not the Government dealt with it by thoroughly going out of its way? We remember the Akali movement in this province. That Akali movement was responsible for an extraordinary measure in the shape of Gurdwara Act. What was the effect of passing that measure and what did the Government countenance?

5 P.M.

(At this stage Mr. President resumed the chair.)

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : It is not an Act of the Government.

Shaikh Abdul Ghani : Act of the Legislature as represented by the Government.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : No Sir, it was a private Bill passed by this Council.

Shaikh Abdul Ghani : With the support of the Government. Was the Government opposing that Bill at any stage? I was not in the Council then but I know it was passed with the full assent of the Government. The Government has been administering that measure for many years. What was the object of that measure and what was the manner in which that measure worked? The object was to deprive certain persons, certain institutions in the country of their rights of ownership of private property. Why? Because a certain section of the population could not be properly controlled and could not be satisfied. The Government found it difficult to cope with the Akalis. If this Government was prepared to go so far for the sake of a certain community, if this Government and its tribunals even today at the expense of the tax-payer are administering that law, I would not call it unwholesome, I would not say unjust or anything of the sort, but if this law which means that private rights of certain persons should be given away to another section more vocal, stronger, with a better organisation behind them and more troublesome to the Government than another section of the population, if all this could be done, are not the Muslims justified if they level these accusations against the Government and complain that in an extraordinary situation they did not act sympathetically? We did not want forcible possession of Shahidganj. All that we wanted was that the mosque should not be demolished, not for ever, for a few days, for a few months, before our attempts to bring about a conciliation could bring fruit. That was the object. Do you really believe that fortified by all the legal enactments, by all legislation that is there the Government were really helpless, so helpless, that they could not, if they wanted, prevent the demolition, fortified by the law of the land under Section 144 which was being applied against the Muslims against the shop-keepers who resided in front of the Shahidganj building and which was being used against the worshippers who had a right to go and have a free access to the tomb of Kaku Shah? When the Government were doing all this, they could, if they respected the feelings of a loyal community, a community which is blamed for its loyalty by the sister communities, have found legal means of stopping the demolition. Could they not if they so wished it respect the feeling of such a loyal community by taking courage into their hands and enforcing the law of the land as it existed? It has given the Mussalmans a just cause for thinking that as they are disorganised having no organisation behind them, as they are very weak and Government did not expect any very strong opposition on their part, therefore the line of least resistance was adopted and the Government did what they thought at the moment would be best to hush up the thing. If this is true, it really discloses a deplorable state of affairs. With these remarks I will resume my seat and make a final appeal to the official benches to reconsider the position. After all we have been helping you in every sensible measure that you have brought here before this House, we have all along been with you and we now expect that if you really believe that after this exposition by me the law of the land has not been followed as it ought to have been a mere expression of regret on your part would pacify us and so far as this particular quarrel between the Government and the Muslims is concerned there will be an end to it. (Hear, hear.)

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd (Finance Member): In the first place I would like to thank you for reminding the House of the healthy parliamentary convention by which when a member makes a statement, he at the same time makes himself responsible for its accuracy, and I venture to agree in your view that no member can be held to have made himself responsible for the accuracy of a statement until he has taken the trouble of verifying it. When you enunciated that axiom of parliamentary practice I had high hopes that the debate would be conducted on a level which we should be proud of, but I am sorry to say that I have seldom in all my days heard such a stream of falsehood and false misrepresentations, as I have heard from several of the speakers during the course of this debate. In the early stages of the debate, one of the arguments that was constantly quoted to show that Government was contributing to the demolition of the mosque, was the argument about a crane, an enormous big structure, which had been somehow or other smuggled into the mosque with the connivance of the Government. It was even suggested that it was lent by the North-Western Railway and that by its means the mosque was demolished.

I am very grateful indeed to Sardar Sampuran Singh for exposing the utter falsehood of that story. After those allegations were made about the crane we took the trouble to make some enquiries. We received a categorical denial from the North-Western Railway and also from the military authorities that they had ever supplied any such implement. We also found the photograph of the implement which far from being a crane or even a winch or a windlass was a small pulley round which chains or ropes were supposed to be passed to help in the pulling down of the mosque. We further heard that this particular implement had been got from some dealer in old scrap iron, bought or borrowed, whatever it was, from him. We have heard the whole truth from Sardar Sampuran Singh that this implement was supplied by a Sikh called Sardar Dhyani Singh and had never belonged to Government. I only regret that Sardar Sampuran Singh did not succeed in catching your eye much earlier in the debate when much trouble might have been avoided if we had received this explanation earlier. But there is another thing about that explanation which I very greatly regret indeed. When Sardar Sampuran Singh made his statement I expected that the members of the House who had made allegations against Government on the basis of the supply of this implement, I expected that they would at once rise to a personal explanation and apologise for the foul calumnies which they had uttered. Instead of that they sat absolutely still having thrown mud at Government without any apology whatever.

Chaudhri Afzal Haq : I rise to a point of order. The Government admitted that up to this time they were not even aware of the facts regarding the winch. Government further admitted—

Mr. President : Is it a point of order or a speech ?

The Honourable Mr. D.J. Boyd : Or is it an apology ?

Chaudhri Afzal Haq : I wish to point out that Government up to this time did not inform the House whether that winch was obtained by the Railway Department or from any other place. It is now that Government state the facts regarding that implement.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : And now, does the honourable member withdraw what he said ?

Chaudhri Afzal Haq : Let us hear what the Government want to say in the matter. After hearing them in full we would give our view.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : I have not yet heard any expression of regret from the honourable member for the wicked misrepresentation which he has made.

Chaudhri Afzal Haq : We will not allow the expression wicked misrepresentation.

Mr. President : Does the honourable member wish to give a personal explanation ?

Chaudhri Afzal Haq : Our statements were made on the basis of what the Government said in this House and the Honourable Finance Member has no right to abuse us. He said, "wicked statement." That wicked statement is already here. The Government have admitted that the winch was used. What has the Government to say to that now ? The expression "wicked statement" should be withdrawn.

Mr. President : The honourable member's point of order is that that expression should be withdrawn.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : May I ask, on what ground I should withdraw that expression ?

Mr. President : On the ground that it is unparliamentary.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : If you rule that the expression "wicked statement" is unparliamentary, I will withdraw it. I do not think it is an unparliamentary expression.

Mr. President : I will look into the matter and ask the Honourable Leader of the House to withdraw the expression, if I consider it unparliamentary.

Chaudhri Afzal Haq : Not only this but there are other expressions of the kind which the Honourable Member has used. He said, "mean attack," "foul calumnies." It means that if the Honourable Leader of the House uses such words we have every right to abuse the Government in a similar way.

Mr. President : The honourable member objects to the expressions, "mean attack," "wicked misstatements" and "foul calumnies." I will give my ruling before the business of the day is interrupted.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : Another member of this House said in his speech that all traffic was stopped at noon on the 7th July except for the motor lorries which had taken cranes and winches to the spot. This is a misrepresentation, once again—it is very difficult to express myself with mildness—of a very unpleasant form indeed. The member said that Government stopped all the traffic on the 7th before demolition commenced except for the motor lorries which took this crane to the Shahidganj mosque, the implication being that the implements were sent there by Government to demolish the mosque. That fable has now been demolished thoroughly and utterly by Sardar Sampuran Singh. Is the member prepared to apologise? Apparently he is not. Very well. We know now how to judge the rest of his statements. That particular statement has been nailed to the counter and I think we can weigh the value of the other statements of the member by the absolute disproof of this particular one.

Chaudhri Afzal Haq : Will the Honourable Member please give the name of the member who made that statement?

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : Is that a point of order, Sir?

Mr. President : No. The honourable member has asked a question through the Chair. The Honourable Leader of the House may answer it.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : I am delighted to name the member. It was Maulvi Mazhar Ali Azhar, and I invite him to apologise.

Maulvi Mazhar Ali Azhar : I would submit that the Chief Secretary and the Leader of the House said on the opening day of the debate on what understanding these things were given by the railway authorities. And after that statement of the Government I am not prepared to say that anything that I said was wrong.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : I now understand what the honourable member is up to. Chaudhri Afzal Haq said that he had been informed by a respectable person that the winch or whatever it was had been supplied by the North-Western Railway. It occurred to me that if it had been supplied and I relied on the honourable member's statement it must have been supplied to a Sikh contractor for the sake of his railway work. That is why I asked, on what understanding it had been supplied. A perfectly natural question. Out of that, in the atmosphere of suspicion, the member, Maulvi Mazhar Ali has woven a web of the Government's stopping the traffic by noon on the 7th of July in order that the crane supplied by Government might be taken in to help the demolition of the mosque. After that I think the House can understand what weight should be attached to the speech of the member. It was replete with misstatements, and there were so many of them, and they were so gross that I think the member defeated his own object because no one could possibly swallow them.

There is one other misstatement which I must mention. I do not think that it was an intentional misrepresentation. It was a misunderstanding, I believe, as to fact, that the honourable member for Sialkot mentioned. I would like to quote his own words: He said: "The squad of police within that garden opposite Mian Abdul Aziz's house shot at the crowd." The police did not fire one single shot from the beginning to the end of the Shahidganj agitation. I do not for one second think that that was an intentional misrepresentation. It was I presume either a slip of the tongue or a misunderstanding. But it is something that must be corrected. (Chaudhri Asadullah Khan: Did I not say, probably?) I think it will be found in the report of the honourable member's speech.

The most serious charge that has been made against the Government in the course of this debate is, I think, with regard to our failure to arrange for an enquiry. That particular matter I would now like to deal with. In the first place I must make it perfectly clear that there has never been any suggestion either from the India Office or from the Government of India that there should be an enquiry. And the issue was not whether the Punjab Government should resist the suggestion for an enquiry but whether the Punjab Government should ask for one. The matter was very carefully considered and for many reasons the Punjab Government would have welcomed an enquiry. (Hear, hear). They had nothing whatever to conceal and no reason whatever to suppose that the enquiry would not result in the complete vindication of their conduct. It was totally unnecessary to enquire into the conduct of their officers because from the outset the Government were in close touch with the local officers and no step of importance whatever was taken without the knowledge and approval of the Government. (An honourable member: That is why an enquiry is necessary.) This is an important statement because attacks have been made upon the Deputy Commissioner and the City Magistrate. I would like to assure the House very definitely indeed that no step of any importance was taken without the knowledge and approval of Government, I mean by the Deputy Commissioner and his staff. So far as the Punjab Government themselves are concerned there was no need to satisfy themselves regarding the conduct of their officers. On the contrary we had the most intimate knowledge of the devotion, courage and endurance with which the district officers and the police carried out their most unpleasant duties in the most trying circumstances. No inquiry whatever was necessary on these matters.

Again, with regard to the conduct of the military. We were fully cognizant of the excellent services rendered by the military authorities and the troops and the restraint exercised by them in difficult circumstances. I would remind the House that firing had to be resorted to most unfortunately, on ten occasions but only 23 rounds in all were fired—an average of 2·3 rounds per occasion. I doubt whether in the whole history of quelling riots such restraint and such control have ever been shown before. Knowing that the conduct of the troops had been exemplary and after we had ourselves called upon them to disperse the mob, it would have been grossly unfair to have called for an inquiry into their conduct. Any inquiry must so far as the firing is concerned has been limited to the circumstances leading thereto, that is to say into the conduct of the local Government itself. It would have had to embrace all the circumstances which led up to this deplorable affair. As I have said the local Government would have welcomed such an inquiry and not the least of its advantages would have been that it would have scotched the misrepresentation of facts, sometimes deliberate, sometimes possibly accidental, that has been going on from the beginning of the agitation. But while we would for many reasons have welcomed an enquiry because we had an absolutely clear conscience, there were other considerations which weighed very strongly against it. The affair did not stop with the events of July last. The agitation is in fact still going on. Does any one seriously believe that an inquiry would have improved the atmosphere? We have at the present moment our local officers taxed to their utmost to keep the peace and carry on the administration of the district. How are they going to do it if to their difficulties is added all the complication, all the excitement involved in an inquiry? It would definitely have prejudiced the interests of peace if during all this time an inquiry had been in progress. It was for these reasons that the local Government decided with the most careful thought not to ask the Government of India that an inquiry should be held.

Another charge or complaint which was made, I think, by Mr. Sadiq, was that the local Government kept the Muslims in the dark, regarding their view of the legal position. I am sorry that a complaint was made that Government kept the Muslims in the dark with regard to their view of the legal position, and their powers of dealing with the situation which resulted from the various findings of the courts. Similar allegations have been made from time to time in the Press and outside this House. They are entirely without foundation. On the 6th of July the Punjab Government first met a deputation of Muslim gentlemen and made it perfectly clear to that deputation, that, having studied the legal position, they had no doubt whatever that the only satisfactory solution of the problem was by an understanding between Muslims and Sikhs. It was very definitely our opinion then and still is. We promised to do our best to bring about such an understanding and we kept our promise. We did what we could to bring it about but unfortunately we failed. I do not think that the failure can be laid at our door. We did what we could. Again, we met the same deputation on the 7th of July and again made the position clear and moreover warned the deputation that, while the Sikhs—it is a little bit difficult to put it, and but I am trying to say that the Sikhs at the time gave Government to understand—at least that is what we then understood—that demolition would not take place, at any rate until after a meeting of the Shiromani Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee to be held on the 8th of July, the prospects of reaching an understanding were certainly doubtful. We explained to the Muslim deputation that we regarded the prospects of understanding doubtful. In regard to our view of the situation at that time we were fortified later by the announcement which was made by the party to which Chaudhri Afzal Haq and Maulvi Mazhar Ali Azhar belong. Their declaration was made on the 23rd of July in which they took exactly the same view as the local Government of the legal position as it then existed which was our view of the position. Our view of the position was exactly that taken by the Ahrar Party in their statement of the 23rd of July.

One or two words about the general position. Our position has been clear throughout. It has been based on the axiom that it is our business to maintain law and order. We are bound by the decisions of the civil courts and, as the law stands, it is not open to the executive authorities to set those decisions aside or to ignore them. If under the ordinary processes of the civil law, the legal rights of the parties are modified or reversed, the local Government will adopt the same policy of protecting or, if necessary, enforcing the rights as then established. Unless and until the law is changed, there is obviously no other course open to us, so far as the exercise of our legal powers is concerned.

On the executive side, we advocate what we have always believed to be the only satisfactory solution, that is, the voluntary abstention of the party in possession from acts which, whatever the legal rights may be, cannot fail, in the present atmosphere, to give offence to another community, and the local Government, so far as is within their power, will do all that is possible to assist the acceptance of this view. But it has to be realized that the attainment of this object demands an atmosphere far different from that which has prevailed during the past few months and which is prevailing now. Mass demonstrations, such as we have recently seen, the enrolment of volunteers and the continued threat of civil disobedience are not the conditions favourable to a solution. They inevitably create an atmosphere which encourages isolated outrages, and these outrages in turn intensify communal feelings and create grave danger of a general conflagration. They are obviously inconsistent with the conditions which the local Government regard as precedent to a generous response on their part. A few days ago, I announced the policy of Government in this respect. I am referring to my announcement of the concession which Government was prepared to make provided either that there was an agreement between the two communities with regard to the matter under dispute or provided that the agitation was confined to strictly constitutional lines. That policy has not changed, but I must remind the House of the conditions which I stated as essential, namely, the preservation of law and order, and the conduct of the agitation on constitutional lines. These were the chief conditions. Unhappily there have been few signs of improvement since I made that statement. On the contrary, the communal situation has been one of constant and increasing danger, which requires the unabated vigilance of Government and its officers. Far from allowing any reduction of the additional police that were previously employed, it has been necessary to increase their number by 300, and I must warn the House that, if the situation further deteriorates, it may be necessary for Government still further to increase their number. As Finance Member, I deplore the additional expenditure involved at a time when it is most desirable that we should conserve our resources: but as Home Member I shall be failing in my duty if I do not realize the necessity and take the necessary precautions against a dangerous situation. Whatever may be the feelings of individual members of this House regarding the merits or demerits of events connected with the Shahidganj, I am confident that Government will have the full support of the House as a whole in taking what measures they believe to be essential for the preservation of peace.

I am also confident that members of this House to whatever community they may belong, most ardently desire that peace should be restored among the communities, and that some arrangements may be reached, which will end this agitation. It is to no one's benefit that it should continue, and it is essential for the good of the province as a whole, that it should cease. In the present state of excitement, it is difficult to take dispassionate views, and that by itself is a most cogent reason why every one should work to secure a calmer atmosphere in which the efforts of moderate and reasonable men may have better chances of success. I can assure you that Government on its part will spare no efforts to secure this : but their efforts must have the support of all men who have the interests of the province at heart, and more particularly of members of this Council. (Applause).

Mr. President : According to Sir Erskine May—

“The imputation of bad motives, or motives different from those acknowledged ; misrepresenting the language of another, or accusing him, in his turn, of misrepresentation ; charging him with falsehood or deceit ; or contemptuous or insulting language of any kind—all these are unparliamentary.

This is the general rule. Now I will give my opinion on the three expressions which have been taken exception to. The first is “foul calumny.” The expression “gross calumny” is held to be unparliamentary. So, I hold that the expression “foul calumny,” which is worse than “gross calumny” is unparliamentary.

The next expression is “mean attack.” The expression “malignant attack” is held to be unparliamentary. So, I hold that the expression “mean attack” is unparliamentary.

The third expression is “wicked statement.” I am doubtful whether this expression is unparliamentary. Therefore, I rule that “false calumny” and “malignant attack” are unparliamentary expressions and should be withdrawn ; but as to the third expression—“wicked misstatement”—the honourable member shall have the benefit of the doubt.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : I accept your ruling. But at the same time I think it is grossly unfair to withdraw the description of statements which are definitely not correct and which have definitely been proved so by the statement of other non-official members. Those statements have not been withdrawn and I think it is a bit hard ; but I have got to withdraw the description of those statements.

An Honourable Member : Has the Honourable Member withdrawn those expressions ?

Mr. President : Yes. He has.

6 P.M.

The question is—

That a supplementary sum not exceeding Rs. 72,670 be granted to the Governor in Council to defray the charges that will come in course of payment for the year ending the 31st of March, 1936, in respect of police.

We must give preference to men who are actually engaged in teaching in schools over men who have no jobs, as the former training will bear immediate fruit.

(b) Mr. Hamid's work was checked by the Executive Officer and certain omissions were detected. The Executive Officer reported that Mr. Hamid's services should be dispensed with.

(c) The Committee considered it desirable to make the post permanent.

(d) The Commissioner is being asked to look into the matter.

Sardar Jawahar Singh Dhillon : Has any permanent arrangement been made up to this time ?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : I believe the same gentleman is continuing, but I am not quite sure. ## CONSTRUCTION OF BOUNDARIES FOR FIELDS NOS. 361 AND 363, QADIAN.

*5083. Chaudhri Asadullah Khan : Will the Honourable Finance Member please state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that after the actual demarcation of fields Nos. 361 and 363 in Qadian on 20th June, 1935, by the girdawar and Patwari, the Deputy Superintendent of Police forbade the representative of the Sadar Anjuman-i-Ahmadyya, Qadian, from constructing pacea boundaries of the fields ;

- (b) under what law these chaudhris are appointed ;
- (c) their duties and responsibilities ;
- (d) whether they are honorary or paid ; if paid, what salary or wage is paid to them ?

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : (a) In Amritsar and Multan, and probably in some of the other cities of the province, a system has long been in force under which persons of local influence are appointed to act as headmen in the various quarters of the town. These headmen are variously known as chaudhris or city lambardars or mir mohallas. The appointments are made by the Deputy Commissioner, not by the police.

(b) These arrangements are purely executive and are not based on any specific provision of law.

(c) A copy of the certificate which is given to the Chaudhris of Amritsar on appointment is laid on the table (vide page opposite). The duties and responsibilities of the office, as they are understood in one town of the province, are described on the back of this certificate. The honourable member will realise that the practice in the different towns is not absolutely uniform.

(d) Honorary.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : Is it a fact that one of the duties of these chaudhris is to procure false witnesses for the prosecution in criminal cases ?

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : Is that a right question to ask ?

Mr. President : The Honourable Member may decline to answer it.

ALLEGATIONS AGAINST HEAD CONSTABLE.

*5086. Mr. M. A. Ghani : Will the Honourable Finance Member be pleased to state—

(a) whether his attention has been drawn to an article under the heading "Zair-i-harajat mulzim ki larzakhez mauit—head constable par izain dene ka ilzam" which appeared in the Inqilab, Lahore, dated the 22nd October, 1935, at page 4, column 4 ;

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : (a) Yes.

(b) A magisterial inquiry was held under section 176, Criminal Procedure Code. The magistrate found that death was not due to natural causes. A case under section 302, Indian Penal Code, has now been registered and is under investigation.

(c) A copy of the magistrate's finding is laid on the table—

Deputy Commissioner.

In compliance with your order I reached Kaithal on 28th evening and started the enquiry. The dead body of the deceased has already been despatched to Karnal for post-mortem examination. After carefully inspecting the spot, where the deceased was stated to have died, and going through the whole of the Police file about the case in which the deceased had been detained as one of the suspects, I examined 8 witnesses on 28th and 21 witnesses on the 29th. After that I wanted to examine the relatives of the deceased who had meanwhile returned from Karnal with the corpse of the deceased. I sent for them but they refused to appear as they were busy with interring the corpse. At 5-30 P.M. I sent to them summons through the police as well as through the tahsil jamadar, but again the witnesses made evasive reports which reached me late in the night. At 7-30 A.M. on the next morning, i.e., the 30th I started back to Karnal. I could not stay longer because at 10 A.M. I had to open the treasury the charge whereof I had already taken back from Pir Mubarak Ali Shah on returning from leave.

The police handed over to me the post-mortem examination report at noon on 30th September, 1935. Then I summoned the Assistant Surgeon and examined him at length. As it was very late when I finished this work I could not submit any report. The enquiry is yet incomplete. Three theories regarding the cause of death have been put forward. Two witnesses who were co-suspects in the case under investigation depose that the deceased collapsed after smoking a cigarette given to him by Razzaq, the complainant. Another group comes up with the version that the deceased expired suddenly under a fit of epilepsy accompanied by a convulsive seizure. But in the opinion of Mr. A. R. Khanna, Assistant Surgeon, Karnal who conducted the post-mortem examination the death was due to asphyxia caused by throttling leading to severe injury to the wind pipe and the soft parts of the neck and chest.

[Hon. Mr. D. J. Boyd.]

The file is submitted herewith for your kind perusal. As the enquiry is incomplete I am unable to give a definite finding over the cause of death.

KARNAL.

1st October, 1935.

KARIM DAD,

Magistrate, I Class.

District Magistrate.

The enquiry is now complete. I have already reported that there are three stories about the cause of death of Muhammad Sharif, deceased. He joined the police investigation on 26th September, 1935, evening as one of the suspects in case No. 60 under section 457, Indian Penal Code. His sudden death was reported by the police on the morning of 28th September, 1935.

The theory advanced by Aziz and Shadi, witnesses Nos. 1 and 2, must be left aside as being not arrestive of any attention unless it be afterwards sprung upon us by the report of Chemical Examiner, Punjab, to whom the viscera of the deceased has been despatched for opinion. Next comes the version that the deceased could not survive a fit of epilepsy. Isma Shah, constable, Jumma, sweeper, and Alim-ud-din, water-carrier, of police chanki, witnesses Nos. 10, 14 and 18, respectively, have sworn to this as eye-witnesses; but Ballu, Nathu, Nur Muhammad, Rahim Bakhsh and Jiwan, witnesses Nos. 31, 32, 33, 38 and 39, who were in a better position to know the accused for being his relatives, contradict this version by deposing that the accused had never been a victim to this disease. The third theory is put forward by Mr. A. R. Khanna, Assistant Surgeon, Karnal, who conducted the post-mortem examination over the dead body of the deceased on 29th September, 1935. In his opinion the death was due to asphyxia caused by throttling leading to severe injury to the wind pipe at the soft parts of the neck and chest. In explanation of his opinion this witness had described 19 marks of injury which he found at the dead body. Here I may note that the corpse was seen by the Deputy Superintendent of Police and the Tahsildar of Kaithal before it was despatched to Karnal for post-mortem examination. Both of these gazetted officers have stated on solemn affirmation that they found no marks of injury over it. Though I have no reasons to doubt their testimony yet I believe that their statement do not bereave the medical evidence of its usual value as piece of independent proof of the cause of death.

Under these circumstances the deceased does not appear to have died a natural death. I would, therefore, recommend that the Superintendent of Police may be asked to order the registration of the case under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code for investigation.

KARIM DAD KHAN,

Dated 3rd October, 1935.

Magistrate, 1st Class, Karnal.

SHAHID GUNJ.

*5087. Mr. M. A. Ghani : Will the Honourable Finance Member be pleased to state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that the Punjab Government took legal advice as regards the advisability of preventing the Sikhs from demolishing the Shahid Gunj mosque, Landa Bazar, Lahore;
- (b) if so, from whom the legal advice was taken;
- (c) whether he will lay on the table a copy of the legal advice so taken?

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : As both civil and criminal cases arising out of the demolition of the Shahid Gunj mosque are at present sub-judice in the courts, I consider that it would be not in the public interest to answer this question.

EXPENDITURE ON INAUGURATION OF REFORMS.

*5088. Mr. M. A. Ghani : Will the Honourable Finance Member be pleased to state the rough estimate of the new expenditure, both recurring and non-recurring, which the province shall have to incur for the inauguration of the coming Reforms under the new Government of India Act ?

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : It is estimated that the total cost of the Reforms Commissioner's Office since 1932-33, up to the completion of the first general election, and including the cost of that general election, will amount to approximately Rs. 8,50,000. Thereafter the cost of elections will be approximately Rs. 5,50,000 every five years, provided, of course, that the Legislative Assembly is not dissolved before the expiry of its full term of five years.

Since May 1933, no estimate has been made of the cost of working the new constitution. But the estimate then made was that the annual cost would be about Rs. 17,25,000, or Rs. 3,23,000 more than the cost of working the present constitution. Of the increase Rs. 2,00,000 is due to the increased size of the future legislature. Other main items included in the total are the Cabinet, the cost of the Secretariat, and the staff of His Excellency the Governor.

The estimated cost of enlarging the present Council Chamber and building the new Legislative Assembly Chamber is approximately Rs. 13,50,000.

REPRESENTATIONS ON DELIMITATION OF CONSTITUENCIES.

*5089. Mr. M. A. Ghani : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

- (b) whether it is a fact that the Reforms Commissioner invited the public to send the representations mentioned in (a) by the 20th September, 1935 ;
- (c) whether he will lay a list on the table of the representations together with the interests on behalf of which they were submitted ;
- (d) whether it is a fact that certain representations were submitted to the Punjab Government after the due date mentioned in (b) ;
- (e) if so, the names of the person or persons who thus sent the representation after the due date together with the interests represented therein ;
- (f) whether it is a fact that the representations mentioned in (d) were entertained ;
- (g) if so, reasons for entertaining them ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) Yes.

(b) Yes.

[Hon. Nawab Muzaffar Khan.]

(c) This has already been done in reply to question No. *49871.

(d) Yes.

(e) Does not arise in view of answer to (g).

(f) Yes.

(g) The date was fixed purely as a matter of office convenience and not as a matter of regulation. There was no reason not to send on to the Delimitation Committee any representation that could reach them in time for them to consider it.

BURGLARY IN THE HOUSE OF DISTRICT AND SESSIONS JUDGE, LUDHIANA.

*5090. Mr. M. A. Ghani : Will the Honourable Finance Member be pleased to state—

(b) whether it is a fact that in the burglary, a confidential records box of the District and Sessions Judge was also stolen ;

(c) what records were thus stolen ;

(d) what steps have been taken to restore the records ;

(e) what steps have been taken by the Government to prevent in future the theft of the records and confidential judicial files ;

(f) if answers to (d) and (e) or either of them be in the negative, reasons for not taking the steps ?

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : (a) Yes.

(b) Yes.

(c) The contents are not definitely known, but Government understand that the box contained nothing of substantial importance.

(d), (e) and (f) In the circumstances no special action is required.

GRIEVANCES AGAINST SUPERINTENDENT, GOVERNMENT PRESS.

*5091. Mr. M. A. Ghani : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

(a) whether his attention has been drawn to an article under the heading "Punjab Government Press ka Superintendent," which appeared in the daily Inqilab, Lahore, dated the 22nd October, 1935, at page 3, column 2 ;

(b) if so, what action has been taken to remove the grievances referred to in the article ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) Yes.

(b) After enquiry Government are satisfied that no legitimate grievance exists.

INDEBTEDNESS DISQUALIFICATION OF HONORARY MAGISTRATES.

*5092. Sardar Jawahar Singh Dhillon : Will the Honourable Finance Member please state—

- (i) whether it is a fact that Government has issued instructions to the effect that it is a disqualification for an honorary magistrate to be in debt ;
- (ii) whether it is a fact that some honorary magistrates on account of their indebtedness have come under the control of court of wards ;
- (iii) whether the indebtedness disqualification of an honorary magistrate is waived by his coming under court of wards ; and
- (iv) if the answer to (iii) be in the negative, what action Government proposes to take in the matter ?

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : (i) The Government instructions on the subject lay down that no person should be recommended for investiture with honorary magisterial powers who is not free from such pecuniary embarrassment as would lead to temptation. There is no positive rule requiring the removal from office of an honorary magistrate who is found to be under debt. Such cases are to be dealt with on their individual merits.

(ii) Yes.

(iii) and (iv) Do not arise.

PROMOTIONS IN VETERINARY DEPARTMENT.

- (d) what steps he proposes to take with a view to avoid such promotions and the consequent hardship to deserving candidates in future ;

The Honourable Sardar Sir Jogendra Singh : (a) Three.

(b) Yes.

(c) In view of the fact that the temporary promotion of the juniors is without prejudice to the claims of the seniors, no wrong has been done to the senior men.

(d) Such temporary promotions are inevitable from time to time for short period in the interests of the public service.

APPOINTMENTS OF SUPERINTENDENTS OF DEPUTY COMMISSIONERS'

*5094. Mr. M. A. Ghani : Will the Honourable Finance Member be pleased to state—

- (b) if so, since when they have been so made eligible ;
- (c) the number of those superintendents who have been so appointed ;
- (d) if none, reasons for not appointing any of these as extra assistant commissioners ?

Mr. F. H. Puckle (Chief Secretary) : (a) Yes.

(b) As far as has been possible to trace from the Secretariat records, the head clerks (now designated as superintendents) of deputy commissioners' offices have been eligible for promotion to the rank of extra assistant commissioner since 1906.

(c) It would involve much labour to find out how many extra assistant commissioners who have since died or retired had once been superintendents of deputy commissioners' offices, and it will probably satisfy the honourable member to know that there are at present seven extra assistant commissioners in the Punjab Civil Service who at one time or another were superintendents of deputy commissioners' offices.

(d) Does not arise.

BARKANDAZ OF CANAL DEPARTMENT, DELHI DIVISION.

*5095. Lala Jyoti Prasad : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

- (c) whether it is a fact that in 1933 a letter was issued by the Chief Engineer, Irrigation, Punjab, to the effect that military men were to be employed if there was any vacancy for a barkandaz ;
- (d) if so, why it was that barkandazes already in service were replaced by military pensioners ;
- (e) whether it is a fact that the order of dismissal has involved great hardship upon these poor barkandazes, especially in these days of economic depression and unemployment ;
- (f) what Government intends to do in the matter ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) Services of 6 and not 26 barkandazes were dispensed with.

(b) They were in service for different periods ranging from 1 to 12 years and were believed to be in good health.

(c) and (d) No. Reduction was made in the interest of efficiency and economy. The strength of the treasure guard at those divisional headquarters where a Government treasury or sub-treasury exists, was reduced from one daffadar and four barkandazes to one daffadar and one barkandaz, and these were to be military pensioners.

(e) and (f) No. They were all temporary men and employment on work-charged establishment has been offered to all considered suitable for re-employment.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : (a) 201. (This figure is that for the 2nd November, 1935).

(b) and (c) The habitual offenders work in separate workshops, away from the casuuls. Under the existing arrangements habituels and casuuls share the same playgrounds, but the games are under the strict supervision of scout masters, school teachers and the executive staff of the institution.

(d) As was mentioned in the Government review of the Report on the Administration of the Jails in the Punjab during the year 1934, Government are most anxious to complete the separation of the Borstal Institution proper, where the inmates are all of a recidivist type, from the ordinary juvenile jail. Administrative and financial obstacles have hitherto stood in the way, but the object will be kept in view.

IRRIGATION BY TUBE-WELLS WORKED WITH HYDRO-ELECTRIC POWER.

*5103. Sardar Sahib Sardar Ujjal Singh : Will the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government please state—

- (a) whether any scheme of irrigation by tube wells worked with hydro-electric power is under consideration ;
- (b) if so, the area proposed and the locality where this system of irrigation is sought to be introduced ;
- (c) the rate for electrical energy calculated to give the supply by means of tube-wells at the same water rate at which water is supplied to zamindars by the existing canal system ;
- (d) when the scheme is likely to be taken in hand ?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : (a) Yes.

(b) About 1,000 to 1,500 acres between Dhariwal and Qadian.

(c) It is very difficult to make any calculations comparing the cost of tube-well irrigation with flow irrigation, because the charges for flow irrigation vary with the crop raised and the number of waterings, but in tube-well irrigation only those units are paid for which are actually necessary to supply the water desired for the crop, so that should rain fall so as to obviate the necessity of watering the crop, in the case of tube-well irrigation, no charge would be made as no units would be consumed for pumping water for irrigation purposes. No calculations, therefore, have been made as to the rate at which electrical energy would have to be sold in order to enable the zamindars to irrigate from tube-wells at the same rates as from the existing canal systems.

(d) It is impossible at the moment to give any definite idea since arrangements have not yet been made for the sinking of the wells or the collection of the necessary equipment, most of which will have to be imported from overseas.

ELECTRICAL CHARGES.

*5105. Sardar Sahib Sardar Ujjal Singh : Will the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government please state—

- whether he is aware of the fact that factories with existing steam plants are reluctant to take electrical power from the hydro-electric scheme for working their factories on account of high tariff ;
- whether Government proposes to reduce the schedule of electrical charges for agricultural and industrial purposes ?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : (a) Not in the case of steam plants. Some small consumers with oil engines are holding back.

- This is under consideration.

PRICES OF COMMODITIES.

*5106. Mr. M. A. Ghani : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

- whether he is aware that the prices of the commodities in this province have gone up during the last few days ;
- if so, whether it is a fact that the rise in the prices is due to their having been fictitiously put up by the middlemen by falsely spreading rumours of the British Government's impending participation in the Italo-Abyssinian War ;
- if answer to (b) be in the negative, the reasons for prices having gone up and how much at an average they have gone up in the case of important commodities of general use ;
- whether Government is aware that the people in general and the poorer classes in particular are feeling the rise of the prices with great concern ;

[Mr. M. A. Gani.]

(e) the steps taken or proposed to be taken to bring them to their normal and genuine scale;

(f) if no steps have been taken or are proposed to be taken, reasons for not taking them?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) There is a slight rise in the prices of principal commodities in the selected markets of the province as compared with prices that prevailed at the end of September, 1935.

(b) Speculation has been at work, but it is difficult to dogmatize about the extent to which false rumours, if any, have contributed to the rise in prices.

(c) The index number showing prices of articles of general consumption or trade utility at Lahore for the fortnight ending 31st October, 1935, shows a rise of 2 per cent. in the average price of important commodities as compared with the index number for the fortnight ending 30th September, 1935.

(d) There is no evidence of any great concern, but it is possible that the poorer class of consumers in large towns may have felt the rise.

(e) The question assumes that there is a normal or genuine scale of prices of principal commodities. This is a matter of opinion and not of fact.

(f) Does not arise.

(2) their respective salaries, and

(3) whether any of them is a statutory agriculturist or not?

*5108. Pir Akbar Ali : Will the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government kindly state whether he is aware that the roads leading to and round about "The Pipals," the Lower Mall, Lahore, are in a rotten condition; if so, what steps have so far been taken or are intended to be taken to impress upon the Lahore Municipal Committee the necessity of improving these roads?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : The Government Printing Press Road passing in front of "The Pipals" was repaired last year. It will shortly be tarred.

Mr. E. Mayadas : Has there ever been a time when these roads were ever in a good state of repair?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : They might have been perhaps thirty or fifty years ago, I cannot say.

CLOSURE ON LOWER BARI DOAB CANAL.

*5109. Professor W. Roberts : Will the Honourable Revenue Member please state—

(a) whether the winter closure on the Lower Bari Doab Canal for the last five years has been as follows :—

|                    |                                  |
|--------------------|----------------------------------|
| Rabi 1931-32 .. .. | 15-12-31 to 7-1-32               |
| Rabi 1932-33 .. .. | 5-12-32 to 29-12-32              |
| Rabi 1933-34 .. .. | 20-11-33 to 13-12-33             |
| Rabi 1934-35 .. .. | 20-11-34 to 13-12-34             |
| Rabi 1935-36 .. .. | 20-11-35 to 13-12-35 (Proposed). |

(b) if so, why the earlier closure has been introduced ;

(c) what decrease in Rabi sowings has followed, especially in 1934-35 ;

(d) whether Government has any information regarding relative earliness of cotton in Okara or Montgomery as compared to Khanewal or Jehanian ;

(e) whether Government is aware that cotton must be watered in Multan district up to the end of October ; if so, how Rabi can be sown in three weeks ;

(f) what steps Government proposes to take to remedy the present injustice and lay down principles for future closure dates, based on agricultural requirements ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) Yes. It may be stressed that the closure is a rotational closure, and does not mean that the Lower Bari Doab Canal is in any way being deprived of its share of the available river supplies ;

(b) As being the most advantageous arrangement for the particular canal.

(c) The decrease is not believed to be due to the closure. There has been a similar decrease on the other Colony canals due to the abnormally low rivers up to the middle of December 1934, and economic conditions.

(d) No, but the difference, if any, can only be a matter of a few days.

(e) If these conditions exist it is for the cultivator to adjust his operations accordingly. River supplies usually drop rapidly in October, and such supplies as are available are equitably shared amongst the 5 Northern Canals. Every drop of available supply in the rivers is utilised. There is no wastage and no canal gets preferential treatment over another.

(f) Government is prepared at all times to consider reasonable suggestions for the modification of the Rotational Programme of any canal provided such can be given effect to without damage to the interests of the other canals.

- (b) why officers belonging to one and the same community are posted to preside over the lower as well as the appellate courts in the district ;
- (c) whether the Government proposes to take any action to remove this complaint of the public of Gurdaspur ?

Mr. F. H. Puckle (Chief Secretary) : (a) and (c) Government have received several posters stated to have been published by the Muslims of Gurdaspur. Some of these state that Muslims are dissatisfied with the district staff and others that they are satisfied. In the circumstances Government have taken no action.

AGRICULTURAL FARMS.

*5118. Khan Bahadur Malik Zaman Mehdi Khan : Will the Honourable Minister for Agriculture be pleased to state—

- (a) the number of agricultural farms in the province ;
- (b) their total income and expenditure since they were started ;
- (c) whether any of them is self-supporting ;
- (d) if so, with what result ;
- (e) how many of them are entirely run by the official agency and how many of them by tenants under official supervision ;
- (f) as regards (e) what are the financial aspects of the two forms of management ?

The Honourable Sardar Sir Jogendra Singh : (a) The number of agricultural farms in the province is 28, according to Statement No. I, which is laid on the table.

(b) This information is not readily available and would have to be collected from the Deputy Directors of Agriculture. It must, however, be borne in mind that some of the farms have been in existence for a very long time, for example Lyallpur, even before the Department was started in 1906 ; Gurdaspur since 1910, etc. Many of the farms have had their areas increased gradually from time to time, and the collection of the information asked for in this part of the question would require a great deal of research. Government does not consider that the labour involved would be in proportion with the value of the result.

(c) and (d) Experimental farms are not self-supporting for the reasons given in reply to part (f) of this question. Such farms never are self-supporting anywhere. Seed farms pay their own way and return a steady income, as will appear from the figures given in Statement No. II which is laid on the table. Most of the District Farms have become self-supporting since they were given over entirely to tenant cultivation,—vide Statement No. III attached. The figures are very variable, and depend partly on the extent to which the different farms are irrigated. Some of them are entirely barani.

(e) Out of the 28 farms, eight are Experimental Farms and as such are under direct cultivation. A part of the Multan Seed Farm, the Campbellpur District Farm, the Karnal District Farm and the Ludhiana District Farm, is being used for the investigation of particular problems while the whole of the Rohtak farm has recently been converted temporarily into a Dry Farming Research Station. The rest are all cultivated by tenants.

(f) There can be no comparison of the financial aspects of the two forms of management, namely, direct and tenants cultivation. Those departmental farms which are under direct cultivation, are maintained for the purpose of carrying out experiments and as such a staff of scientifically trained officers and subordinates who are not required for ordinary cultivation has to be maintained. In such circumstances the cost of management of the directly cultivated farms under the Agricultural Department must necessarily be considerably more than that of farms cultivated by tenants under the official supervision of a single manager.

COMMUNAL REPRESENTATION OF LOCAL BODIES.

*5119. Khan Bahadur Malik Zaman Mehdi Khan : Will the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government be pleased to state—

- (a) whether a circular letter issued by the Local Self-Government to the effect that in calculating the proportionate number of seats to be allotted to the various communities in local bodies, direct taxes paid by those communities should be taken into account, was the result of the initiative taken by the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government or whether it was the result of some representations from some persons or a body of persons ;

- (b) in case it was the result of some representations, whether he will lay them on the table ;
- (c) whether the statistics of such taxes are available in any of the local bodies ;
- (d) if not, the reasons for issuing such a circular letter ?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : The attention of the honourable member is drawn to the replies given to questions Nos. *5,000<sup>1</sup> and *5,001<sup>1</sup>.

TUITION FEE.

*5120. Shrimati Lekhwati Jain : Will the Honourable Minister for Education please state—

- (a) whether the rates of tuition fee were increased in the Government schools, as well as private ones in the year 1984, and that they have been made uniform for both classes in each department from the lower middle to the high department ;
- (b) if the answer be in the affirmative, the previous as well as the current rates of tuition fee ; and why this increase was made ;
- (c) whether he has received any representation or complaint that this increase has proved very burdensome to the people of the province, and that it hinders the progress of education from disseminating into the masses ;
- (d) whether he proposes to reduce these rates to the original level from the next school year ?

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon : (a) and (b) The new rates of tuition fee came into force with effect from the 1st April, 1982. The rates are applicable to Government and board schools but privately managed aided schools cannot charge higher or lower rates except with the special sanction of the Department.

An extract from Article 114, Punjab Education Code, 11th edition (1984 reprint) giving the old and the new rates is laid on the table.

The fees were raised owing to financial stringency. If fees had not been raised some schools would have had to be closed. The Department chose the lesser of the two evils. The Punjab Government had imposed a 18½ per cent. cut on all Departments to balance the budget.

(c) Some representations were received. As a result of these certain privately managed aided schools were allowed to charge fees at lower than Government rates.

(d) No.

[Hon. Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon.]

TUITION FEES IN PRIVATE SCHOOLS.

*5121. Shrimati Lekhwati Jaiti : Will the Honourable Minister for Education please state—

- whether it is a fact that previous to 1934 the private schools were allowed to charge 25 per cent. less fees than those charged in Government schools ;
- if not, since when this privilege has been withdrawn and why ;
- whether it has affected the admission of students into the private schools ;
- whether he proposes to allow the old concession to the private schools from the beginning of the next school year ?

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon : (a) and (b) The concession allowed to privately managed aided schools of charging tuition fees at not less than 75 per cent. of the fees levied in Government and board schools was withdrawn in 1931. Schools desiring to charge fees at higher or lower than Government rates can do so with special sanction.

- Government has no information.
- There is no such proposal under consideration at present.

SERVICE RULES FOR EMPLOYEES OF PRIVATE SCHOOLS.

*5122. Shrimati Lekhwati Jain : Will the Honourable Minister for Education please state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that the new service rules for the employees of private schools were introduced to improve their status in these schools, particularly as regards their security of tenure and regular promotion ;
- (b) if the answer to (a) be in the affirmative, what steps have been taken to enforce these rules in the said schools and whether these are applied to all cases of teachers arising under them now-a-days ;
- (c) what action he proposes to take to regularly enforce all such rules, with a view to achieve the object of their introduction ?

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon : (a) The rules of service for employees in recognised schools under private management were framed with a view to safeguarding teachers against summary or unfair dismissals and school management against loss and disarrangement of work caused by resignations of teachers without due notice.

(b) Newly opened schools seeking recognition are required to adopt these rules as a condition of recognition. The question of retrospective application of the new rules of recognition to schools recognised before their promulgation is under consideration.

(c) Does not arise.

CUT IN SALARIES OF EMPLOYEES OF PRIVATE SCHOOLS.

*5123. Shrimati Lekhwati Jain : Will the Honourable Minister for Education please state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that the private schools were required to reduce the salaries of their employees by 10 per cent. during the period of retrenchment simultaneously with the reduction in the salaries of Government servants ;
- (b) if the answer to this be in the affirmative, whether the private schools have also been directed to restore that cut or not, now that it has been restored in the case of Government servants ;
- (c) whether the inspectors of schools have been instructed not to reduce staff expenditure by 10 per cent. in calculating the staff grant, now that the cut has been restored, in cases of such schools in which no cut had been made in the salaries of their staff ?

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon : (a) Yes, the authorities of the local body and privately managed schools were advised to impose a cut of 10 per cent. on the pay of their teaching and clerical staffs ;

(b) On the restoration of 5 per cent. cut in the pay of Government servants the inspectors were authorised to permit the authorities of such of the schools as had actually applied the cut to restore half the cut. Similar instructions were issued on the restoration of the full cut.

[Hon. Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon.]

(c) the inspectors were advised to make the necessary adjustments in the grants of aided schools on the restoration of the half and the full cut, respectively.

- (b) if so, in connection with whose case was the elucidation made and whether he will give the facts of that case very briefly ?

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : (a) Yes.

REVISED LEAVE RULES IN PUNJAB GOVERNMENT PRINTING PRESS, LAHORE.

*5125. Mr. M. A. Ghani : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that the Punjab Government have applied to the workers of the Punjab Government Printing Press, Lahore, the Revised Leave Rules for press employees published in the Government of India Gazette as the Government of India notification No. F. 7 (55)-R. 1/35, dated Simla, the 3rd October 1935, and printed in Part II at pages 327-28-29 of the Punjab Government Gazette, dated October 18, 1935 ;

*5126. Mr. M. A. Ghani : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

- (d) whether it is a fact that the lambardars, the sufaidposhes and the zaildars of this province are like the patwaris also "village servants";
- (e) whether it is a fact that in the cases of appointment, suspension and dismissal of the lambardars, the sufaidposhes and the zaildars, legal practitioners are allowed to appear while in the similar cases of the patwaris they (legal practitioners) are not allowed to appear;
- (f) if answer to (e) be in the affirmative, reasons for the disparity and invidious distinction made in the matter of the appearance of the legal practitioners in the two respective cases?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) Canal patwaris are regarded as Government servants, but revenue patwaris are only village officers.

(b) Revenue patwaris are not regarded as Government servants partly on account of technical question that might arise, but chiefly on account of the special connection which exists between the patwaris and the villages of which he is in charge.

(c) As regards Government servants, attention is invited to various notifications issued from time to time by Government framing rules governing members of such subordinate services. Patwaris are village officers as defined in section 3 (11) of the Land Revenue Act.

(d) Lambardars, sufedposhes and zaildars are village officers.

(e) Yes, generally legal practitioners do not appear in patwari cases but there is no legal bar to their appearance.

DRINKING WATER IN RURAL AREAS.

1312. Mr. E. Mayadas : Will the Honourable Minister for Education be pleased to lay a statement on the table showing the action taken in connection with a statement which was circulated by the Director of Public Health in August, 1935, to non-official members of the Council on the subject of improvements in the drinking water in rural areas by means of trial borings, with the results of such trials ?

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon : A note giving the necessary information is laid on the table.

Water Supply Rural Areas.

I.—AMBALA DIVISION.

(a).—Trial borings.

1. The borings put down in the districts of Hissar, Rohtak, Gurgaon and Karnal in brackish water zones were instituted with the hope of striking sweet water in the deeper sub-soils. This hope, however, was not achieved and the results of these bores, coupled with results of several trial borings previously carried out in these districts, of which one sunk a long time ago near Bhiwani (District Hissar) went to a great depth, shows that little hope remains of striking good water in the deeper sub-soils of these areas. There is little chance left therefore.

of being able to improve the water supplies in these brackish water areas by borings in the alluvial strata. The borings put down during the past 6 or 7 years are as follows:—

(i).—Bhuriana, Keraua and Alakpur (Hisar district).

A 250 feet bore was put down. Result unsatisfactory as no sweet water was struck.

(ii).—Mundasa (Rohtak district).

Work is in progress; final results are not yet available.

(iii).—Trial bores in 3 wells Jhajjar tahsil (Rohtak district).

A 250 feet bore was put down at Kunderwali. Results unsatisfactory—no sweet water was struck.

(iv).—Lohsinghani, Sakrauna and Bhanpur (Gurgaon district).

Bores put down to 250 feet only brackish water was struck—results unsatisfactory.

(v).—Sikri near Pakhal (Gurgaon district).

Bore put down to 250 feet only brackish water was met with results unsatisfactory.

(vi).—Qutubpur and Dawal (Karnal district).

Bores put down to 250 feet and 170 feet respectively in 1930—Sweet water bearing strata not found.

2. In the case of the Ambala district there has been better success with boring as the sub-soil in the sub-montane tract contains sweet water, although the water bearing strata is deficient in coarse sandy strata which are prevalent in the Central Punjab. The following works were put down:—

(vii).—Kalewal.

A bore was put down and sweet water was proved and a well has been completed and handed over to the local people.

(viii).—Suketri.

No bore was found necessary but a well has been sunk and handed over to the local people.

A bore was put down and the yield of the existing well was improved by sinking a cylinder therein.

(x).—Ganganpur.

A bore was put down and water was found. The bore was converted into a small tubewell with hand pump which was handed over to the local people.

(xi).—Other work.

(a) Well at Dulyana.—This work will be started as soon as the sanctioned estimate is received by the Public Health Department.

(b) Improvement of 6 wells Narasingarh tahsil.—This was done by the District Board, Rohtak, and the results have been reported to be satisfactory. The work consisted of sinking cylinders in the beds of existing wells and 25 more wells are being put in hand on similar lines.

(c) Gopal Mochan Fair water supply.—Work completed and functioning satisfactorily.

II.—JULLUNDUR DIVISION.

Generally in this division water supply can be got from percolation wells or rivers (and springs in the hills) consequently there is not a great demand for deep borings for rural water supplies.

The work done consisted of:—

(a) Wells at Tikka Amreh, Narbana and Bahl and improvement of Tikka Ghar. Work carried out locally by District Board.

(b) Survey of Bit Hoga for water supply.—A complete water supply scheme has been designed in detail based on the River Sohan for the Bit Hoga having a population over 25,000 with over 30 villages. The cost will be about Rs. 6,00,000 and the scheme is awaiting funds.

III.—LAHORE DIVISION.

In this division also generally rural water supply can be got from percolation wells and canals but there is still some demand for boring. The following work was carried out:—

Sialkot Rural Water-supply.

Trial borings were put down about 150 feet deep each in 4 villages of the Sialkot district, viz., Kammanwala, Bawaryana, Gulbahar Khurd and Gulbahar Kalan.

[Hon. Malik Sir Feroz Khan Noon.]

These were all successful. They were converted into tube wells fitted with hand pumps and handed over in working order to the District Board.

IV.—RAWALPINDI DIVISION.

There is an acute problem is regard to water-supply in the Attock district and also in the Salt Range generally.

An effort has been made to find water by boring in the above areas as described below but without success as the notes below will show—

(i).—Boring at Matore (district Rawalpindi).

A hole was sunk in boulder strata but no water was found. A further search for water is now being made in the area surrounding Matore, in the hope of being able to put forward a feasible scheme of water-supply.

(ii). Borings in villages Injra, Basai, Khunda, Dhurnal, Ratewal pind, Bukhuwor and Ahmdal (district Attock).

These are situated in a rock area in which there is severe scarcity of water.

The work of boring involved the provision of expensive cumbersome rock drilling machinery which was carried out by the Rock-Boring Section of the Agricultural Department. Two bores were put down one at Khunda in hard rock for 400 feet no water being found and the other at Dhurnal for about 125 feet and only a very small quantity of surface water was found percolating in the borehole. The whole of the funds were practically exhausted in the above work and on account of financial stringency it was decided by the Sanitary Board that funds to pursue further investigation could not be granted, so the work was closed down.

From the results proved at Dhurnal and Khunda, it would appear there is not much hope of getting water in the rocky subsoil of the Attock District.

The Chidru bore proved successful in finding sweet water about 150 feet below the surface and an estimate for a complete water supply scheme has been prepared and is awaiting funds for execution. A bore was put down at Ghundi and the yield of the existing well has been augmented. A bore has been put down at Nagni and the yield of the well improved.

(iv).—Other work.

(a) Choa and Katas Fair Water-supply Extension.—The work includes provision of filter and pipeline extensions. It is completed and working successfully.

(b) Survey of water-supply resources of Salt Range.—As a result of this survey a large number of water-supply schemes have been prepared for the area bordering the southern escarpment of the Salt Range in the districts of Jhelum, Shahpur and Mianwali where there is a very serious shortage of water. These schemes are ready for execution but funds are awaited.

(c) Thal Ilaga Water-supply Extension.—The extensions of pipelines from the main pipeline bringing water from the Sardi spring on the Salt Range to the desert area round Lilla south of the Salt Range, in order to supply water to the village of Lilla, Dhudi and Jethal (population about 7,000 to 8,000) have been completed and are functioning satisfactorily. Before the pipelines were laid the only good drinking water obtainable used to be brought in tank wagons by rail.

(d) Tamman Water-Supply.—This is a self-contained rural water-supply scheme for the large village of Tamman (district Attock) consisting of wells, pumping plant, reservoir and skeleton distribution system. The scheme is completed and functioning. It is a great boon to the local people.

(e) Nurpur Fair Area Water-supply (Rawalpindi district).—This scheme is based on a spring in the Murree Hills, the water being delivered to the Fair area as well as to the village by a pipeline. It is completed and functioning satisfactorily.

(f) Katri village Water-supply.—This work is not yet completed.

V.—MULTAN DIVISION.

(i) Trial bore Sakhi Sarwar (Dera Ghazi Khan district).—In this area, there is a demand for boring work especially in the Dera Ghazi Khan district where a severe shortage of good water exists, but unfortunately good results have not been obtained except in the vicinity of the banks of the river Indus. A trial hole has also been sunk at Sakhi Sarwar on the Dera Ghazi Khan-Fort Munro Road and good water was found at about 160 feet depth. A scheme for the water supply of the large village of Sakhi Sarwar and of the religious fair held there has been prepared in detail, based on a deep well to be sunk at the site of the trial hole put down.

(ii) Water-supply, Chak No. 115-G. B. (Lyallpur district).—This work was carried out by the District Board direct.

THE PUNJAB CRIMINAL LAW (AMENDMENT) BILL.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd (Finance Member) : I beg to present the report of the Drafting Committee on the Punjab Criminal Law (Amendment) Bill.

Mr. President : The formal or consequential amendments recommended by the drafting committee have been circulated among the hon'ble members. Now I will put them one by one for obtaining thereon the decision of the House.

The following amendments were then put from the chair and agreed to by the Council.

That sub-clause (1) of clause 2 be redrafted as follows :—

“ The Local Government, if satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that any person is a terrorist or communist, and that he has acted, is acting, or is about to act as such in a manner prejudicial to the public safety or peace, may, by special order in each case, authorise any gazetted officer of Government to arrest such person without warrant, or to direct the arrest without warrant of such person.”

That proviso to sub-clause (1) of clause 2 be omitted.

[Mr. President.]

That for clause 3, sub-clause (2), the following sub-clause be substituted :—

“ An order made under sub-section (1) shall not, unless the Local Government by special order otherwise directs, remain in force for more than one month and in any case for more than twelve months from the making thereof.”

That in clause 8 in place of the figure and letters ‘1st’ between the words ‘of the’ and ‘Class’ the word ‘First’ should be substituted.

That at the end of clause 8 the words ‘to give effect to his order’ should be altered into ‘to give effect to the order’.

That in clause 9 the sub-clauses should be numbered ‘(1)’ and ‘(2)’ and not lettered ‘(a)’ and ‘(b)’.

That in clause 11 the word ‘representation’ between the words ‘visible’ and ‘or otherwise’ should be replaced by the word ‘representations’.

That clause 12 should be placed after clause 13 and the numbers of the two clauses should be changed.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd (Finance Member) : I beg to move—

That the Punjab Criminal Law (Amendment) Bill be passed.

Mr. President : The motion moved is—

That the Punjab Criminal Law (Amendment) Bill be passed.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan (Ambala division, North-East, Muhammadan, Rural) : I do not wish to say much on this motion because enough has already been said on the previous occasion, but I want to clear one point which I raised during the discussion of the Bill then. I said when this Bill was being considered clause by clause that there was a definite promise by the Finance Member who piloted this Bill in 1932 that this Bill would be used against terrorists and anarchists and civil disobedience men alone. Those were the serious movements prevailing at that time and the Honourable Finance Member gave a definite promise which was repeated in this Council not once but twice that this Bill would not be used against any other movement. The Honourable Finance Member on that day stated that I had no authority for that statement. I would draw the attention of the House to the proceedings of this Council, dated the 21st November 1932 ; on page 516 of the Debates Shaikh Din Muhammad speaking on behalf of his party says :

The Honourable the Finance Member has always been prepared to give an undertaking to the effect that this chapter would be used against terrorists and anarchists only.

By “ this chapter ” he means the chapter relating to arrest and detention. I am perfectly sure that even to-day he would repeat the same assurance which was given then. The Honourable Member for Industries also said the other day that this assurance was given there in his presence in the select committee. There is no doubt absolutely and I say this without fear of contradiction that an assurance, definite, sure and firm, was given in this Council to the effect that this Bill would not be used against any movement other than the terrorist and civil disobedience movements.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : May I ask the honourable member to read Sir Henry Craik's own words ?

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan: He gave this assurance in the select committee, and when Shaikh Din Muhammad referred to it, the Honourable Finance Member did not contradict it. Can there be any doubt about the point when Shaikh Din Muhammad stated in the Council that the Finance Member had given the assurance in the select committee that the Bill would only be used against the terrorist and civil disobedience movements and the Honourable Finance Member who was present in the Council at the time did not contradict that statement? The Finance Member has contradicted me again and it is for people to judge who is right and who is wrong. There can be no possible doubt that the assurance was given definitely. When after that assurance the Act was used twice against a movement which had no connection with the movements against which it was intended, I consider that to be a breach of faith and it is that breach of faith that I referred to the other day. Government may give a further assurance that this Act will not be used against social movements but what is the guarantee? As I said the other day, if this Act had not been in the hands of Government, they would have acted with greater moderation and greater tact than they have done so far in the Shahidganj affair. Those unfortunate blunders of Government have been discussed at great length in the Council and I need not go into them; but the havoc produced is the result of this breach of faith on the part of Government. After this no one can blame me for accusing the Government of breach of faith. Here is a statement, here is the chapter and verse for it and here is the breach of faith I referred to. After this there is no question about it. That of course has been a deliberate mistake on the part of Government. They should have consulted Sir Henry Craik who is still in India and he of course gave this assurance as a Member of Government. He was part and parcel of Government at that time, in fact he was in charge of the department which deals with the terrorist and civil disobedience movements and after he had given this assurance there was no question of there being any mistake in the giving of the assurance or the lack of authority on the part of the gentleman who gave it, and it is possible that the honourable members who are passing this Act to-day may be labouring under some mistake that it will not be used against such social movements. But I can assure the House that it will be again used against such movements. There is only one clause—clause 2—which has been restricted to communists and terrorists, but clause 3 which is the real poison in this Bill remains as before. In clause 3 there is no restriction that it will not be used against social movements.

Those who were deported were deported at a moment's notice. No one can say that a man can be taken away in that way. Even the Czar of Russia was not treated that way by the rebels who dethroned him. He was given a whole night to get prepared and in the morning he was taken away. But in the case of M. Zafar Ali and Syad Habib, the police went to their houses, asked them to get into the car and drove them away. Government should give a notice to a man and not make such a drastic use of the Act. The Punjab Government seems to have been acting as if it had no superior responsible officer, as if it was more drastic than the Bolshevik Government in Russia which they condemn so much.

[Ch. Allah Dad Khan.]

Another trouble is that Government takes no trouble to ensure that the correct section is applied. Whatever section comes into their head they hurriedly apply it, bothering not about the niceties of the law as long as they have got the man who is suspected of anything improper. I say this is a very drastic use of the law and it is not safe to entrust the Government with this law which they will again use in the same drastic manner. I challenge the Government to show a single instance in which they have used this law with discretion and according to the procedure. In every case the policeman goes to a person's house probably at 12 o'clock in the midnight and at once arrests him. If the Government uses the law properly, even though it may be what is commonly known as 'lawless law', people will not mind it. It is the drastic use of such a law that has provoked so much complaint from the people. If it is the intention of the Government to use the law in such a reckless way, it might as well proclaim in plain language that it is out to ruin the people whom it considers to be politically minded. A similar law was not in existence before 1910 and at that time people had great regard for Government. It is this drastic power given into the hands of the Government that has made it lose the respect of the people. This drastic power has done the Government more harm than good. In view of the fact that the Government has misused the law in the past we should not entrust it with the same power again.

It may be contended that the Government will give an assurance that it will use the power this time with great moderation. Even then, I should be strongly opposed to give this power to the Government. For, where is the guarantee that it will stick to its assurance? Moreover, if Mr. Boyd gives an assurance to-day it may not have any binding effect on his successor. His successor while abusing the law will say that he never gave any undertaking that he would use it with moderation. If Mr. Boyd will give an assurance that he will continue in his office for five years or till this law expires, then perhaps I may not have any objection to it on this last score. But it is very likely that he may go out as the Governor of some other province or even as a member of the Viceroy's Council; and then his assurance will have no binding on his successor.

The third ground why I should oppose this measure is the provision of clause 17 in the Bill. It imparts great power to the police. They can do anything with impunity. If any police officer has got any personal grudge against anybody else, he can make use of this law to harass him with impunity and his conduct cannot be questioned. The policeman has only got to say that a particular individual is acting or is about to act in a manner dangerous to public safety and the latter is immediately arrested. The Government accepts the word of the policeman as gospel truth and never cares to verify his statement by making independent enquiries. The policeman raises unnecessary alarm and had it not been for this alarm which the Government always readily believes, the recent troubles would not have assumed the proportions that they did. Why then, should this Council give power to the Government if it cannot use it properly? Just as the Government wants to arm itself in order to be cautious in the future, we must also be cautious in empowering the Government. We should not recklessly entrust the Government with such drastic powers which we are not sure will be used with moderation.

I do not want to make a long speech. The three points which I have urged are enough to justify honourable members in rejecting this measure. These points are absolutely unanswerable. The Honourable Finance Member argued that it was due to this measure that the civil disobedience and terrorist movements were put down. If he really believes it, then I should say that he is revelling in ignorance and I wish him joy of it. That is not a fact at all. This belief on the part of the Honourable Finance Member that the subsidence of the two movements is due to this Act is like the belief of a lover who thought the loyalty of his beloved to him was due to his lamentations and moans just as is said in one place—

وفات دلبران ہے اتفاقی ورنہ اسے ہمدم
اثر خواب دلائے حزن کا کس نے دیکھا ہے

This Act has nothing to do with the diminution or abatement of these two movements. They died their natural death. If the two movements ceased it was possibly due to the clever hit of Lord Irwin which was so successfully piloted by the present Governor of our province. That was "the most unkindest cut of all" which lessened the activity of the two movements and not this Act which has been absolutely of no use. These two movements had their origin in the patriotism of the people and the chain of this law is less irksome than the rigours of the iron chain. People do not feel the irksomeness of this law at all when actuated by notions of liberty.

چو خواندی درس آزادی گلستان میں شود زندان
کہ روز جمعہ بازیگاہ طغیان است مکتبہا

This is an illustration to show that if you read the lessons of liberty then a prison becomes a garden, a paradise. A school is such a troublesome place to students, but on a holiday it becomes a playground. Children go and play there on a holiday and they do not think of their teachers' frowns and birches. Why should not the Government follow that old venerable and respected noble Lord, Lord Irwin and adopt the policy of conciliation which helped a great deal in suppressing the civil disobedience and terrorist movements in spite of the provocation which was given to them later? It is the policy of conciliation that can serve as the healing balm. The Government has tried the experiment and tabulated the results. Why does it not act on it, when it has been a great success in bringing about peace in the province? All agitations will go out. The policy of repression which the Government has been following in the past has not brought about any satisfactory results. It must show by its acts of kindness that it has the good of the people at heart and that whatever it does is meant for their welfare. Not only in the Punjab, which is after all a small province, but everywhere where harsh laws are enacted the people get agitated and rise in revolution. Of course there are times when repressive laws have to be framed, but the present is not the time for such laws. Just now the two movements are practically dead. Why should we have electric treatment, as it were, for resuscitating those movements which will only have the effect of putting life into them? The oppressive law which the Government now proposes to enact will have no other effect. I see the members of the Government are a small minority in this Council. They are not so powerful. But some of the honourable members of this House are thinking that this would be applied against the other community. Even if it is applied to the other community why should they give such a power to the Government? After all we should have some respect for the liberty of our electors. With these words I oppose the motion.

[Ch. Allah Dad Khan.]

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit (Hoshiarpur, non-Muhammadan, Rural): I have very carefully gone through the provisions of this Bill as amended by the drafting committee. I really find that there is no difference worth the name in the present Bill and the Bill that was placed before the select committee. As a matter of fact the changes that have been introduced do not amount to much. There is however one fact on which I must congratulate the Government, namely, that it has acceded to the request of the people that instead of being a permanent measure it should operate for five years only. While I say this I am conscious that there was a certain section of the House which wanted the Bill to be placed permanently on the statute book and the Government did the right thing in accepting to limit it rather than make it a permanent measure. Unfortunately, I may say, and I say without fear of contradiction, that the Bill has not been considered by a certain section of the House on its merits. The shadow of the Shahidganj has always been there and it has really affected the minds of the various members who supported the Bill. For example, one could easily see that a certain section of the House was in favour of the Bill being kept in force for two or three years. They thought, "Here is the menace of the Shahidganj and it should be suppressed somehow or other and therefore we must support the Bill." On the other hand there was another section of the House which thought that if this Bill were in force for two years and the Shahidganj agitation was suppressed then afterwards this sort of Bill might be needed by them to suppress similar movements which might arise on the other side. Naturally therefore the shadow of Shahidganj has been so influencing the minds of honourable members that the particular clauses of the Bill have not been given the due consideration which should have been given to them. Really the Bill as it stands is a very direct attack on the liberty of the subject and it should have been considered, discussed and debated upon purely from that point of view leaving aside the Shahidganj agitation or any other movement of a similar nature. It is most unfortunate therefore that the honourable members who supported the Bill did not take into consideration this important fact and I do want that before the Council gives its final vote and passes this Bill, it should be taken and considered on its own merits. There were three or four reasons given—and I must congratulate the Chief Secretary, Mr. Puckle, for making a very lucid speech which I read more than once to find out whether there was any matter of substance on which the Bill could be supported. No doubt he has addressed his appeal mostly to the honourable member, for Rohtak, Chaudhri Chhotu Ram who wanted some material from the Government for supporting this Bill and was repeating his argument two or three times finding this as an excuse to give his vote at the last minute in favour of the Bill. That is how I interpret his speech and that is how I interpret the speech made by the Government member who explained to Chaudhri Chhotu Ram certain points. He said that the honourable members who sit on these benches have been silent and so on. The honourable Chaudhri Chhotu Ram should have known that the opposition was led by members sitting on these Benches. However, the main point to be seen is whether anything has been brought out by the Chief Secretary or the Honourable Finance Member for strengthening their arguments that the Bill should be supported. Now we had a very learned and a very interesting discussion regarding what is communism. And the Chief Secretary performed his task with singular clearness and lucidity. But he explained what communism is and so on and so forth. So far as the evidence that communism throughout the province exists as a menace is concerned, you look for it in his speech, in vain. I entirely agree with him that communism regards all individuals as subordinate to the State, that individual is nothing and State is everything. Therefore so far as individual liberty is concerned, communism takes no account of it. There are certain communists who do not believe in the existence of God. He made that point too. Neither God nor individual will be concerned. True; but the question is whether these doctrines can ever find a fruitful soil in the Punjab and whether as a matter of fact there is evidence on record which everybody can see and everybody can know that communism is becoming a menace in the Punjab, and that therefore Government needs these powers to uproot that communism. That evidence the Chief Secretary was unable to supply to the members. Of course he said very plainly, "you cannot know that communism is going on in the province. You are Khan Bahadurs, Rao Bahadurs or Sardar Bahadurs and members belonging to landed classes". Undoubtedly true; but if you have got a few pamphlets in your pocket which a certain section of your Police Department or the Criminal Investigation Department has placed before you, is that sufficient evidence for us to accept that and vote with the Government on this question? That is the main point. It is really an insult to the intelligence of the honourable members who seek election every time that they should be entirely ignorant that such a menace should exist in the Punjab and that they should not know about it. Most of us come to the Council after seeking direct election. We keep touch with the people. We know the people who vote for us. We know the landlords, we know the tenants, we have to know everybody that counts and so far as my experience of three elections goes and my experience of meeting these people goes, I do not see communism prevailing in the Punjab. It is not because people try to hide these things because I am a lawyer or because I am a man with a certain capital or because of something else. That is not the reason. What is the good of an elective assembly if it does not know what is going on in the province and if we ought merely to rely upon the reports of the police which are placed before high officials? We cannot possibly accept their statement as correct. There must be a certain amount of evidence which must carry conviction to the Council but not a single piece of evidence which the learned Chief Secretary placed before us, showed that communism was a direct menace. (Interruption). The Chief Secretary said "There is the Victoria Memorial in Calcutta, no doubt, and if a person has not seen it, it cannot be stated that the memorial does not exist there." But that argument does not apply, because anybody can go and see that memorial standing in Calcutta. There is the testimony of eye-evidence. Here what are we going to rely on? Have these matters gone to courts? Are there five or ten or 20 persons against whom courts have declared that there is reliable evidence that they are communists? That testimony is not there. And is that movement of such a nature that it is disturbing the peace of the province? All that the Chief Secretary was able to state in his speech was that there are a certain number of pamphlets, five or six or seven, two of which have been proscribed and the remaining are under consideration as to whether they should be proscribed or not. That is the whole evidence on which the Council is asked to give its verdict in favour of a Bill which is a very direct and violent attack on the individual liberty of the subject. I would again request the Chief Secretary to procure evidence of a nature which can be tested, not by the police or the Criminal Investigation Department but tested in a court of law, evidence of the prevalence of this movement which affects the peace of the province. If he can do it, then my vote can go to him; otherwise it cannot go to him. This is what I say even at this eleventh hour. I personally hold and maintain that communism cannot prosper in this province. I have already given my reasons. So long as there are castes communism cannot be there. So long as the principle of individual property is accepted by the people communism cannot come in and communism I must state is really a process educational which can come only by an advance of the people towards a certain type of Government. That type has not come into existence. Democratic principle has not been permitted to have its full play. Then how can communism come in this province? But in England which is a free country and where every individual is permitted to give full expression to his or her opinion, there communism cannot hold its ground. I have listened to the communist lecture in Hyde Park and other places. They are freely permitted to express their views. How can you expect India, a caste ridden country, a property ridden country, a country with most conservative ideas, to accept this gospel of communism? When I said that if you are really serious in stating to the people that communism should be fought, you should have no intercourse with Russia, no reply was forthcoming. They say, that they are only trading with the Russian Government but they are not trading with the Russian people. The reply was something to that effect I do not exactly remember the words. Whatever the difference may be, if you are really serious that communism is a menace, England should cut off its connection with Russia and tell the people of India that they have really regarded communism as a serious menace and therefore they regard the Russian state as one with which they should have nothing to do. That will really have a great weight with us here. But when you embrace Russia with open arms, when you are prepared to trade with that country, this theory of there being communism in this country seems to be merely a cloak to hide what the Government really wants, namely, that the country should not enjoy that freedom, that liberty, which under the new reforms they are bound to enjoy and therefore these fetters and chains are being forged all over the provinces whether there is

Communism or not, on the individual liberty of the subject. It is essential that if democratic government is to flourish, if India is to progress towards responsible government, there must be full freedom of discussion otherwise democratic Government is merely reduced to a farce and any obstacles that are placed in the way of individual expression of opinion really cut at the root of self-Government or responsible Government. It is on that account that I wish to examine this argument very carefully relating to communism which was advanced by the official member in support of this Bill. Therefore my submission is this that neither the speech of the Honourable Finance Member nor the speech of the Chief Secretary has given any indication that communism is a menace in the Punjab for which the Government requires these very extraordinary powers to be placed in their hands. Then, there was a talk of civil disobedience movement. I submit that there is no civil disobedience movement now. That is an admitted fact. Whether you look at the Hindus, Muslims or Sikhs or whether you look at the Congress, or at any other political organisation, so far as the civil disobedience movement is concerned, it does not exist. Therefore to seek emergency powers on the basis of a movement which is non-existent is certainly a thing which I cannot possibly understand. If there is such a movement in the future, the Government can always come to this House and take from them the necessary powers that they need to suppress the civil disobedience movement, and we assure the Honourable Finance Member that the House, as I said in my first speech, would give them these powers if there is a menace to the maintenance of law and order. But there being no civil disobedience movement, you cannot possibly ask the House to give these powers. I said in my speech at the time that the civil disobedience movement which existed in the country some time ago died a natural death. It did not die because of these powers. That I maintain even now. What does the Bill give to the Government? Only that they can arrest a person without any investigation, that there will be no trial so that these ideas may not spread and this is what the civil resisters did give to the Government voluntarily. They courted imprisonment and they sought no trial. They practically gave the Government voluntarily what they are now asking that the Council should give them. If the civil disobedience movement died it died a natural death. It is not a normal movement, people cannot go on for any length of time in that way. Non-co-operation is not the law of life, co-operation is the law of life. We cannot cut ourselves away from one another. Respect for individual liberty and for the laws of the land is a natural thing, but it is an unnatural thing that people should go out and break the laws as they tried to do under the influence of civil disobedience movement for ever. That sort of movement cannot possibly live for more than a few years and it must have, in the very nature of things, a limited existence. It was not due to any law of this kind that the movement died. I maintain that nothing has been said by the Chief Secretary or by the Honourable Finance Member to show that the views that I placed before the House could in any way be challenged on the ground that it was merely on account of this law that the civil disobedience movement died. But my point is there and I ask him to reply to it. There is no civil disobedience movement to-day and therefore there is no emergency for a measure of this kind.

[Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit.]

Merely on the ground that at some future time there is likely to be a civil disobedience movement, you seek to be armed with these powers. That I submit is not a reason for asking the Council to give these powers to the Government.

Then another point raised was about terrorism. Official members have not frankly conceded that terrorism does not exist as a menace in this province. There have been two or three instances. But there was no overt act of any kind. A revolver found on a certain leader or a terrorist coming from another place who was arrested was all that was said as evidence of the terrorist movement. Is this sufficient evidence of terrorism on which you can ask for these powers by which you may be able to take hold of anybody? Make out a case that terrorism is a menace in the Punjab with which you cannot deal under the existing law, and then only we would be justified in granting to you these extraordinary and extravagant powers which you seek from the members at this time. The whole argument was based on two or three instances which I submit are really no instances at all and therefore my submission is this. (Interruption). The answer is that this Bill is not needed to-day. If somebody is murdered to-morrow they want power for that eventuality. They ask for these powers for a fanciful reason. A murder may take place or may not take place. What are we going to do at this time? Do you want to be placed in your hands weapons by which you can take hold of any man for whatever reason and without assigning any reason, a dacoit, a criminal or an ordinary man, a man talking of communalism, a man talking about Shahidganj, and detain him for one year? Seven hundred murders take place every year. If one or two murders more take place, I would not mind that at all, but I do regard it as a very serious measure by which you can take up classes of people, people of any kind and you can imprison them and detain them for one year without any trial and without assigning any reason. That is the answer which I give to the argument. If you want to justify by one murder this encroachment on the rights of the people, we cannot be safe in this province or in any other province. Your police, your Criminal Investigation Department are always troubled by all sorts of obnoxious people. They may not be terrorists, civil resisters or communists, and your police is not to account to anybody. The police officer has not to account to any court, he is not going to be examined, his evidence is not going to be placed before any judge and the administrators may say that we are satisfied and the man should be arrested and detained. Unfortunately the law is otherwise. It does not place any value on the information or opinion of those who administer these affairs, and therefore it would be a wrong thing to do what centuries of existing legislation have not done by asking us to pass this extraordinary law. This is my apprehension, this is the apprehension of all those who are seeking a democratic and a responsible sort of Government. The voice of the people on this should prevail as against the voice of a few individuals who are responsible for the maintenance of law and order. Otherwise why have democratic Government? Why not make over the rule of this land to four or five people who would administer all the departments very nicely and the government would not be very expensive either and the whole thing would go on very smoothly.

It would be better to give over the Government of this country to a Mussolini or a Hitler or give all these powers to the Governor. But the new reforms are coming, which were very much advertised at the League of Nations. Do away with all this and the people would be thankful because this would save much expense. But the Government is really sincere in giving to the people a responsible system of Government though with certain limitations and the Governor has been made responsible for the safety of the people and the peace and tranquillity of the province. These things are his special responsibility. These being his special responsibility, there is no necessity for passing a measure of this kind. This is what I said the other day, and I repeat that if there is a provision made in the new Government of India Act of 1935, whereby the peace and tranquillity of the province has been made a special responsibility of the Governor. He is also given special powers and he can issue special Acts for the purpose. He need not come to the Legislative Council and say "well the Punjab is threatened by a serious apprehension of the breach of the peace and tranquillity." He can pass a special Act and that power has been provided for. Why then be nervous about this matter? But the real thing is this. As I submitted before, fortunately or unfortunately there is communalism in this province. It exists, it cannot be denied by anybody. But, as I said then and as I say now, the chief responsibility for this state of affairs does not lie only with the people themselves, but also with the Government. The root cause of the intensification of communal hatred and bitterness is that the Hindus have not to seek the Muslims and ask them for their votes and vice versa for election to the Council and the clear result of this is that the communities vie with one another in sending fanatical members to the councils and assemblies. There is no real sympathy for the feelings of one another. Unfortunately in this province there are three strong communities, though the majority community is the strongest. To introduce legislation of this kind is no remedy for communalism because to-morrow if one party comes into power they will try to suppress the leaders of the other parties. And if another party comes into power, they will oppress the others. It would be a terrible state of affairs, and I ask the Government to take this into consideration. This is not a remedy which you are proposing and which will remove the disease of communalism. Communalism can only be rooted out if the communities live in mutual trust of one another and live with good-will towards one another and that can only be done when a man going to elections has to seek the vote of men of other communities, otherwise it is impossible and you may wait till doomsday and this disease will never be removed. Therefore my submission is that no case has been made for passing this Bill and I submit that it is essential for proper Government under the new reforms that no restrictions should be placed on the liberty of expression. If the province is to enjoy good Government it is essential that the province should have no kind of bar or limitation on the free expression of public opinion and if any body does any wrong, then there must be resort to open enquiry in a court of law. Then it may be said that the Government and other members who supported the Government have been very fair in making an alteration in clause 2, confining its application merely to terrorists and communists. But it has entirely no meaning, when no alteration of this kind has taken place in subsequent clauses. You look at this Bill as it is going to be passed into law. I really wonder how those honourable members who proposed that the law should be restricted in its application to terrorists and communists can be happy over the Bill as it has come out now. When we see that in clause 3 there is a total omission of what is aimed at in clause 2, when we find that under clause 3 any person, whether he is a terrorist, communist or communalist or any other person, could be got hold of and detained for twelve months, what does the concession that they have given to public opinion amount to? I submit therefore that there has been really no gain by getting clause 2 limited in its operation to merely terrorists and communists, because clause 3 is very wide.

The chapter with regard to public meetings is again a very serious menace to the liberty of the subject. It is essential that under the new reforms people should hold public meetings, sometimes in their houses, sometimes in other places and no meeting would be safe under this law. Anybody can go and misinform Government and people can be got hold of and sent to particular places to stay there for twelve months without being even told what the charge against them is, what their offence is, without having the advantage of an open and free trial in a free country. The Bill at this stage is therefore not different from the measure as it first came to us, except in only one respect, namely, its permanent character has been taken away and it has been limited to five years. Excepting that, there has been absolutely no gain whatsoever and therefore those members of the House who were very much pleased with the character of the changes made in clause 2 should clearly realise that they have really gained nothing and that the Bill as it stands is as drastic as it was before. Let not honourable members labour under any wrong impression about that.

Taken from all these points of view I regard this Bill as a menace to the liberty of the subject. I regard it as utterly unnecessary and really a very grave obstacle in the path of self-government. I regard it as a measure which will be used as a weapon of oppression and terror under the coming reforms and I regard it as not in the interests of peace and good government. On the other hand this Bill will lead to such abuses and will lead to such movements which the Government would not be able to suppress. After all, you have to think first of the subjects and then of the administrators of the law. You have to think first of those who have been fighting so long for the substance of responsible government, for the substance of liberty and freedom. But what you have given with one hand you have taken away with the other, and you are, by this measure, really placing obstacles in the path of good government. I do appeal to Members of Government that they must take a very broad view of things. I said before and I do say again that this Bill should not be the reward for the loyalty of this province. You must see that the Punjab has always ranged itself on the side of law and order and therefore you must have confidence in the people. For confidence, as they say, begets confidence. Other methods will not avail you. Everyone will say now that you are trying to govern this province by the old Russian methods of government. And even at this last minute, with all the emphasis I can command I do oppose this Bill and I earnestly appeal to Government to withdraw it in their own interests and in the interests of the people.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd (Finance Member): I would have liked to reserve my remarks to the end. But there is only one thing I am concerned to reply to to-day and that is, the very grave charge of breach of faith brought against the Government by Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan. A charge of that kind we cannot take lightly whether it was lightly made or not. I admit that the honourable member has got hold of something of which I was totally unaware before and that was one word and that word was a slip in the speech of Shaikh Din Muhammad during the debate on this Bill when it was first introduced in this House. That word is "chapter". But the honourable member from Ambala did not give us the whole context which shows very clearly indeed to what Shaikh Din Muhammad was referring. At the bottom of page 515 of Punjab Debates, Volume XXII, Shaikh Din Muhammad, referring to Shaikh Muhammad Sadiq said:

"The only clause to which he objected was the clause which was contained in Chapter II and which laid down that any officer of Government could be authorised by the local Government to arrest any person under the circumstances mentioned and use any means for his arrest."

Khan Bahadur Shaikh Din Muhammad was very clearly referring to one clause and one clause only, clause 2, which is at present section 2 of the Act. He went on in this way for about fifteen or twenty lines talking about that one clause and not about the chapter. And he later said:

"Our critics had strongly protested against such officers being vested with this discretion (that is, the discretion of arrest) and that provision has been consequently modified and it is now laid down that that discretion would vest in the local Government alone. The local Government while issuing general instructions would specify the movement or movements which are intended to be operated against."

Shaikh Muhammad Sadiq then interrupts: "Where is it?". And Khan Bahadur Shaikh Din Muhammad replies:

"It is in the provisions of the Bill. The honourable member for Amritsar asks me to point out where it is. The words are quite clear—"

"Provided that the local Government when authorising any officer by general order under this sub-section, shall specify the circumstances in which the officer so authorised may make or direct such arrest."

Those words occur in section 2 of the Act, clause 2 of the Bill as it then was. They do not occur anywhere else in that chapter. Shaikh Din Muhammad was obviously, clearly, referring to one section only, section 2. He went on:

"The Honourable the Finance Member has always been prepared to give an undertaking to the effect that this chapter would be used against terrorists and anarchists only."

I feel confident that the use of the words "this chapter" was a slip because the whole context refers only to section 2. Then Shaikh Din Muhammad went on:

"And if this provision (not "this chapter") is to be used against terrorists and anarchists only, I fail to understand why any objection is being levelled against the present provision."

None of us knows, none of us remembers, none of us can possibly remember whether Sir Henry Craik was present when these words of Shaikh Din

[Hon. Mr. D. J. Boyd.]

Muhammad were uttered ; how can any one be sure that Sir Henry Craik was here in his seat ? (Interruption). Din Muhammad would not tell a lie. He does not tell lies and there is not the slightest doubt about it that Shaikh Din Muhammad was speaking in all good faith, but he almost certainly slipped in his language. The whole context both before and after refers to only one clause. I asked the honourable member if he could let me know what Sir Henry Craik himself said. I therefore wish to make it clear, to begin with, that no undertaking of any kind was given to this House. But in his speech before the Bill was referred to a select committee, Sir Henry Craik said—

"I stress the point because clause 2 of this Bill which gives the power to arrest suspected persons is designed to be used mainly, if not entirely against terrorists"—Punjab Debates, Volume XXII, page 72.

This is about clause 2 and there is nothing about clause 3 whatever. Again two pages later, Sir Henry Craik says :—

"There is however, one exception. I am afraid we shall have to continue to use the special powers of arrest in the case of terrorists."—ibid, page 75.

It is as clear as a pikestaff that such undertaking as was given related only to clause 2 of the Bill which is now section 2 of the Act. When I became Finance Member in succession to Sir Henry Craik, within two or three months, section 3 had to be brought into use. At that time I was given to understand through the ordinary Secretariat files that Government had given an undertaking that section 2 would only be used in the case of terrorists and anarchists. That was in 1934. From that date till this afternoon I had not the very slightest doubt upon the subject that any undertaking that was given related only to clause 2 and I am still perfectly satisfied that the undertaking referred to clause 2 only.

Shrimati Lekhwati Jain (North-East Towns, non-Muhammadan, Urban), (Urdu) : I am sorry to express my inability to support this Bill in its amended form. Although some changes have been introduced in it, such as instead of being a measure of permanent application it will remain in force only for five years, still I cannot see my way to support it. If you cut off a leg of an animal which is dangerous for human life does it mean that this amputation will make it harmless ? All the speakers who have made speeches in its favour have referred to the Shahidganj affair as an instance in which the situation was saved by the presence of this Act on the statute book. The Act would have been beneficial if in its presence the situation had not arisen at all. This Act only afforded an opportunity to the Government to save the situation by themselves shedding blood. Even if this act had not been on the statute book the Government would have succeeded in controlling the situation. The Government have got other means in addition to this to control such situations. Such laws instead of benefiting the public serve to crush them. I will request the honourable Sikh members that they should not support this measure because if to-day it has been applied against the Muslims in the Shahidganj affair it is quite possible that it may be applied against them at some future time in the event of some similar occurrence. We should not regard human beings as inferior in importance to brick and mortar. We should on the other hand respect human life and desist from helping the passage of such measures as the one now under consideration. The Honourable Finance Member gave four reasons for the necessity of placing this law on the statute book. He referred to the possibility of the revival of terrorism, or communalism or civil disobedience movement or the movement for the non payment of taxes. At present not one of these movements exists in any part of the country and as such it is unnecessary to pass this Bill. Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit has sufficiently dealt with the question of the revival of any of these movements. I need not dwell upon this point at length. I remember the fable of the tiger and the shepherd boy. A shepherd boy once was thinking to himself whether in the case of appearance of a tiger any one would respond to his cries or not. After some time it occurred to him to cry aloud to find out actually whether anybody responded to his cries or not. He cried aloud and people came running to him from all directions. By this response he was satisfied. But after some time a tiger actually appeared. He raised a hue and cry. But no one turned up. All the people in the neighbourhood thought that the shepherded boy was again trying to cut a practical joke at them. The tiger killed the boy and also killed many sheep. The same fable is true in the case of the Government, for, now when there is no danger it is trying to pass a measure which is quite unnecessary. No cases of terrorism or civil disobedience will occur in the future, as I am sure, to justify the application of this law. The people will get the idea that the Government is in the habit of framing unnecessary laws and then when actually some serious situation arises and Government seriously stands in need of some similar law no one would support it to pass that law. All will think that Government is in the habit of framing laws to apply them to some future imaginary dangers and that in reality it does not require any such law. No one will support it and the danger will involve it into difficulties. Then again, the Congress is thinking of entering the assemblies. Perhaps it may also decide in favour of accepting offices. If it made that decision, I am sure, then there would be absolutely no need for this law. A few members are favourably disposed towards this Bill and they are mostly those who are in favour of the Debtors Protection Bill. These honourable members are the favourite children of the Government. They can afford to do whatever they like. But it is the duty of the Government to see whether there is any justification for any such laws. It should see that laws which are detrimental for the public should not be passed. Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit had advised the Government to have confidence in the good sense of the members for if any situation demanding any such law arose they will certainly strengthen the hands of the Government with that law. I repeat his words and request Government to have confidence in the honourable members. The members of the Council will always support the Government in all good and honourable things. The members of the Council will always be there to meet the wishes of the Government whenever the latter require some new law to meet some new situation. This law is neither useful for ourselves nor for the Government. It will remain a dead letter for no situation requiring its application will ever arise. As such I request the Honourable Finance Member to withdraw this unnecessary Bill.

Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan (Jullundur, Muhammadan, Rural) (Urdu): I rise to oppose this Bill because it is harmful for both the Government and the people. A measure which will help neither the king nor his subjects should not be passed. If we look at the past history of our own country or for that matter any other country, we find that whenever any king passed cruel and oppressive laws, nature brought him to grief. For instance, look at the Czar of Russia. Whenever his subjects started any agitation, they were severely taken to task, and were sometimes trampled under horses. His armies paraded the streets at night. When he was fast asleep, nobody was allowed to make any noise. If in any village even a frog croaked, the village was destroyed. But at last the tyrant king was severely punished for his tyranny and the wretched Queen and princesses of the royal house worked in the theatres for their livelihood and passed their days in great misery. Whenever any king tried to oppress his people and tyrannized over them, he met with similar fate.

It is a hundred years since the English came into this country. Before that time India was ruled by the Muslims. The Mughals ruled here for 700 years. But when they began to make cruel laws, their rule came to an end and they were deprived of their kingdom. After them came the Sikhs but their rule vanished like a dream. Because they ruled also with oppressive laws. Therefore, if the present government also wants to bring its rule to an end, it may by all means pass such laws. This Bill also foreshadows such a state of things.

This law is the essence of high-handedness. It can arrest anybody and the accused will not be asked whether he has committed any offence or not. There are such provisions in the Bill that it becomes entirely worthless and those people who will get more power by this Bill are hopeless officers. They take shelter behind the provisions of a Bill and accept bribes from the people. With the help of such laws they take revenge on people on account of personal enmity and disgrace them. This is the only object of such measures. The officers of the government derive undue advantage from such laws. It is not proper for government to enact laws which may help the officers to take bribe, to take revenge on people, and to disgrace them. If I am to quote instances to show how the officers tease people and extort money from them, I think you, Mr. President, will not allow me to do so. At the time of the next budget session, I will show how these officers tease people and how they try to devour them. I would, however, advise the Government that it should refrain from passing such measures. The case of our government is just like a patient who is dying of pneumonia. His whole body is numb with cold and the doctor advises him that he should not take any cold water. My advice, too, may appear at this time like cold water, but in the long run it will prove extremely helpful and useful. This measure will be harmful for us because we are already slaves. When this law is passed we shall become worse than slaves. The Bill is meant to strengthen the chains of slavery. Government, by their words try to show that they are ready to give self-Government, but by their actions they are binding us to slavery.

In the palmy days of Islam there were also slaves, and some men were made slaves by the kings. But the Muslim kings treated them equally, took meals with them and made no distinction between man and man. This law like a magician can arrest any man wherever it likes, and can ruin his property. If these laws are used for agitators, there is no harm. But if any officer gets angry with anybody, he will be ruined. The object of any law is that the criminals should be punished and innocent people saved. But according to the provisions of this law it will not be easy to distinguish between a criminal and an innocent person, because no proof or evidence will be needed. Both of them will be easily punished and nobody will be able to bring forward any proof or evidence to show his innocence. Sir Henry Craik as Finance Member acknowledged that bribery was so rife in the various departments of Government that it was not possible to check it. Now they will get more power and they will naturally take more bribes. We are looked down upon in other countries because of our slavery. In England and America people refuse to shake hands with us, saying that we are slaves. If they come to know that in this country such laws are made, they will hate us all the more and will not let us even enter their country, lest we spoil their free atmosphere also. A law of this kind is highly degrading. I know that since the Government is bent upon getting this measure passed, it will be passed.

I am extremely pained to mention that when votes were taken on the motion relating to the Shahidganj mosque some Muslim members voted against it. But so far as this Bill is concerned, it will be passed even if the House does not pass it. I will, however, advise the Government to withdraw it. At the last session when this Bill was brought forward for discussion before this House, many parties opposed it, but on this occasion those parties are now with the Government because the Government has helped the Sikhs and the Hindus in connection with the Shahidganj affair. This amply shows how our mentality has been polluted. In this way they have killed our spirit and religious freedom. But another difficulty is that those officers who are strengthened with such laws do not use them properly. For instance, the Shahidganj mosque has been in possession of the Muslims for the last 150 years but during the Shahidganj agitation, this law helped the Sikhs and deprived the Muslims of their property. Moreover, in the face of this Bill the Muslims were fired upon and killed but the Sikhs jathas were neither killed nor fired upon. This law thus observed an invidious distinction. In the case of the Shahidganj agitation this law protected the Sikhs but did not afford any shelter to the Muslims. Therefore, I submit that this law is not properly used. In the presence of this law the Muslims have suffered a great deal. The Shahidganj agitation is a just and legitimate agitation. This law should not be applied to that case. In the Indian Penal Code there are sufficient provisions to deal with offenders according to which they can produce witnesses and offer defence. The Government's anxiety to pass this Bill reminds me of a story. Once a man was to be hanged. The noose was very small for him, as he was very fat he could not be hanged. It was therefore ordered that any man whom the noose fits may be hanged. It is not proper that laws should be passed by which innocent people should be punished along with the guilty.

I would suggest another method to Government by which it can stop agitations in this country. The people of India are poverty stricken and they find it very difficult to keep body and soul together. If Government will make some arrangement for their food and enable them to earn their livelihood, there will be no movements in this country. Whereas a labourer earns one pound or ten rupees in England the one in India hardly earns more than six pice; so our people are discontented. Therefore they fall an easy prey to the persuasions of those people who want for one reason or another, to continue agitations. I think the agitations are governed by one single rule, the more the hunger in a country the greater the number of agitations there. If there were no hunger in this unhappy country the Government would have no occasion to frame such rigid and harmful laws which bring only dishonour to the Government. We all know that this measure met with strenuous opposition in the Assembly which rejected it. But in this Council the circumstances are different; here there are people who would support any reasonable or unreasonable demand of the Government. So, in this Council the Bill may have an easy passage. But the Government should try to undersand that no other country of the world has enacted such laws. You will not come across such laws even in England. But the Government is adamant to thrust this measure on us. With these words, I strongly oppose this Bill.

Khan Sahib Chaudhri Riasat Ali (Gujranwala, Muhammadan, Rural): I did not think that there would be any necessity for discussing this question at such great length at this stage. We had sufficiently heard the arguments on both sides, both for the Bill and against it when we were considering the motion to take the Bill into consideration at once. We spent no less than three days in discussing this question. But in spite of your repeated rulings, Sir, arguments have been repeated on the floor of the House again to-day. I do not know how often the same arguments are going to be repeated and how often the same grounds are going to be covered over again. After all, there should be some limit to this, taking into consideration the value of the time of the House and the new agenda which we have got to go through during these two or three days. We should at least not repeat the arguments which have already been replied to.

There was one argument of Mr. Nanak Chand to-day which he did not advance the other day. He said that things should be allowed to die their natural death. That is an argument which if applied to other things cannot hold water for a single minute. It is impossible for us to wait till things die their natural death. Events do take place sometimes which require our immediate attention, which require us to seek certain remedies for certain diseases. When a man is suffering from a very severe disease, if that disease is to be allowed to die its natural death, surely the man will die sooner than the disease. Just as a disease unless it is checked will grow dangerous to human body, in the same way unless we place this measure on the statute book the present state of things may so develop and get so dangerous that it will destroy the peace and tranquillity of the province. Another point he urged was that we should bow to the voice of the people. He should remember that this Bill is being passed by this House in the ordinary way of legislation not only by the votes of the executive Government, alone, but by the votes of others who are representative of the masses no less than the honourable member for Hoshiarpur himself is. Therefore his argument that the voice of the people does not approve of this measure cannot stand. Another point that he urged was that he felt very much anxious about the Governor of the future constitution and the reserved powers of the Governor. In this respect I may say to him, "Let the Governor take care of himself. We need not interfere with the intricate question of responsibility of the Governor in the future constitution. Those people who will be placed at the head of the administration will be sufficiently experienced to cope with any situation which may arise in due course." The next point that he referred to was communalism. It is badly raging throughout the length and breadth of the province. He himself admitted it; but if he now says that communalism does not exist, the very recent debate which we had the other day on Shahidganj must show to what extent we are committed to the various communities to which we belong.

As long as this state of affairs continues, there must be some check placed in the hands of the Government if it is to carry on at all. Whatever the form of Government may be there must be some sort of legislation to rule the people. Even rules are required to govern society in its very infancy. Some sort of Government is required and no Government can go on unless it is armed with sufficient weapons to meet with any normal or abnormal circumstances. He said that we should not fetter in any way the future Government by placing this Act on our statute book. I would submit that we would be rather strengthening the future Government by putting this piece of legislation on our statute book. As I said the other day, when we are placing greater responsibilities on the shoulders of our Ministers, we must give them greater power to sustain that burden. Unless they are sufficiently armed with weapons, it is impossible for them to carry on the Government in the new constitution. The very fact that we pass a law like this is a sure proof of the fact that our future Government cannot go on unless they have sufficient powers to meet the situation.

Another thing which he said was that the Bill so far as it related to the law of meetings has been passed in the same form as it originally was at the time of the consideration. He forgets that section 2 at least in four different respects has been improved upon to meet his requirements. Originally, it was "any gazetted officer" who could arrest; now in all cases it is the Local Government which is to move first and then the ball is set rolling. Nobody on his own initiative, however, highly placed he may be, is given the power under the section as it now stands to arrest or take into custody any other man. Another thing and it is a very great improvement, is that the section is now only confined to two sorts of people, terrorists and communists. These are the words and none else will be proceeded against under this section, whereas previously anybody could be put under arrest. Another thing which goes a long way in the direction of improvement made in this Bill is that whereas under the old section anybody could have arrested anybody he liked, under the new section it is only the gazetted officer of the Government specially empowered under the Act who can arrest and keep a man in custody. Thus the Bill has been sufficiently toned down. Again the Bill had effect for all times, but now it is to be in force for only five years. Taking into consideration all these improvements I have proved that the Bill is more acceptable in its present form than it was before. One more argument was the one advanced by Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan. He said that unemployment is existing in the country and he urged very seriously therefore that we should find a remedy for it. That is an argument which supports the passing of this measure. Those people who cannot make two ends meet and those who are not working for their daily bread and butter can do any desperate act and commit any sort of crime at any time. The more hungry and the more needy the people are, the more apt they are to commit crimes like robbery, dacoity, etc. Therefore the very fact that such a state of affairs exists justifies the Bill in the form in which it is to-day before us and it must be passed. With these words I support the motion.

Chaudhri Ram Sarup (North-West Rohtak, non-Muhammadan, Rural) (Urdu): We have had sufficient discussion on this Bill; I do not, therefore, propose to deliver a lengthy speech at this stage. I have, however, to draw the attention of the House to one point and that is this. The Government has given, as it were, a free licence to corruption by proposing this Bill. I cannot understand the attitude of the Government. On the one hand it is seen advocating the policy of uprooting corruption in the services and on the other hand it is anxious to pass laws which will certainly loosen the flood-gates of corruption. In one of the sections of the proposed Bill it is contemplated to enact that if a Government officer honestly believes that a person is about to act in a manner prejudicial to the public safety he (i.e. Government officer) will be in a position to take any action against him which he may at that time think advisable. And no action will be taken against that official even if he may have acted against the law if it is proved that he was acting with the best of intentions. Now, the condition that the person in question may be acting with the best of intentions in order to escape an action against him is a mere pretext. This condition has been put in the section in order to give a pleasant shape to an otherwise abominable piece of legislation. (The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan: Question.) We all know that police officials are corrupt to the core and that in spite of the fact that the Government has time and again given sufficient assurances that if corruption charges against a police official come out to be true he will be severely dealt with. But the Government has given as it were a written permission to the police and other officials now that they will be able to continue in their corrupt practices with impunity. This is really deplorable. The Government has, I should say, put in the condition of good intention on the part of the Government officials, in order to escape the criticism which it knew would be levelled against the provision. We all know that if a person wants to indulge in some evil practice he demonstrates some salutary aspect of it also. So, the Government has put in the condition of a good intention in order to cover the other ugly features of the provision.

Of all the legislations so far passed by the Council, this Bill is unique in this respect that it gives unrestricted licence to the police which is already notorious for its highhandedness and which alone, in my opinion, is responsible for bringing a bad name to the Government. This Bill which is apparently intended to protect the life, honour and property of the public, will in actual practice prove an engine of oppression in the hands of these police officers who are accustomed to misusing their powers. We see every day these police officers acting in a very obnoxious way and we know that in a large number of cases they arrest innocent people and put them to so much inconvenience and trouble. I fear, therefore, that the police officers and particularly officers of the lower ranks will harass the public when armed with these powers which this Bill, and particularly this section in the Bill, gives them. I have, therefore, no choice left but to oppose this Bill.

Mr. President : The question is—

That the Punjab Criminal Law (Amendment) Bill be passed.

THE PUNJAB STATE AID TO INDUSTRIES BILL.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang (Minister for Local Self-Government): I beg to present the report of the select committee on the Punjab State Aid to Industries Bill and to move—

That the Punjab State Aid to Industries Bill as reported by the select committee be taken into consideration.

In moving this motion I do not consider it necessary to make any speech at all. I have been very lucky this time that this Bill has been welcomed in all parts of the House and, if I am not mistaken, this is perhaps the only Bill in considering which all the members of the select committee were unanimous. Out of 15 members who sat to consider this Bill, there is not one who has appended a note of dissent. I therefore think that it will not be necessary for the honourable members of this House to make long speeches over this Bill and that they will all realize that sooner they pass this into law, the better it would be for their province. With these words I commend this Bill to the House.

Mr. President: The question is—

That the Punjab State Aid to Industries Bill as reported by the select committee be taken into consideration.

The motion was carried.

Mr. President: The Council will now proceed to consider the Bill clause by clause.

Clause 1, sub-clause (2).

Mr. President: Question is—

That sub-clause (2) of clause 1 stand part of the Bill.

The motion was carried.

Clause 1, sub-clause (3).

Mr. President: Question is—

That sub-clause (3) of clause 1 stand part of the Bill.

The motion was carried.

Clause 2.

Mr. President: Question is—

That clause 2 stand part of the Bill.

The motion was carried.

Clause 3.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan (Ambala division, North-East, Muhammadan, Rural): I move—

That in clause 3, sub-clause (1) (c) the words "and two Muslims" be added after the words "expert" in the last line.

It is stated that there will be "4 members to be appointed by the Local Government one of whom shall be a banking expert," I want that after these words "2 Muslims" be added. Under this section the constitution of the board can be such as almost to eliminate Muslims, for instance, the Minister belongs to the Hindu community and so does the Director of Industries. In order to keep up a communal proportion there ought to be at least two Muslims on the board. As Muslims are very backward industrially, it is better to have their representatives in the board who can safeguard their interests and for this purpose two of them must be Muslims. With these words I move my amendment.

Mr. President : The question is—

That in clause 3, sub-clause (1) (c) the words "and two muslims" be added after the word "expert" in the last line.

The motion was lost.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan (Ambala division, North-East, Muhammadan, Rural) : I beg to move—

That in clause 3, sub-clause (1) (d), line 6, for the words "proportional representation" the words "representation in communal proportion" be substituted.

The words in the existing clause do not convey what proportion the Muslims are to form. I want these words to be added.

Mr. President : If the honourable member reads the clause after substituting the words proposed by him, he will find that it shall become meaningless. It would read—

Five members to be elected by the Punjab Legislative Council from among non-official members of the Council, election being in accordance with the principle of representation in communal proportion and by means of the single transferable vote.

Can representation in communal proportion be held or carried on by a single transferable vote?

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan : That is the method of election.

Mr. President : I disallow the amendment.

Mr. M. A. Ghani (Non-official, nominated) : I beg to move—

That in clause 3, sub-clause (1) the following be substituted for (e), (f) and (g) :—

- (e) Two members representing agricultural interests to be elected in such manner as the local Government may prescribe by rules made in this behalf ;
- (f) Two members representing industrial interests to be elected in such manner as the local Government may prescribe by rules made in this behalf ;
- (g) Two members representing labour to be elected in such manner as the local Government may prescribe by rules made in this behalf.

This amendment relates to the constitution of the board under this Act. In the original clauses (e), (f) and (g) it is stated that one member may be elected by the Northern India Chamber of Commerce and one member by the Indian Chamber of Commerce. My amendment is that instead of leaving the matter of electing the representatives of industrialists to these chambers, the local Government should prescribe rules by which the representatives of industrialists may be elected and then I want that agricultural interests should also be represented on this board. The Punjab is an agricultural province and there is no reason why the agricultural interests should not be represented.

Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath : Is there any province which is not agriculturist?

Mr. M. A. Ghani: I would like in every province agricultural interests to be represented. (Hear. hear.)

Then, finally, I want that labour should also be represented on this board. On this point, I would take a little bit of the time of the House to impress on the honourable members why labour should also be represented on this board. I understand, that, in the select committee, a proposal was made to this effect and the Honourable Minister was prepared to accept the proposal but the Legal Remembrancer objected to the proposal on the ground best known to him. I would draw the attention of the House to what the Whitely Commission, on page 462 of their Report said on this subject :—

Dealing first with the latter aspect of the question, we would observe that there are several directions in which the adequate representation of labour should benefit both itself and the community. In the first place, the presence of representatives able to voice the desires and aspirations of labour and to translate these into concrete proposals is essential for the proper consideration of measures specially affecting labour. But the welfare of labour does not depend purely on what may be called labour measures ; its good depends on the whole trend of policy and legislation.

The Report goes on :—

More adequate representation of labour is necessary for its protection in this respect and, if given the opportunity, organised labour can make a valuable contribution to the wise Government of the Commonwealth. Further, the proper representation of labour is itself educative ; the recognition of its claims as a part of the body politic will bring increased responsibility and a sense of unity with the community as a whole. Conversely, exclusion of labour from a fair share in the councils of the nation will inevitably drive it to rely unduly on other means of making itself felt, with injury to itself and to the nation. What we have stated is applicable to labourer generally both agricultural and industrial and those who have to deal with the representation of labour in detail will no doubt have regard to the whole field.

The Royal Commission on Labour was dealing here with the question of the representation of labour in the legislatures. But they have in so many words laid down that in other spheres also the representation of labour is good both for the Government and for the community as a whole. I would therefore submit that it is very essential that on this industrial board at least two members of labour should be secured.

As I said when this Bill was first moved by the Honourable Minister, there are several factory-owners in this province who do not pay any regard to the interests of their workers. There is no doubt that there is a Factory Act and there are rules made under it. But the factory-owners somehow try to evade the law and the rules. If there is proper representation of labour on this board, the presence of the labour representatives would in itself have a healthy check on this sort of factory-owners. This will, in itself, make them to some extent, treat their workers in accordance with human dictates of justice and equity.

If this amendment is carried then all the interests in this province would be represented, two for agriculture, two for industry and two for labour, and this is only fair and just. I hope that the amendment will commend itself to all parts of the House and that it will be carried. With these words, I move my amendment.

Mr. President : Clause under consideration, amendment moved—

That in clause 3, sub-clause (1) the following be substituted for (e), (f) and (g)—

- (e) Two members representing agricultural interests to be elected in such manner as the local Government may prescribe by rules made in this behalf;
- (f) Two members representing industrial interests to be elected in such manner as the local Government may prescribe by rules made in this behalf;
- (g) Two members representing labour to be elected in such manner as the local Government may prescribe by rules made in this behalf.

Rai Bahadur Mr. P. Mukerjee (Punjab Chamber of Commerce and Trades Association, Commerce) : The object of the mover of the amendment is that labour should be properly represented on the board. To that I can have no objection. But I should seriously object to the remark which the honourable member made that in this province owners of factories did not take so much care of their labour as they should do. Perhaps I might remind the honourable member that no country in the world has accepted so many conventions adopted by the International Labour Conference as India has done, and it is well known that in the matter of the amelioration of the condition of labour this province has done much.

As regards the proposal for the representation of industry on the board, the Government has rightly decided that one member should be nominated from the Punjab Chamber of Commerce, one member from the Northern India Chamber of Commerce and one from the Indian Chamber of Commerce. The underlying object is admittedly that organized industrial interests should be represented on this board. And there is no doubt that if there is any organized body representing industrial interests in this province it is the Punjab Chamber of Commerce and the Northern India Chamber of Commerce. I therefore object to the amendment moved by the honourable member nominated to represent labour.

Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath (Punjab Landholders General) : I think the honourable mover of the amendment has not carefully read clause 15 of the Bill in which the duties of the board are specified. I do not understand how in reporting on an application for State aid agricultural or labour interests differ from those of the applicants or from those of capitalists. The second sub-clause provides that the duties of the board is also to advise the local Government on any matter that may be referred to it. If such matters relate to questions connected with labour, Government is naturally expected to consult labour unions. But if a matter has nothing to do with labour, then, the body to be consulted is the board and I do not see how it is possible to discriminate between labour and agricultural or industrial interests in matters which will come up before the board. I therefore think that the honourable mover is unnecessarily imagining a conflict of interest which does not exist. I oppose the amendment because it is absolutely unnecessary.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram (South-East Rohtak, non-Muhammadan, Rural) : I am a little surprised by the remarks which have been made by Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath. He served, I think, for over thirty years under Government in very responsible positions and his duties as an officer of Government must have brought him into close contact with agricultural interests and agricultural classes. He has been serving with great distinction in this House for the last fifteen years and it is really nothing short of surprise that he should have the hardihood to say that there is no conflict of interest between labour and capital, that there is no conflict of interest at any stage. (Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath : In matters coming before the board). No list of the matters which are likely to come up before the board has been placed before the House and even in the absence of such a list it can be easily imagined that there is and there is likely to be a conflict of interest between industrialists and labour. There may be occasions when there is likely to be a conflict between agricultural and industrial interests. In all programmes of industrial expansion there are bound to be two sides. Labour has a direct interest in the expansion of industry and industrialists have also a direct interest in it. But there are frequent disputes as to mutual relations which should exist between labour and capital, between factory-owners and workers. So that not only on one point but on a number of points the conflict of interests is bound to arise. And it is only in the fitness of things that representation should be granted to labour.

With regard to the representation of agricultural interests also I have to suggest one or two things. Agricultural interests require to be represented because in all expansion of industries one thing should be borne in mind. If possible and whenever possible, attempts should be made to inter-connect industries which are to be state aided with agriculture. If agricultural interests are not represented on this board then it is just possible that the interests of agriculture may be entirely ignored and only such industries may receive State aid as have either nothing to do with agriculture or have very little to do with it. What I wish to secure is that in all forms of State aid given to industries and in the types of industries which are selected for State aid this factor should be borne in mind. Along with other provinces in India the Punjab is an agricultural province and is presumably more agricultural than almost any other province of this country. Therefore it is obviously necessary that agricultural interest should be adequately represented on this board.

Another ground which makes me press this amendment upon the attention of the House is that under the present scheme of taxation provincial revenues are drawn mostly from the pockets of the land-owning classes and they have a very deep interest, a very deep and abiding interest in seeing, that provincial revenues are not frittered away on the expansion of industries which are in no way beneficial to agriculture or which are likely to result in failure or which are of doubtful utility.

A third reason which I wish to urge is that industrial representation should not be confined to these three bodies. After all 5 P.M. who knows how many more organized industrial associations may grow up in the province during the course of five or ten years? Why should these three bodies alone be selected for electing the industrial representatives to this board? Again, some of these organizations may disappear. They may amalgamate. Therefore it would be, I think, unwise to confine the right of election to these three chambers alone. On these grounds, Sir, I urge that the amendment proposed by Mr. Ghani should be accepted.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang (Minister for Local Self-Government): I sympathise with the motives which have prompted this amendment, but I venture to submit that this amendment is absolutely uncalled for. There is no necessity for it, and I shall explain it in a couple of minutes. I think that the apprehensions entertained by some of the members that agricultural interests or interests of labour may not be adequately represented on this board are entirely unfounded. We are on the threshold of a new constitution and every one knows that under the new constitution the number of members of this Council would be 175, out of whom there would be about 160 representatives of agriculture. Even the present constitution of the Council would show that there is not only a sufficient representation of agricultural interests but there is overwhelming representation of agricultural interests. The number of members of the new Assembly is going to be more than double but even if the urban people are to be supposed to be non-agriculturists and not very sympathetic towards agriculture, the urban representation is not going to be even one tenth of the total strength of the Assembly. If I am not mistaken—I speak subject to correction—there will be not more than 15 members from urban area, in the new Assembly. So that the number of members who represent agricultural interests would be round about 160, and even if we deduct some seats which may be captured by urban people in the rural areas, the number of representatives of agriculture in the new Assembly would still be overwhelmingly large. If you look at the constitution of this board you will find that although expressly no mention has been made of the representatives of agriculture or of labour, there are provisions in clause 3 which amply provide for the nomination, selection and election of representatives of agriculture and also of labour.

The first member of this board will of course be the Minister in charge. It is not necessary that the Minister in charge of industries should be urban. It is very likely or at least as likely as not that the Minister in charge of industries in future would be a representative of agriculturists. Then so far as the Director of Industries is concerned, he may or may not be a representative of the agriculturists. It is very likely that he will be. As regards the provision under sub-clause (c), and this is very important and I draw the particular attention of the honourable members to it, these four members are to be appointed by the local Government, one of whom shall be a banking expert. This leaves room for three other members to be appointed by the local Government and these three members may be all agriculturists or labour men. If you are just fair and can take a dispassionate view, of the Government that is going to come into existence in this province or even of the Government which is now in existence you cannot but agree with me that far from being anti-zamindar or anti-agriculturist or indifferent to agriculturists or to agricultural interests, it will be, as it is, pre-eminently pro-zamindar. (An honourable member: Question.) There is hardly an occasion when the Government has not gone out of its way to show sympathy to the zamindars, study their interests and come to their rescue whenever any difficulty or hardship has arisen. (An honourable member: Question). But leaving the present Government aside which is only like the candle that is burning towards the end of the night, the new Government is, as I pointed out, going to be entirely an agricultural government with a sprinkling of non-agricultural interests. I am referring to this because the Government will have the power of nominating four members of this Board, and there is no reason to suppose that the Government that is either in existence at present or is going to come into existence in future will not study the interests of the agricultural communities.

Then we have five members to be elected by this Council or by the new Assembly. Can you suppose that out of those five members who are to be elected by 175 members out of whom round about 160 would be representatives of agriculture, sufficient representation will not be given to agriculturists? I think it is shutting one's eyes to very glaring facts, if one is to suppose for a moment that out of 160 members adequate representation, more than adequate representation, will not be given to the representatives of agriculture. In fact, I expect that all the five members might be representatives of agriculture, if one is to judge from the complexion of voters who are going to select them. That leaves only three members who will not be under the control of agriculturists. That is the numbers referred to in (e), (f) and (g). Out of these three, I think  $1\frac{1}{2}$  members may be Hindu non-agriculturists and  $1\frac{1}{2}$  may be Europeans. That is, one will probably be always a Hindu and out of the other two one may be a European and one may be a trader whether he is a Hindu or a European. Even here I am not absolutely sure that it will always be a Hindu non-agriculturist or a Muslim non-agriculturist who would be returned. There is no reason why these chambers, as trade and commerce progresses among zamindars, should not return a zamindar himself. Here is my honourable friend, Sardar Habib Ullah Khan. He is a zamindar of zamindars and you cannot say that he is not a true representative of the zamindars, and yet, if I am not mistaken he is the Vice-Chairman of the Indian Chamber of Commerce. There is no reason to suppose that in the board that is to be constituted there will be an undue proportion of non-agriculturists, or people who are opposed to agriculture or labour interests. In fact I am convinced of this as one can be convinced of anything that this board will be pre-eminently a representative of agriculturists and there will be more agriculturist members on this board than non-agriculturists.

I do not subscribe to the proposition advanced by the mover of this motion that in this province or in the United Provinces—at least I can speak of these two provinces—the interests of labour are neglected. I think it is more or less a slur and an uncalled for and undeserved slur on the factory owners in this province that they are oblivious of the interests of the labourers. It is in their own interest that those who work in their factories should keep excellent health; it is in their own interest that they should be well-fed; it is in their own interest that they should be well housed; and it is in their own interest that medical aid should be given to them when there is illness amongst them, so that they may be absolutely fit and well equipped for the hard work that they have to do in the factories. It will be suicidal for any factory to disregard the comforts and the interests of the labourers who work in those factories, and I am compelled to say that the mover of this motion is really not conversant with the state of affairs in those factories, otherwise I am sure he would not have made the remarks that he has made.

There are labour laws in the country which govern the relations between the factory owners and the labourers, and every day more and more attention is being paid to these labour laws and the lot of labourers is being improved from day to day. Only recently the Factories Act has been amended and very salutary amendments have been introduced into it. So that there is absolutely no apprehension, reasonable apprehension, that the interests of labour would be ignored or the interests of the agriculturists would be ignored. I would appeal to the honourable members opposite not to introduce any sort of class distinction in this measure. It is a measure which is intended to benefit all, and in fact my regret is that I was not successful in placing it earlier before you and now that it has been placed before you, let it be as clean as possible, without any inter-mixture either of communal or class poison, because I believe in my heart of hearts that so far as this Bill is concerned there is no intention of ignoring the claims or rights or the interests of any community or any class whatever. If you glance at the nature of the work that this board will be called upon to do, you will be convinced that it is not people who will be mere ploughmen given to agriculture alone who will be able to give advice to Government which might be of any use to it.

Reference was made to clause 15. Therein you will find that the functions of the board will be to report to the local Government after such enquiry, if any, as it deems necessary or may be required by this Act, on applications for State aid that may be referred to it for advice by the local Government, and to advise the local Government on any matters that may be referred to it. To give sound advice it is necessary that there should be men chosen not because they belong to this caste or that caste, or to this community or that community, but men whether they are agriculturists or non-agriculturists who can be expected to give the best advice to Government, so that the money which rightly belongs to the people should be properly utilised and not in any way wasted.

The honourable member for Rohtak has given two or three reasons in support of this motion. One thing that he pointed out was that there is no list of matters that may come up before the board. I have read out the clause before the House, in which reference is made to the kind of matters which would be placed before the board. That is a sufficient indication to show that in order to give valuable advice on such matters, it is necessary that people not only living on land or understanding land questions, but those who understand industrial and commercial questions also, should be placed on this board. Otherwise the board will not be worth anything. Then again, he said that land revenue comes mostly from the zamindars, and therefore it is necessary that special representation should be given for that class. Here I am reminded of the poet's words —

ساخته است که را از کس

[Hon. Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang.]

It is not every kind of work, every kind of business, that every kind of man can understand or make a success of. Therefore, it is not as a kind of quid pro quo for the land revenue that you pay to Government that you should ask for special representation on the board. I have already pointed out that there is absolutely no apprehension that the representation of agriculturists on this board will not be adequate.

Another point that the Chaudhri Sahib suggested was that there was no guarantee that these chambers would continue intact. They may amalgamate and create a confusion or they may go out of existence or some new ones may come into existence. That does not matter. If any of these things happens Government has the power to equalise and to make up the deficiency of any interest which cannot be adequately represented on this board, if any such circumstances arise. It is for this reason that power has been reserved in this clause to Government for nominating as many as four members. I do not think, therefore, that honourable members should insist upon this amendment. I do not want to take up any more time of the Council. I trust that honourable members will see reason and not press the amendment.

Khan Sahib Chaudhri Riasat Ali (Gujranwala, Muhammadan, Rural): I am sorry to say to begin with that the argument given by the Honourable Minister is based more on conjectures than on facts. Everything is contingent on something happening, this "may be" and that "may not be." But we are confronted with what "should be" and what "is". He says that he has the greatest sympathy with this amendment, but even this sympathy does not go farther than mere lip sympathy. This reminds me of a Punjabi proverb—

پنجان د کھنڈا سو متھے لے-پر نالہ اوتھے دا اوتھے

I do not think it is possible to translate it into English exactly, but for the benefit of some honourable members I shall try to explain what it means. A certain sort of jhagra was referred to a board of elders of a village. The question was whether a spout of a certain house should be fixed here or there. The whole of the elders of the village collected together and suggested that it should be shifted from its present place to another. Now, the man whose house it was where the spout was to be fixed said, 'I must bow down to the decision of the elders, but the spout will remain where it is.' I do not know wherein lies the need for this lip sympathy, when the Honourable Minister is not prepared to move an inch from the position which he originally has taken in this clause.

Another objection which I have got is, when the Honourable Minister has admitted the principle, why should he have a different opinion when we come to details? If you refer to the clause itself, you will find that sub-clauses (c), (d), (e) and (f) specify what classes of people will be represented on this board. This shows that the Honourable Minister himself does not believe in the good-will or good sense of the local Government or of the Legislative Council. He himself prefers that so many should be taken from this interest and so many from that interest and so on. When he himself admits the principle, why should he differ from us on a question of detail? First of all I do not believe that there will be as many as 160 agriculturists or the so-called agriculturists in the new Council. From our experience we can see that these rural seats will fall an easy prey to the urbanites who call themselves agriculturists, but who are not really agriculturists. I do not want to refer to personalities, otherwise I can cite instances where the urbanites have captured rural seats in this very Council. I therefore do not believe that the agriculturists will be in a majority in the new Council to the extent of 160. Further, granting that the agriculturists will be in a majority in the next constitution, I submit that that is the very reason why a greater number of their representatives should be on this board. The class which is in a majority must have majority representation on any future board which may be constituted under any Act.

The next point referred to by the Honourable Minister is that he depends on the future local Government to nominate people from the class of agriculturists. He also says that the majority should not trample upon the rights of the minority. Does he consider then, that the future Government will be such that it will always give every sort of power, every sort of representation and right to the agriculturists alone? It will have to look to the interests of all sections and communities, agriculturists or non-agriculturists, Hindus, Sikhs or Muhammadans. It cannot therefore be expected to be so unreasonable that it will nominate all the members for this board from one class only, that is, the agriculturists. Therefore this argument of the Honourable Minister does not hold good. Another point that he referred to was that we should not impart any class distinction in this measure. But such a distinction has already been imparted; because what else is it when you say that class A will represent such and such an interest, class B such and such other interests, and so on? It is only in the matter of detail that we differ. We only suggest that one more class be added to the classes referred to in sub-clauses (a), (b), (c), etc. The class distinction is already there in this measure, and what we suggest is that one more class may be represented there in the board, the class which is always ignored. A further argument advanced by the Honourable Minister was that we should have only those people who can give sound advice. I do not know why the agriculturists should be debarred from giving any advice on a subject covered by this Bill while they have successfully officiated in the highest offices in the country, I refer to men like Sir Zafrulla Khan, you yourself, Mr. President, Mian Sir Fazl-i-Husain, and Sir Sikander Hyat Khan, who even acted as Governor of the Punjab for some time. With such eminent agriculturists in the province, I am surprised how the Honourable Minister considers that the agriculturists would not come up to the standard required under this petty Bill. I think the agriculturists can perhaps give sounder advice than the people who may represent the Chambers of Commerce. The Honourable Minister presumed that the people who belong to the interests proposed to be represented by Mr. Ghani's amendment will be the only people who will be elected by the Council. Why then can he not trust the Council for the representation of those who are mentioned in sub-clauses (e), (f) and (g)? If we can depend on the goodwill of the future Government and the good-will of the future Legislative Council for securing the representation in the board of the interests sought to be represented by the amendment of Mr. M. A. Ghani, can we not depend on the same body for the representation of the other interests referred to in the clause? I think I have sufficiently made out a case for the acceptance of the amendment, and I trust the Council will accept it. (Cheers.)

Chaudhri Asadullah Khan (Sialkot, Muhammadan, Rural): Nearly all the points that I wished to talk about have been already dealt with by the honourable member for Gujranwala, and there is hardly anything for me to speak about. But there is one rather minor point to which I would like to refer. The Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government said that the fact that the agriculturists paid most of the Government revenue was not a reason why they should be given representation on the board. Are the poor agriculturists only to fill the coffers of Government and have no right to control the expenditure thereof? I should think that the Government should have been the first to say that because the agriculturists contribute most towards the income of Government, therefore whenever the question of spending it arises, they should be the first to be consulted. With these words I strongly support the amendment.

Professor W. Roberts (Non-official, nominated): I wish to oppose the amendment because I think that in a matter of this kind, the industrial development of the province, we should try to forget all divisions whether of caste or of wealth or of origin, and all should work together to make this province a real factor in the industrial development of India. (Hear, hear.) It would be a great mistake for the party on this side to force an issue here, because the number of special representatives are only three out of a total of twelve; four being nominated by the Government and the remaining five being elected by this Council. These three are to be selected not merely because they are themselves industrial or commercial people but because they will have behind them the opinions of their Chambers as well. I think it will be a retrograde measure if this House refuses to accept the Honourable Minister's suggestions. I may say that I myself at first examined this Bill very jealously hoping to be able to criticise it from the very aspect that my friends here have been doing and I came to the conclusion that it has been worked out and put forward very fairly indeed. I, therefore, do not lend my support to the amendment.

Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan (Jullundur, Muhammadan, Rural) (Urdu): I have stood up to support the proposal made by my honourable friend, Mr. M. A. Ghani. We all know that the Department of Industries has been the home of nepotism under the present Minister. The learned Doctor Sahib has always acted upon the ignominious principle of favouritism, and as the Punjabi proverb goes انہاں واذے شہرینیاں مچ مچ رہی ہیں he has always bestowed all the blessings of the Industrial Department on his own favourites, who belong to the Hindu community. So, I should like the Government to see to it that in future the administration of the proposed Act is not entrusted exclusively to officers like the learned Doctor Sahib, Mr. S. Pratab and Rai Bahadur Arjan Dass, who never have failed to ignore the rights of Muslims. However, if the Government wants to see the Muslims wiped out of existence and their mosques or other sacred places demolished, it may well entrust the administration of this Act to the men I have just named.

Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath : I strongly object to these words.

Mr. President : I cannot allow a speech like this.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit : The honourable member should withdraw those words.

Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan : Very well, Sir, I withdraw them. The labourers are poor people. We must make provision for their adequate representation on the board. Most of the labourers come from zamindar classes; they have therefore our entire sympathy. They have a very small political party in this country and this is why they have not an adequate representation in this House also. It is our duty, therefore, to look to their interests. The learned Doctor Sahib has time and again pointed out in this House that he is always anxious to help his community. Why should we not help these poor labourers who belong to our community of zamindars? If this is not done, the labourers and zamindar stand to lose very much.

Sardar Sahib Sardar Ujjal Singh (Sikh, Urban) : I want to make one or two observations on this point. I quite agree with Mr. Roberts that there should be no conflict of interests in a matter of this kind. A board constituted on this very important matter has got to deal with industrial matters. The Honourable Minister has told the House, that the idea was that out of the five elected members from this House agricultural interests will find representation. But as there is an apprehension expressed on the floor of this House, there is no harm if by some method agricultural interests are directly represented. In similar Acts in some other provinces, for example, the Director of Agriculture is a member of the board. We have not made that provision in our Bill. Out of the two members who have been suggested by the mover of this amendment, one may be the Director of Agriculture, and the other, a member either elected or nominated by the Government. Coming to labour, the idea that prevailed in the select committee was that out of the four members to be nominated by the Government, one might represent labour interests. In other provinces also, in the Central Provinces and Bombay Acts, labour is represented and there is no harm if one representative of labour is also put on the board. (The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : Are you sure?) Yes, in the Central Provinces, as a matter of fact, all members representing labour constituencies in the Legislative Council are members of the board. But in Bombay only one labour member is represented on the board. In Bengal there is no representative of labour. There is no harm if one member representing labour is placed on the board, but I would rather leave it to the Government to nominate a labour representative than that labour representative should be elected. But in that case the membership of the board will be enhanced by two or three, and, in my opinion, this board should not be unwieldy. In fact in the original Bill the membership was restricted to 11 and it was increased to 14 in the select committee. If a separate member for labour is to be provided for on the board, then I think the number to be nominated by the Government should be reduced to three. For industry, however, three members ought to remain, because, as Mr. Roberts has pointed out, three chambers of commerce will have their considered opinion represented on the board, and that member who will be on the board will not be expressing his own views, but he will be placing before the board the considered opinion of the three chambers.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri (Punjab Industries): The functions of this board have been entirely ignored in pressing for nomination of various interests. When it is recognised that the functions of this board are purely advisory, unnecessary importance is being attached to its constitution, and attempts to due representation of classes is entirely useless. The important thing that we have to secure is that in this matter we should get a board of "experts", and if that point is ignored, it does not matter whether the board consists of labourites, depressed classes, or agriculturists, or other favoured classes. If you look at the clause you will find that this is the only clause which provides for the representation of some experts. We all know the manner in which unfortunately the Legislative Council usually elects members on various committees. The Legislative Council has to elect five members for the board. There is no provision that they or any of them should be experts, nor is there any provision that the nomination by the Government with the exception of one member should be of experts. I can assure you by experience that the representatives selected by the Punjab Legislative Council will not be experts. They may be persons who know nothing of industry. Again, as I have already said, out of four members to be nominated by the Punjab Government—only one is an expert. The other three may be some other influential members of the Legislative Council. In a board of the kind which the Bill contemplates, it is absolutely necessary that there should be provision for representation of industrial interests and for experts. It is immaterial if people who are learned in other branches of human experience do find a place there or not, however great their importance in the state. Therefore if you omit this clause you may just as well have a board for local self-government or a board for rural uplift; it will not be a board for industry. There should have been a definite provision, for you should have greater minimum representation of experts laid down in the statute. In fact I sent in an amendment proposing that instead of the word "members" the word "experts" might be substituted where the Punjab Government have to nominate four members. But unfortunately that amendment was not moved inasmuch as I thought that the proposals of the Government were pitched so low that from the industrial point of view they would command the acceptance of the House. Therefore, the proposals of the Government as they are, do not guarantee the minimum expert advice, which this board should possess. I should have liked, for instance, that the Principal or a selected professor of MacLagan Engineering College; the Principal or a professor of Agricultural College, Lyallpur. Professor of Chemistry of Punjab University, should be ex officio members. But that has not been done. Again, the board has only to advise what industries can be successfully introduced in this province with profit to the industrialists as well as to the whole of the province. If this board consists of ignorant or indifferent persons, if it is constituted on lines that there should be so many Muslims, so many Hindus, so many Sikhs, or so many agriculturists, and so many artisans, you are defeating the very object of constituting a board of this kind and rendering the proposed legislation nugatory. This is certainly not the spirit in which an attempt to help the industries of the province should be commenced. If you want to secure really good and competent advice to the future Government, this House should insist that experts alone should be members of this board; in fact, men outside the Legislative Council should be invited and requested to undertake this public duty. After all these representatives of the chambers of commerce will be doing a public duty at considerable sacrifice of time to the prejudice of their other duties. They will be invited to give the benefit of their ripe experience, and it is a matter of surprise that instead of encouraging these persons to undertake these duties with enthusiasm, it is proposed that they should not be appointed at all. I submit that the amendment should not be accepted.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : The amendment moved by me was so innocent and so harmless that I never thought that the representatives of capitalists and big bellies would have the hardihood to oppose it. I was simply surprised that these representatives always expressed sympathy for the poor people, but their sympathy is nothing but mere lip sympathy. In the heart of hearts they are perfectly anti-labour and they want to crush the labour interests and to trample their rights under their feet. A demonstration of this mentality has just been exhibited on the floor of this House. It is a very deplorable thing indeed. I said that my amendment was very harmless and innocent. In my amendment I never ignored the industrial interests. I said in my amendment, let there be two representatives of industrial interests. (An honourable member : Out of thirteen?) They, capitalists, may say that they wanted three representatives instead of two. I do not want that the board should be unwieldy. By my amendment I want to give power to the Government to make rules for the election of the representatives of the three different interests by their respective bodies. When certain members opposed the Criminal Law (Amendment) Bill, the Government accused them for not giving sufficient powers to the Government. But when a humble man like myself want to entrust it to the Government to make such rules as they like for the representation of interests, even then the Government oppose the amendment. It is said that it is very essential that the three chambers should have at least one representative each. Let the Government, by virtue of the power of making rules, provide this very thing. The two representatives of Industry can be elected by the two chambers of commerce, one by the Northern India Chamber of Commerce and the other by the Punjab Chamber of Commerce. The whole thing is achieved by the Government. As regards the Indian Chamber of Commerce, I would refer to my learned friend who represents commerce, I mean Rai Bahadur Mr. P. Mukerjee, who gave evidence before the Hammond Committee in September last, as regards the franchise of industries. There he stated this in so many words. I was present in the Committee. He stated that the Indian Chamber of Commerce was a bogus body and that it was a misnomer to call it a chamber of commerce.

Rai Bahadur Mr. P. Mukerji : Question. I did not say anything of the sort.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : It is a wrong statement. I was myself present there and he did not say a word of that sort.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : I am referring to his statement.

Mr. President : Has the honourable member got a copy of the statement ?

Mr. M. A. Ghani : The statement was made in my presence.

Mr. President : The honourable Mr. Mukerji denies it.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit : Then does the honourable member for labour withdraw it ?

Mr. President : The honourable member should withdraw.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : I withdraw. These three bodies are not registered bodies at all. We do not know what is their number and what is their strength and who are the members of these bodies.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : That is a wrong statement.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : I say that these three bodies are perfectly bogus bodies.

Rai Bahadur Mr. P. Mukerji : Is the honourable member in order in saying that ?

Mr. President : I have already requested the honourable members to be sure of their facts.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit : Is not the word " bogus " unparliamentary ?

Mr. M. A. Ghani : Nobody can say that these three bodies will exist so long as this Act will exist. Now, the Northern India Chamber of Commerce may be dissolved tomorrow, the Punjab Chamber of Commerce may become defunct tomorrow, and the Indian Chamber of Commerce may go to dogs tomorrow, and their places may be taken up by some other bodies. My point is that it is better for the Government to frame rules in this respect. Supposing the Northern India Chamber of Commerce were to become defunct, would the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government come here and move an amendment to this section that the Indian Chamber of Commerce has become defunct therefore clause (e) should be deleted and some other body should be substituted for this Chamber ? It is therefore that I say that it is necessary for good legislation that power should be given to the Honourable Minister to make rules in this respect. The Government can make rules and amend them and change them at any time it likes, but it is very difficult to come to this House with an amendment and to have it given effect to. This will waste the time of the legislature and will increase the expenditure of the province. Therefore I would like that the hands of the Government be strengthened on this score. I am a nominated member and it is my duty to support the Government and strengthen their hands, and I therefore want to give Government more power in this respect. Let them make any sort of rules they like.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit : Who will be the labour representative ?

Mr. M. A. Ghani : That will depend upon the rules framed by the Government. Then the Government stands committed for the support of the proper representation of labour. I refer to the memorandum submitted by the Punjab Government to the Whitely Commission in which they have said in so many words,

Mr. President : Has the honourable member got a copy of the memorandum referred to by him ?

Mr. M. A. Ghani : No, but I remember the report. Then, it is dinned into our ears by every member of the Government and by the members of this House that they have got greatest possible sympathy for labour. As I have already said, this is a mere lip sympathy which they have expressed. This is the time to prove their sympathy and their sincerity which they have always expressed from house tops. Whenever there is a question of representing labour they oppose it, and they say they have got every sympathy for labour and that they are doing this or that for labour. (Interruption). As I am advised to stop my speech, as most of the members are eager to go away—

Mr. President : Who has advised the honourable member to cut short his speech ?

Mr. M. A. Ghani : I am not saying about you. I am talking about honourable members. I would respectfully submit to all members of this Council and especially to the Government that they should support this amendment. Government always wants more powers and I am giving them more power. The Government always sympathises with the aspirations of labour and I want them to give a practical proof of their sympathy on the floor of this House by supporting this amendment. One or two points were raised by the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government. He is a capitalist of capitalists. He has got a capitalistic mentality.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : I am a labourer.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : Oh ! In his own factory the lot of the labourer is simply deplorable.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : This is absolutely untrue.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : It is absolutely true.

Mr. President : The honourable members should not be personal.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : Then it is said that out of the four members to be appointed by the Local Government, one shall be a representative of banking interests, but with the mentality that has been exhibited on the floor of this House, we are not sure whether a labour member will be nominated to the board. There is no guarantee in these two clauses that labour interests would be represented on this board. If the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government were to give me an assurance that out of these four representatives, two representatives of labour and two representatives of agriculturists would be nominated by him and his successors, I am prepared to withdraw my amendment. With these words I would commend this amendment to the support of the House.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : I think it has already been explained by me that there is plenty of scope for the representation of all interests, and Government is not expected to be partial towards one section of the community or another. The honourable members may rest assured that in making these nominations Government will certainly see that almost all interests are properly represented, the chief thing and the only thing being what is in the best interests of industries, because we are dealing with an industries Bill and that will be the main consideration. Much has been said about lip sympathy and so on. If the honourable members were a little more fair they would have realised that this Bill is in itself an expression and manifestation not of lip sympathy but of real sympathy. It is only the blind who will not see that when industries develop, the labourers stand to gain. If there are no factories, there is no work. There is no employment when factories are closed. Whenever there is slump in business, there is unemployment in every country and the labourers cannot get employment. It is not by turning out graduates, who cannot get employment in Government offices, but by multiplication of factories that unemployment can be checked. It is for this reason that many countries, when there is a slump in business, go off the gold standard, so that the goods manufactured by them may be sold cheaper to the foreign countries with the result that the factories again begin to show signs of activity and bustle, and there is a great reduction in unemployment. During the last two or three years, people in Great Britain must have themselves seen this. It is only people who do not understand things about which they talk, who make unfair distinction between factory owners and labourers. Labourers are like children to them and they are as interested in their welfare as in their own. Those people must be absolute fools who do not help labourers and watch their interests, because nothing would be more suicidal than ignoring the best interests of labourers. I would refer to one point more and that is that there is great difficulty in creating a constituency for labour. If the Reforms Commissioner had been a member of this House, he might have told you the great difficulty in forming a constituency for labour. It does not mean that there would be no representative of labour. As I have pointed out the House should rest assured that all interests would be properly represented with due regard to the interests of industries, (hear, hear).

POPULATION OF JULLUNDUR DISTRICT.

*5134. Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan : Will the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government kindly state—

- (a) the population of each community showing zamindars (statutory agriculturists) and non-zamindars, respectively, in the Jullundur district;
- (b) the total amount of salary paid to the employees of each community respectively, according to their being zamindars (statutory agriculturists) and non-zamindars, in the Jullundur district board;
- (c) the total amount of land revenue paid by Muslim and Sikh zamindars, respectively, in the Jullundur district?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : It is regretted that the reply is not yet ready.

POST OF SUB-REGISTRAR, JULLUNDUR.

*5135. Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan : Will the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government kindly state—

- (a) the communal proportion of sub-registrars in the Jullundur district ;
- (b) whether it is a fact that the post of Sub-registrar, Jullundur, fell vacant recently ;
- (c) whether it is a fact that there is a paucity of Muslims in this branch of the service ;
- (d) whether it is a fact that a number of Muslims applied for this post ;
- (e) if the answer to (d) above be in the affirmative, whether a Muslim has been appointed to this post ; if not, why not ?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : (a) —

|          |    |    |    |    |          |
|----------|----|----|----|----|----------|
| Muslims  | .. | .. | .. | .. | 1 post.  |
| Sikhs .. | .. | .. | .. | .. | 4 posts. |

(b) Yes.

(c) In the Punjab, the Muslims are holding 40 per cent. appointments.

(d) Yes.

(e) No. The sub-registrar's office at Alawalpur is, as recommended by the deputy commissioner and commissioner, going to be abolished and amalgamated with the office at the headquarters and the Sub-registrar of Alawalpur will be put in charge.

Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan (Urdu) : The answers to my questions may kindly be given in Urdu.

Mr. President (to Assistant Secretary) : Please ask the honourable member, under what standing order or rule is the President empowered to have answers to questions translated.

Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan (Urdu) : The fact that I do not know English is a sufficient justification for the demand I have made. What more justification is wanted ?

Mr. President (to Assistant Secretary) : Please tell the honourable member that the President is bound to follow the rules and standing orders in force. If there is any standing order or rule which authorises him to have the answers to questions translated, he shall gladly comply with the request of the honourable member, otherwise he is unable to oblige him.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan (Urdu) : If there is already no order in the Business Manual requiring the members of the Government to supply answers to questions in vernacular, one such order can be made now. When speeches can be translated in the vernacular, there should be no difficulty in translating questions and their answers also.

Mr. President : There appears to be some misapprehension about the rules and standing orders in force. Therefore, I will draw the attention of the honourable members to rule 14 or paragraph 58 which runs as follows :—

The business of the Council shall be transacted in English, but any member may address the Council in Urdu, or, with the permission of the President, in any vernacular of the province.

Under this rule any member is at liberty to address the Council in Urdu and with the permission of the President in any other language of the province.

(ii) Then there is sub-paragraph (4) of paragraph 64. It says—

At the President's discretion any speech may immediately after its delivery be translated in abstract from English into Urdu, or vice versa by an official translator.

It is clear from the rule and standing order read by me that speeches made in Urdu or English can be translated, if so required. But a question or an answer to a question is not a speech, and therefore, I have no power to have it translated. That is my difficulty. However, if the House directs me to have the answer to the question in question translated, I shall have the needful done.

Khan Bahadur Malik Zaman Mehdi Khan : If the speeches can be translated into Urdu and vice versa, similarly answers to questions in English can be translated into Urdu. Secondly, is there any rule which prohibits the President from ordering the translation of a question from English into Urdu ?

Mr. President : May I know the view of the Leader of the House ?

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : I personally have not the slightest objection to translations being made and would in fact welcome them. But one has to look ahead. In the new Assembly it seems highly probable that 50 per cent. of the members will not know English and if every answer to a question is to be translated the time of the new Legislative Assembly will be spent to a very great extent on listening to translations. That consideration ought to be borne in mind.

Mr. President : May I take it that it is the wish and pleasure of the House that I may have the answer to the question asked by the Honourable Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan translated into Urdu ? (Honourable members : Yes, yes.)

(The answer was then translated in Urdu.)

Lala Bhagat Ram : Will the Honourable Minister kindly state as to when this post of the sub-registrar at Jullundur was created and for how long it has been in existence ?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : I cannot say at present definitely as to when this post was created, but it has since been abolished.

Lala Bhagat Ram : Is it a fact that according to rules the post of a sub-registrar is abolished either on the death of the incumbent or on his submitting the resignation and that in this particular case the rules have not been observed ?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : The honourable member will do well to consult the Registration Manual to find an answer to his question.

Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan : Will the Honourable Minister kindly state whether he was not able to find any capable person at Jullundur for the post of the sub-registrar that he has imported a person from outside to fill that vacancy ?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : This question has already been answered.

SUB-REGISTRARS.

*5136. Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan : Will the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government kindly lay on the table a statement showing—

- (a) the names of sub-registrars in the province ;
- (b) how many out of them belong to rural areas and how many to urban areas and how many out of them are statutory agriculturists ;
- (c) whether any community is under-represented in this branch of service ; if so, what action the Government has taken to make up the deficiency of the under-represented community ; if no action has so far been taken, the reasons for the same ?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : (a) A list showing the names of various sub-registrars in the province is enclosed.

(b) I regret that the answer to this clause is not ready, but I believe that an overwhelming majority of sub-registrars belong to statutory agricultural tribes.

(c) No proportion having been fixed for various communities in this branch of service, the attention of the honourable member is drawn to paragraph 7 of the Punjab Registration Manual wherein the policy of Government in making appointments to this service is laid down.

Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan (Urdu) : I want the answer to this question also to be translated into Urdu.

(At this stage the Honourable President asked the Assistant Secretary to translate the answer and he translated it.)

Mr. President : Gentlemen, in connection with the translation of answers to questions I may invite the attention of the Council to section 85 of the new Government of India Act. It contains no provision for translating speeches or questions and answers. The only facility given by that Act is that members who are not sufficiently acquainted with English may use any other language in their speeches, but they have no right to get their speeches translated. The section runs as follows :—

All proceedings in the Legislature of a Province shall be conducted in the English language :

Provided that the rules of procedure of the Chamber or Chambers, and the if any, with respect to joint sittings shall provide for enabling persons un-acquainted, or not sufficiently acquainted, with the English language to use another language.

AGRICULTURISTS AMONG SUB-REGISTRARS.

*5137. Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan : (a) Will the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government kindly lay on the table a copy of the memorandum or notifications stating that agriculturists are to be given preference in the matter of appointments to the post of a sub-registrar, if there be any ;

(b) If there is no such memorandum or notification issued by Government to this effect, will he kindly state the reasons for ignoring the claims of agriculturists in this line of service ?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : (a) Necessary instructions in this behalf were issued in 1918 and they are incorporated in paragraph 7 of the Punjab Registration Manual.

(b) Does not arise. The claims of agriculturists have not been ignored. With very few exceptions the sub-registrars are all agriculturists.

PATWARIS' SCHOOL, JULLUNDUR.

*5138. Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan : Will the Honourable Revenue Member kindly state with regard to the Patwaris' School at Jullundur—

- (a) whether a particular proportion was fixed for each district amongst the entrants to the said institution ; if so, what ; if not, why not ;
- (b) whether the proportion fixed for each district was exceeded in some cases ; if so ; why ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : I regret that the answer to this question is not ready.

PATWARIS' SCHOOL, JULLUNDUR.

*5139. Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan : Will the Honourable Revenue Member kindly state with regard to the Patwaris' School at Jullundur—

- (a) whether it is a fact that in accordance with the proportion fixed for Jullundur district 22 students should have been admitted to the said school ;
- (b) whether it is a fact that 465 students were actually admitted to the said school ;
- (c) if so, the reasons for this excessive admission of students to the said institution ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : I regret that the answer to this question is not ready.

PENSION TO TAHSIL CHAPRASIS.

*5140. Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan : Will the Honourable Finance Member kindly state—

- (a) whether tahsil chaprasis are not treated on the same footing as other Government servants in the matter of grant of pension ;
- (b) if so, whether the Government propose to do away with this differential treatment ; if not, why not ?

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : I regret that the answer to this question is not yet ready.

LAND GRANTS.

*5141. Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan : Will the Honourable Revenue Member kindly state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that the squares of land distributed in the Jullundur, Hoshiarpur and Ludhiana districts, in lieu of land eroded by rivers, have been given on the distinct understanding that the grantees thereof shall be responsible for digging wells in their lands ;

- (b) whether the Government propose to grant taqavi loans to the grantees mentioned in (a) so as to enable them to fulfil the condition on which land was granted to them ; if not, why not ;
- (c) if not, whether Government propose to grant land to the agriculturists mentioned in (a) at places where the condition of well-digging can be dispensed with ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) The question presumably refers to land available for allotment in the Lower Chenab Canal extensions outside the irrigation boundary. If so, no allotment has been made so far. The Deputy Commissioner, Ludhiana, was not asked to select any grantees nor is the scheme confined to those whose land has suffered from erosion. The Deputy Commissioners, Jullundur and Hoshiarpur were asked to select 50 grantees each. When allotment is made, one of the conditions will be that the grantee must sink a well for irrigation on his grant.

(b) and (c) Do not arise, but if any of the grantees applies for a taqavi loan and fulfils the conditions required under the rules governing such loans his case will be considered favourably.

CIVIL PRISONERS.

*5142. Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan : Will the Honourable Finance Member kindly state—

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : (a) 3,736.

(b) 528 during the second quarter of 1935. Figures for the third quarter are not available yet.

SIKHS IN DISTRICT BOARD SERVICES.

*5143. Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan : Will the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government kindly state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that at a meeting of the District Board, Jullundur, held on the 20th May, 1935, a resolution was passed to the effect that Sikhs should be given 80 per cent. representation in district board services, because the Sikh zamindars pay a very large amount of the land revenue ?
- (b) whether it is a fact that the deputy commissioner recommended that Sikhs should be given preference in the service of the district board ;
- (c) whether the deputy commissioner before making his recommendations had satisfied himself that the Sikhs do really contribute the largest share of the land revenue ;
- (d) if not, what are the reasons for making such a recommendation ?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : (a) No.

(b) No.

(c) and (d) Do not arise.

CONTRACTORS IN IRRIGATION DEPARTMENT.

*5144. Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan : Will the Honourable Revenue Member kindly state—

- the number of contractors in the Irrigation Department and the number of Hindus, Muslims and Sikhs amongst them ;
- the number of agriculturist and non-agriculturist contractors, respectively, in the Irrigation Department ;
- what action the Government propose to take with a view to redressing communal inequality, if any, amongst the contractors of the Irrigation Department ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) and (b) The labour of collecting the information would be out of all proportion to the value of the information desired.

(c) None, since any general attempt to employ contractors community-wise would be detrimental to Government interests.

|         |    |    |    |    |    |    | Rs.      |

- (b) if so, what action he has taken in the matter ?

The Honourable Sardar Sir Jogendra Singh : (a) The answer is in the negative.

(b) Does not arise.

- (c) since when the present incumbent is holding the post of hospital surgeon ;

- (e) whether it is a fact that since the creation of the Government College, Lahore, not a single Muslim has ever been made a professor of Mathematics ;
- (f) if replies to the above be in the affirmative, how Government propose to fill the post when it falls vacant ?

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon : (a) Yes.

(b) Yes.

(c) Yes.

(b) how many of these posts have been reserved for Muslims ;

(c) whether Muslims have proper representation in Provincial Educational Service, Class I, and Indian Educational Service posts combined ;

(d) if they are under-represented, what steps Government propose to take to raise their percentage ?

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon : (a) Yes.

(b) None.

(c) 17 Punjab Educational Service (Class I) posts are at present filled by (i) 6 Muslims, (ii) 4 Hindus, (iii) 2 Sikhs and (iv) 5 Christians. The percentage is thus—

|            |    |    |    |    |       |
|------------|----|----|----|----|-------|
| Muslims    | .. | .. | .. | .. | 85.29 |
| Hindus     | .. | .. | .. | .. | 23.53 |
| Sikhs ..   | .. | .. | .. | .. | 11.77 |
| Christians | .. | .. | .. | .. | 29.41 |

In the Indian Educational Service only 11 posts are filled. These are occupied by (i) 1 Muslim, (ii) 2 Hindus and (iii) 8 Christians.

The percentage is—

|            |    |    |    |    |       |
|------------|----|----|----|----|-------|
| Muslims    | .. | .. | .. | .. | 9.10  |
| Hindus     | .. | .. | .. | .. | 18.18 |
| Christians | .. | .. | .. | .. | 72.72 |

The Muslims seem suitably represented in the Punjab Educational Service (Class I), but not in the Indian Educational Service.

(d) Government cannot raise the percentage of Muslims in the Indian Educational Service as no recruitment to this service is now made.

- (c) whether the question of having a similar laboratory in Maclagan Engineering College, Moghalpura, is also under consideration and that instruments of similar nature have been purchased by the Hydro-Electric Department ;
- (d) the reasons for not centralising the electric testing laboratory at Maclagan Engineering College, Moghalpura, where a competent staff to run the same is available without extra cost to Government, in order to effect a saving ?

INDIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION.

*5158. Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath : Will the Honourable Minister for Education be pleased to state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that the members of the P. C. M. S. and the I. M. S. in the Punjab are not allowed by the Punjab Government to join the Indian Medical Association ;
- (b) whether it is also a fact that such a ban is not imposed by other provincial Governments in India ;
- (c) the reasons which led the Punjab Government to adopt a policy different from that of other provinces ?

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon : (a) Yes.

(b) Government are not aware whether other provincial Governments have passed similar orders or not.

(e) The Punjab Government do not allow the medical officers under its control to become members of the Indian Medical Association in view of the tone of some of the resolutions passed by the Association in recent years, particularly those in criticism of measures taken by Government for the suppression of subversive political movements.

Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath : Would it not be worth your while to enquire from other provinces whether they have imposed such a ban or not ? I do not think it is desirable to have a practice for this province so different from that of other provinces.

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon : I think it is not necessary for Government to do or not to do what other provinces do or do not do. Each case has to be decided on its own merits and this case has received the very careful consideration of Government. I think about two years ago I sent for the resolutions which were passed and studied them all very carefully and found the tone of most of these resolutions exceedingly bad. Each resolution practically said " We condemn Government ; we condemn Government "—the whole list of them ran in the same spirit. You cannot allow Government servants to be sitting in judgment and condemning their own Government. This is subversive of all discipline. So far as their own grievances are concerned, they have a medical association of their own for P.C.M.S. which has a president, secretary, committee members and so on and these office bearers can always come to me or to the Inspector-General of Civil Hospitals for redress of their grievances whether these be official or professional. Therefore it is not necessary for these people to go and join an association suggested by the Raja Sahib.

Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath : Am I to understand that your Government is more sensitive than that of any other province ?

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon : More sensible certainly. (Laughter).

The Honourable Sardar Sir Jogendra Singh : (a) The office establishment of the Executive Electrical Engineer consists of the following:—

- (d) why no qualified member of the Provincial Civil Medical Service has been appointed to this post so far ?

SHORT NOTICE QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

ECONOMIC MOVEMENT AND PICKETTING.

Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath : Will the Honourable Finance Member be pleased to state whether Government is aware that picketting in pursuance of the economic movement has been going on more vigorously in Delhi Gate Bazar than in other bazars and that some Hindu shop-keepers have closed their business and left the locality? If so, what police arrangements have been made against such picketting?

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : Government are not aware that there has been more vigorous picketting in the Delhi Gate Bazar than in some other bazars, but probably picketting there has attracted more notice. The Hindu shop-keepers of the Delhi Gate Bazar depend almost entirely on Muslim customers, so the 'Buy Muslim' movement has naturally affected their trade and a few have accordingly closed their shops and left the bazar. There are extra constables drawn from both communities posted on beat duty in the Delhi Gate Bazar area all day and night and an extra Hindu head constable has been posted there with the idea that all reported cases of picketting may be investigated jointly by one Hindu and one Muhammadan head constable under the supervision of the City Inspector and the Assistant Superintendent of Police in charge of the city, both of whom are giving this area their particular attention.

Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath : Have there been any prosecutions and if so what has been the result of the prosecutions?

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan : How many members of the various communities are doing picketting in the various bazars?

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : I want notice again.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : I believe there has been some activity among the Hindus also.

Shaikh Muhammad Sadiq : Has any question been put by the Raja Sahib in that connection also ?

Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath : Delhi Gate Bazar is the bazar in which I own property and I have Muhammadan tenants. I know more about the Delhi Gate Bazar than about other bazars and that is why I selected it.

Mr. Muhammad Din Malak : How many Muslims, Hindus and Sikhs have been convicted in connection with picketting ?

- (c) if any one of the 3 mandis mentioned in (b) compare unfavourably with that of Baha-ud-Din in respect of population and taxes paid and if Government has refused to make Mandi Baha-ud-Din a municipality, what are the grounds of discrimination?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : (a) Yes ; the views of the local officers are being ascertained.

- (f) how many service appeals were preferred to His Excellency the Governor during the last three years and how many of them were successful ;
- (g) the reasons for the diverse procedure in different departments of Government ;
- (h) what Government proposes to do in the matter ?

Mr. F. H. Puckle (Chief Secretary) : (a) The honourable member is referred to Rules 11 and 12 and Appendix B of the Punjab Civil Secretariat Service Rules<sup>1</sup>, 1930, a copy of which is laid on the table.

(b) All Provincial Services as well as the Service of Sub-Engineers in the Irrigation Department and the Punjab Fisheries Subordinate Service (gazetted posts).

(c) and (d) In cases of appeals by members of the Services which are addressed to the Governor in his personal capacity, the procedure prescribed generally is that the noting on the appeals should be confined to the elucidation of facts necessary to make the points at issue clear, and Secretaries, through whom such appeals pass, are required to refrain from recording any expression of opinion whether favourable or unfavourable to the appellant unless the appeal raises new points not previously discussed. This procedure is observed in cases relating to the Civil Secretariat establishment. Appeals to His Excellency the Governor are not heard in person.

(e) and (g) Government has no information on the point. There is nothing in the rules on the subject. It is entirely within the discretion of the appellate authority to adopt the procedure considered appropriate.

(f) Government do not consider that it is in the public interest to collect information of the kind required by the honourable member.

(h) Nothing.

DISMISSALS IN CIVIL SECRETARIAT.

1335. Maulvi Mazhar Ali Azhar : Will the Honourable Finance Member be pleased to state—

- (a) the number of officials of the Civil Secretariat who have been dismissed, removed or compulsorily retired during the last three years, stating the offence in each case ;
- (b) whether it is a fact that two of them have been dismissed only recently ;
- (c) the offence or offences with which they were charged, who made the inquiry into those charges and who ordered their dismissal ;
- (d) whether it is a fact that the said officials were under the direct control of the Assistant Secretary ;
- (e) what amount was misappropriated in each case and what amount has been spent by Government and the officials in question on the fees of the counsel ;
- (f) whether the dismissals have been notified to all Heads of Departments without waiting for the result of the appeals ; if so, why ;
- (g) whether this procedure has been ever followed, say during the last six years ; if so, in which cases ; the authority for this notification ;
- (h) whether Government previously engaged a prosecuting counsel in a case against the member of a subordinate service, say during the last twelve years ; if so, in which cases ; if not, why counsel was engaged in these cases and at such a great expense ;
- (i) who selected the counsel—the Assistant Secretary or the Legal Remembrancer ;
- (j) whether the appeals are to be noted upon by the Assistant Secretary and the Chief Secretary, without giving any opportunity to the appellants to rebut their remarks ;
- (k) what Government proposes to do in the matter in the interest of public justice ?

Mr. F. H. Puckle (Chief Secretary) :—(a) The information is as follows :—

|                        |    |    |      |   |
|------------------------|----|----|------|---|
| Dismissals             | .. | .. | 3    | (i) and (ii). Dishonesty in money matters and acceptance of illegal gratifications. |
|                        |    |    |      | (iii). Dishonesty in money matters coupled with a false declaration.                |
| Removals               | .. | .. | 3    | Inefficiency and misconduct.  |
| Compulsory retirements | .. | .. | Nil. |   |

(b) Yes.

[Mr. F. H. Puckle.]

(c) Dishonesty in money transactions and acceptance of illegal gratifications. The enquiry was held by a senior officer of the Punjab Civil Service (Executive Branch) who found the persons guilty. They were dismissed by the Chief Secretary.

(d) Yes. The entire ministerial establishment is under the immediate control of the Assistant Secretary.

(e) There was no misappropriation of Government money. The charge of dishonesty dealt with specific instances in which one of the dismissed persons was found to have overcharged Government in local purchases made for the office. In one transaction the payee's receipt had been forged. The other dismissed official falsified certain accounts with which he was entrusted.

Rs. 434 was incurred by Government on counsel's fees. It is not known what sums were paid by the dismissed clerks to defence counsel.

(f) Yes. There are no orders to the contrary.

(g) Yes. The honourable member is referred to rule 3 (g) and the notes appended thereto of the Punjab Subordinate Services Punishment and Appeal Rule,<sup>1</sup> 1930, in accordance with which particulars of dismissed persons are circulated to other departments and offices as a precaution against their inadvertent re-employment.

(h) Government do not consider that it is in the public interest to collect this information. The honourable member is referred to rule 6 (2) of the Punjab Subordinate Services Punishment and Appeal Rules, 1930, which permits of counsel being engaged for the prosecution of cases which are likely to end in dismissal when this course is considered expedient.

(i) The prosecuting counsel was selected by the Legal Remembrancer.

(j) The honourable member is referred to the reply given to clauses (c) and (d) of his question No. 1334<sup>1</sup> (above).

(k) Nothing.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY, CIVIL SECRETARIAT.

1336. Maulvi Mazhar Ali Azhar : Will the Honourable Finance Member be pleased to state—

(a) whether he is aware (i) that the post of Assistant Secretary in the Irrigation Branch was abolished in, or has been held in abeyance since, 1931, and (ii) that the duties of that post have been since and are being performed by the Registrar at a lower rate of pay ;

(b) whether it is proposed to make similar arrangements in the case of the Civil Secretariat ;

(c) whether it is a fact that some years ago an order was passed by the Executive Council that the Assistant Secretary in the Civil Department should remain at Lahore in charge of the main office and should not proceed to Simla in summer ; if so, why he has been allowed to move to Simla this year at Government expense ;

- (d) whether he is aware that consequent on his move he transferred a major portion of his work to the various superintendents at Lahore by an office order issued by himself ; whether this order was issued with the approval of Government and whether Government will lay a copy of it on the table of the Council ;
- (e) what compensatory allowances Government proposes to give to the various superintendents for performing the extra duties of the Assistant Secretary in the burning heat of Lahore ;
- (f) what cost the Government has been put to in taking the Assistant Secretary to Simla ?

Mr. F. H. Puckle (Chief Secretary) : (a) (i) Yes. (ii) No.

(b) No. For the honourable member's information I might mention that there were formerly two posts of Assistant Secretary in the Civil Secretariat, and that one was brought under reduction in 1931.

(c) Yes, but the order does not preclude the Assistant Secretary from going to Simla with the sanction of Government when this is considered necessary.

(d) This is not so. The work allotted to the Superintendent in Charge of the Lahore Office had the approval of the Chief Secretary. Other Superintendents voluntarily relieved the Superintendent in Charge of petty miscellaneous duties.

(e) None.

(f) The taking of the Assistant Secretary to Simla actually resulted in a saving over previous years' expenditure.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY, CIVIL SECRETARIAT.

1337. Maulvi Mazhar Ali Azhar : Will the Honourable Finance Member be pleased to state—

- (a) whether it is a fact (i) that the Chief Secretary is the appointing and punishing authority for the establishment of the numerous branches of the Secretariat and (ii) that all kinds of orders are passed by him in consultation with or on the advice of the Assistant Secretary ;
- (b) whether it is a fact that the Assistant Secretary is a person promoted from the subordinate ranks ;
- (c) the number and description of the cases in which the present Chief Secretary passed orders against the advice of the Assistant Secretary and in favour of the person concerned ;
- (d) whether the Assistant Secretary makes temporary appointments and grants leave to the staff ;
- (e) what Government proposes to do in the matter of hearing the grievances of the Secretariat staff against the Assistant Secretary without any interference on his part ?

Mr. F. H. Puckle (Chief Secretary): (a) (i) The honourable member is referred to rules 4, 11, 12 and Appendix B of the Punjab Civil Secretariat Service Rules, 1930.

(ii) The Assistant Secretary is consulted when his advice is required.

(b) The honourable member is referred to Rule 6 of the Punjab General Services Rules<sup>1</sup>, 1930 (a copy of which is laid on the table), which deals with the manner of recruitment to the post of Assistant Secretary. The present Assistant Secretary was promoted from the rank of Superintendent.

(c) Government do not consider that it is in the public interest to collect information of the kind required by the honourable member.

(d) The honourable member is referred to Rule 4 of the Punjab Civil Secretariat Service Rules which deals with the authority empowered to make appointments. Leave is granted to the establishment by the Assistant Secretary. In certain classes of cases he obtains the previous approval of the Chief Secretary.

(e) Government are not aware that any grievance exists. If it does, the appropriate channel for representing the matter to the Chief Secretary would seem to be the Secretariat Service Association to which it is believed that most of the staff in the Civil Secretariat belong.

ELECTRIC INSPECTORATE.

1338. Sardar Arjan Singh : Will the Honourable Revenue Member please state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that out of the four gazetted posts sanctioned for the newly formed Electric Inspectorate, none has been filled by a Sikh;
- (b) whether the fourth gazetted post of Third Assistant to the Electric Inspector is still to be filled; if so, how it is intended to be filled;
- (c) whether there is any Sikh out of the six members of the technical staff of the Inspectorate;
- (d) what steps he proposes to take to ensure that the Sikhs are properly represented on the technical staff;
- (e) the percentage of the Sikhs on the non-gazetted establishment of the newly formed Electric Inspectorate;
- (f) whether it is a fact that an accounts clerk is shortly to be appointed, and whether it is intended to appoint a Sikh to this appointment?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) Yes. But the Inspector's duties were until recently performed jointly with those of Electrical Engineer. The separate post of Electrical Engineer now created has been secured by a Sikh.

(b) The answer to the first part of the question is in the affirmative. The matter of the procedure as regards filling up the vacant post is under consideration.

(c) No.

<sup>1</sup> Placed in the Library.

- (d) The claims of qualified Sikhs will be considered along with others.
- (e) 10 per cent.
- (f) There is no post of "Accounts" clerk vacant in the office of the Electric Inspector. There is, however, a post of "Acts" clerk, applications for which are at present under consideration. Claims of all candidates whether Hindus, Muslims or Sikhs will be duly considered.

THE PUNJAB-STATE-AID-TO-INDUSTRIES BILL.

Mr. President : The Council will now resume discussion clause by clause on the Punjab-State-Aid-to-Industries Bill.

Clause 3.

Mr. M. A. Ghani (Nominated, non-official) : I beg to move—

That in clause 3, sub-clause (1), the following be added after paragraph (g) :—

“(A) One member to be elected by the Punjab Labour Board, Lahore.”

Mr. President : This amendment has been discussed already.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : This is an independent amendment and I have a right to show that the Punjab Labour Board should have one member.

Mr. President : The honourable member may speak but should avoid repetition.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : I might repeat a word but I will not repeat my arguments. The amendment which I moved yesterday was indeed a very moderate one and the amendment which I am moving to-day is still more moderate. Yesterday I wanted two members of Labour Board to represent labour.

I hope that this Council would be pleased to support this amendment at least. In the clause you will be pleased to find that in the constitution of the industrial board there are three members to be elected by three different chambers, and I would like that similar representations may be given to the Punjab Labour Board. The Punjab Labour Board is a central and federated union of trade unions and labour organisations in the Punjab—just as these chambers are the central federated bodies of different capitalistic companies and firms. Perhaps it will not be out of place if I were to put before the House a report of the Registrar of Trade Unions, Punjab, in which it is mentioned that the Punjab Labour Board has got 38 trade unions and labour organisations duly affiliated with it. There are two other central bodies also, but the membership of those bodies is very small. So nobody can deny that the Punjab Labour Board is the biggest central and federated labour organisation in this province. I would therefore most respectfully draw the attention of the House to the necessity of giving one member to this body. It may be said that this board is not properly constituted. I may tell the House for its information that here I have got a copy of the rules and regulations of the Punjab Labour Board, which have been duly registered with the Registrar of Trade Unions. We hold regular meetings of this board and our meetings are regularly held in accordance with these rules. So, it cannot be said that it is not a properly constituted body. This board has been in a way recognised by the Government also. My own nomination to this Council was mostly done on the recommendation of this board. This board has led, for the first time in the history of this province, a big deputation to His Excellency on behalf of the Punjab labour. This board represented the Punjab labour before the Simon Commission, before the Whitley Commission, before the Lothian Committee, before the Hammond Committee and before all other committees or commissions which Government has been constituting and which have been coming to this province. This is the position which this board enjoys amongst the organised labour in this province. I submit that when these three chambers have been given the right of electing one member each on behalf of commerce and industry, there is no reason why the Punjab Labour Board should not be similarly given the right of electing one member to represent labour on this industrial board. Yesterday I dealt sufficiently with the necessity for giving representation to labour on the industrial board. I need not repeat those arguments; but I may, with your permission, say one word. It was stated yesterday that the board was purely an industrial matter for the industrialists; and therefore labour need not be represented on it. Whenever there is the question of labour, industry is always represented. In the International Labour Conference both labour and industry are represented, and my friend Mr. Mukerji has been to Geneva for the International Labour Conference on behalf of the industrialists of this province. Again, whenever any labour committee comes to this province, industry is always represented on it, for instances when the Royal Commission on Labour was constituted, industrialists were represented on that commission. When this is the case, there is no reason why labour should not be represented on industrial matters. Hence it was a very fallacious argument that was advanced yesterday that in industrial matters, labour should not be represented. Again, I would respectfully bring to your notice that it will certainly be a good thing for the Punjab Labour Board to be given one member to represent it on the Industrial Board. The Punjab Labour Board is also interested in the depressed classes. We have got two organisations of the depressed classes affiliated with it. I believe these classes might apply for state-aid being given to tanning industry which is mostly carried on by members of these classes. If there is a representative on this board representing both labour and depressed classes, it would be good to have the views of one representing these classes which carry on the tanning industry. I understood from the speech of the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government that the state-aid that is proposed in the Bill will not be given to big industrialists, but to small industrialists, and those who carry on cottage industries.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : I never said that.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : The Honourable Minister says that he did not say that, but I think if a reference were to be made to his speech you will find that he did say so.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : There was no mention one way or another.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : Then you are not interested in cottage industries and you will not give aid to cottage industries. Any way the loans that will be advanced will be given to all sorts of industries whether cottage or tanning industries or any industry. The money that may be given as state aid I presume will not be a huge sum, it may be Rs. 80,000 or a lakh. It will be in the interests of the Industrial Board if the small industries should be represented. The Punjab Labour Board does represent the small industries. So taking all these factors into consideration, it is just and equitable that one member should be elected by the Punjab Labour Board to represent labour on the Industrial Board. With these words, I respectfully commend this amendment to the vote of the House.

Mr. President : Clause under consideration, amendment, moved—

That in clause 3, sub-clause (1), the following be added after paragraph (g) :—

"(h) One member to be elected by the Punjab Labour Board, Lahore."

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang (Minister for Local Self-Government) : I do not think it necessary to say many words about it. I explained the position yesterday, and I think what I said yesterday should be quite sufficient to rule out this amendment. We cannot give representations so far as labour is concerned to one particular body because that particular body does not represent all labour. There are two kinds of labour, organised labour and unorganised labour, and I think by pressing this amendment, the honourable member, who claims to represent labour, might be doing some harm to labour. The Government may do more than this amendment would secure for them. I do not want to say anything more than this.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : Only one word, Sir, in reply to the learned speech of the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government. He says that it will do more harm than good to give representation to this single organisation of labour. He also says that Government probably would do more good if the question of the representation of labour is left in the hands of the Government. In this sense, I take it that the Government means the Honourable Minister himself.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : No.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : So far as the Government is concerned, I may quote one instance. We have been pressing for the representation of labour in certain municipalities. We recommended the name of a big labourite on behalf of the Punjab Labour Board and recommended him to be nominated to the Amritsar Municipal Committee to represent labour.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : Who was he?

Mr. M. A. Ghani : What has the Honourable Minister given to us? One Mr. Sethi, a representative of the Associated Press, who has nothing to do with labour or with any organization of labour. He is not even a member, what to say of his being an office bearer of any trade union or labour organization in this province? If this is the state of affairs, how can we entrust the question of representation of labour to the present Ministry on the Industrial Board?

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : Will you define who the labour member ought to be?

Mr. M. A. Ghani : Hence my submission is that if the Government want to honestly and sincerely give us a representation on this Industrial Board, he should be a nominee of the Punjab Labour Board. Any other member will not be acceptable to us.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : He has made a reference to the representation of labour on municipal committees. He has probably referred to the representations made on behalf of labour so far as its representation on Lahore Municipal Committee is concerned.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : Amritsar.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : I am not aware if Mr. Sethi has been nominated as a representative of labour.

Rai Sahib Lala Labh Chand Mehra : But I can say that Mr. Sethi looks after the interests of labour in Amritsar Municipal Committee better than the honourable member now speaking does in this Council.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : So far as Lahore was concerned, the name suggested was not considered as fit to be nominated as others.

Mr. President : The question is—

That in clause 3, sub-clause (1) the following be added after paragraph (g) :—

“(h) One member to be elected by the Punjab Labour Board, Lahore.”

The motion was lost.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan (Ambala division, North-East, Muhammadan, Rural) : I move that—

In clause 3, sub-clause (2), lines 2-3, the words “the Director shall be ex officio Secretary of the Board” be omitted and the following words be substituted instead :—

“and the Secretary to the Board shall be elected from among the members by a method, to be proscribed, and his remuneration shall be fixed, by the rules to be framed by the Local Government in this behalf.”

I need not make a lengthy speech. If both the officials are to be Government officers, then this board will be to all intents and purposes an official board; and in order to introduce a popular element in it, the post of secretary should be open to be filled from among the members. Probably in that case too the Director may or may not be elected; and if the board is so inclined as to have a greater popular element in it, there will be a chance for it to have a non-official element. Another reason is that the Director is a very busy man. He has already enough to do and he will not have sufficient time for carrying into effect the functions of the board which are purely advisory. So the result would be that if the Director is appointed as Secretary, there will not be very considerable work done by this board, and a non-official would be more useful. Besides, in such movements a popular element should be introduced as much as possible. I am surprised at the attitude of the Honourable Minister. When he was not a Minister, he urged that on every body non-officials should be represented, but now under the shadow of his present office he is developing a high love for officials. Otherwise he should have himself made a provision for it, and he should have been just and fair to the popular demand, and would have himself suggested that the secretary should be a non-official. But he has not incorporated that provision, and I make this amendment to include a non-official as secretary.

If the president and secretary were both to be officials, the board will not do much as this board will be constituted before the next council comes into existence. Yesterday the Honourable Minister based his arguments on the fact that the next council will have to operate this Bill. But he forgets that this board will be constituted just now. As he said, this Board has been formed in response to the demand of the Council and no time should be lost over it. He said that the next Council will be full of zamindars, but in view of the immediate constitution of the board, these arguments are out of place. The board will remain in existence for three years and during these three years it will have done all that is required of it in this matter and after that it will not have much business to do. All the aid that may have been available or necessary to be given would have been given during these three years and I do not think the Government will spend much money through this board. If the secretary is appointed from among the members possibly remuneration may have to be given in which case a small sum would be enough.

Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath : How much ?

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan : I do not want to make an attempt to suggest it. I leave it to the Government to fix it, which can be done by rules. If such a provision is not incorporated the Honourable Minister will not help in appointing a non-official secretary. Yesterday the Honourable Minister gave a bit of his mind when he said

ہر کسی را بہر کارے ساختند

From this it appears that he will nominate only those who own factories and those who will comply with his wishes and this board will be to all intents and purposes an official board after his liking and will not do anything. So honourable members need not be anxious to pass this Bill.

Mr. President : Just now clause 3, sub-clause (2) is under consideration.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan : I ask, how will the Honourable Minister constitute the board ? Our recent experience shows that he appointed a select committee on which he got members whom he liked—I do not say that they were not fit to sit on the committee. Government officials have their way in all committees and to obviate the difficulty I suggest that the secretary should be from among the members. It is a provision which the Honourable Minister should accept with good grace for he does not stand to lose by accepting it. He will have his officials and members in the manner he likes but if at least there be a Secretary chosen from among the members there is the possibility of satisfying the popular element. The Honourable Minister may say that he will not be the Minister in charge of the Department when the board comes to be constituted. That, however, is no argument. If he is not there, some one of his brethren will be there. Moreover, before the next Council comes into being this board will have been constituted and will have probably commenced working. With these words I move the motion.

Mr. President : Clause under consideration, amendment moved—

In clause 3, sub-clause (2), lines 2-3, the words "the Director shall be ex officio Secretary of the Board" be omitted and the following words be substituted instead :—

'And the Secretary to the board shall be elected from among the members by a method, to be prescribed, and his remuneration shall be fixed, by the rules to be framed by the Local Government in this behalf.'

Mr. M. A. Ghani (Nominated, non-official): I rise to support the amendment moved by the honourable member from Ambala. According to the Bill, the secretary of this board will be the Director of Industries. As it has been remarked already, the Director of Industries is a very busy man. He is the Registrar of Trade Unions. He is the President of the Examining Board for Engineers. He is the President of the Joint Development Board and above all, he is the Director of Industries. He has to administer no less than six Acts. He is in charge of the Factories Department. He is in charge of the Industrial Schools and Industrial Factories of the Government. He is already an overworked official of the Government. It will therefore add to his work if he is also made the Secretary to this board. So far as the question of the representation of the officials is concerned, I think the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government will be quite sufficient there to represent the official point of view. There is thus no reason why the Director of Industries should be made the secretary of this board.

Then the question has been put to me, what pay I would propose for the secretary, if he is elected from among the members of the board. I do not attach much importance to what salary is fixed, or whether a salary is even fixed or not. Let that secretary be an honorary one. It is not essential that he should be paid. If at all, let him be paid a small allowance. Hence it is very desirable that an elected member should be the Secretary.

With these words I support the amendment.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang (Minister for Local Self-Government): A few words only would be necessary to dispose of this amendment. In proposing this amendment the honourable Mover does not know what harm he will be doing to the board. He said addressing me, "What does he lose?" I will not lose anything, but the board will, certainly, the Government will, and the province will, if you place an amateur on this board. The honourable mover is proposing to do away with the knowledge and information that the Director when he is secretary to this board will bring to bear upon every question that comes before the board, while he will also have at his hand the office clerks and all the material relevant to any particular question, which will not be open as a rule to an elected secretary. The amendment on the face of it is so unreasonable and so unwise that I am really surprised that it should have been tabled at all. The Director may be a busy man, certainly he is, but busiest men sometimes have the greatest leisure. And what will take an elected secretary, an amateur, at the best, half a day to hunt up will probably be at the finger's ends of the Director. It will be to the great advantage of the board to have an expert as its secretary who can supply the board information on the spot at a moment's notice. I do not therefore feel justified in accepting this amendment.

Khan Bahadur Malik Zaman Mehdi Khan (Sheikhupura, Muhammadan, Rural): One or two arguments have been advanced by the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government. The first was, the expert knowledge of the Director of Industries. It cannot be applicable to the present Director, and even if it is assumed that he has got the expert knowledge then what will be the situation when in future he vacates the office, and a new man is appointed? He will have to spend six or seven months to hunt up files and get information. Does not the same thing apply to the new secretary to be appointed? The question is whether the present Director is an expert. He has been a layman recruited from the ranks of the Punjab Provincial Civil Service and has had no technical knowledge of industries. If he can pick up the knowledge that he now possesses in one or two years' time there is absolutely no reason why members who will be experts on this board will not elect some one who is an expert in the subject and who can be in a better position than the Director of Industries who was previously a layman.

Then there is another argument. The tendency in all constitutions or institutions is towards democracy and not towards officialdom. There is no reason why this institution which is being constituted for the benefit of the public throughout the province should not be controlled by public men. Therefore the amendment proposed by Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan is not unreasonable, but very sensible and reasonable and I support it.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan: The Honourable Minister says that he will not be able to do much in connection with the working of this Bill after its enactment. Does not the Honourable Minister expect that he would form the board during the tenure of his office? What was the mistake then in the statement I made? The Honourable Minister is in the habit of misquoting a member and building up an argument on it to his satisfaction. He said that the amendment was unwise, as if the whole wisdom is centred in the Minister himself. I make to him a present of the well-known English proverb: Where ignorance is bliss it is folly to be wise. I maintain that the Honourable Minister was foolish in calling the amendment as unwise. He may have said that it is not practicable or he may have examined the amendment on its merits. What is there in the amendment that is not wise?

The point advanced by the Honourable Minister was that if any other person than the Director was appointed then all the material which could be had from the office would not be available to such person. Does he mean to say that he will supply the material only to the Director-Secretary? The Minister is there and he knows very well who the secretary is. The secretary is the man who works for the chairman and all the records of the chairman come to the secretary. Look at the Chief Secretary to Government here. He is in the same position. The Secretary is none else than the president himself practically speaking and he acts for the president, he works for him and has access to all the material which the president shall have access to. Does the Honourable Minister mean to say that the elected secretary will not have access to those records to which the Director has access? If this is all the knowledge and experience which can be expected from the Honourable Minister, then, of course, God help us. Does the Minister mean to say that the material will not be supplied to the president even if the Director is the secretary? It of course comes to that and it is a very wild argument. "If this is ministerial wisdom, then no one can claim such wisdom. More sense and understanding has to be brought to bear on the question.

The next argument was that the elected secretary would be an amateur. The Honourable Minister himself has suggested that among the nominated members there should be one expert at least and therefore there would be at least one expert. How does the Honourable Minister know that the selection of the members would fall on an amateur, how does he presume that the members would be so foolish as to appoint a man as secretary who has absolutely no practical knowledge of industrial problems? Now that he has made very cleverly a provision by which he would bring owners of big factories in the Punjab on to the board, what reason is there to say that they would be amateurs? Does the Honourable Minister mean to say that men like Lala Kedar Nath of Khanna, or Lala Naranjan Das of Kaithal and others are amateurs? Practically speaking, the Director of Industries is a greater amateur. Whatever knowledge he has got he has got from books. He has never worked as a manager of a factory or in any big industrial concern. Let the Honourable Minister contradict my statement that the Director himself is an amateur that way. All that he has done is that he has read certain books. And I too can read so many books, for the matter of that. When the Honourable Minister puts forth his arguments, there may be relevancy in them but certainly not sense. If he will consider the elected secretary an amateur, he is himself one, and the Director is also one amateur.

This Industrial Board is going to be a shilly shally business, it will not do any business. If the Minister for Industries were an industrial expert, I perhaps might not have objected to the Director of Industries being the secretary, but both the Minister and the Director are of the same type. How will the work go on? There should be a provision according to which there should be two, three or four experts on the board.

Then again, it seems to me that the Act is going to benefit the big factory owners and the poor people who run cottage industries will gain nothing by it. I hope the honourable members of the Council will realise that it is no good appointing an official board. Why should the money be spent on an official board? The views of the honourable members from Sheikhpura have great weight. He has been a deputy commissioner and his experience is worth consideration.

The Honourable Minister has stated so often that democracy is in the air, but is this democracy?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : I have said nothing about democracy.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan : You have said this often before. You have said that democracy is in the air, when speaking on the resolution about non-official president for district boards. What is the use of denying it? This Industrial Board should be as much democratic as possible. It should not be official-ridden. The Honourable Minister should be the same brave man as he used to be before he became a Minister. He has now bid goodbye to all those ideas of democracy and popular rights. Is he now safeguarding the popular rights? The honourable members will realise how autocratic he is. Here is the Director who is the Minister's follower. I do not want to call him a henchman and he will do what he is told to do. That is why I said that the board will not do much. What industrial progress can be hoped for industrial enterprise and development?

With these words I commend this motion to the honourable members of this House. If they want to gain anything by this Industrial Board they should vote for the amendment.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : I do not want to say anything in reply to the answer given by the honourable mover. Perhaps I was wrong in using the word "unwise." I should have perhaps used some other word ! But I did not call him unwise. I only described his amendment as unwise. But now he has given a very good proof of his wisdom and of the wise character of his amendment and I need not say anything to show how far he has been wise. The House has seen plenty of evidence of the wisdom of the amendment and also of the mover, and therefore I would leave the amendment to the House. I must say I am unable to accept it.

Mr. President : The question is —

That the last nine words of sub-clause (2) of clause 3 be omitted.

The motion was lost.

Mr. President : The question is—

That clause 3 stand part of the Bill.

The motion was carried.

Clause 4, 5 and 6.

Mr. President : The question is—

That clauses 4, 5 and 6 stand part of the Bill.

The motion was carried.

Clause 7.

Khan Bahadur Mian Ahmad Yar Khan Daulatana (Muhammadan Landholders) : I beg to move—

That in clause 7, sub-clause (3) the following proviso be added at the end :—

‘Provided that no vacancy shall be allowed to remain unfilled for more than six months.’

I hope, that the Honourable Minister will not find it difficult to accept this amendment.

Mr. President : Clause under consideration, amendment moved is—

That in clause 7, sub-clause (3) the following proviso be added at the end :—

‘Provided that no vacancy shall be allowed to remain unfilled for more than six months.’

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang (Minister for Local Self-Government) : I accept this amendment.

Mr. President : The question is—

That in clause 7, sub-clause (3) the following proviso be added at the end :—

‘Provided that no vacancy shall be allowed to remain unfilled for more than six months.’

The motion was carried.

Mr. President : The question is—

That clause 7 as amended stand part of the Bill.

The motion was carried.

Clause 8.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram (South-East, Rohtak, non-Muhammadan, Rural): I beg to move—

That in clause 8, sub-clause (1) (c) the following be added before the word 'or' at the end :—

' Provided that the member affected shall be given an opportunity of being heard before he is removed. '

I think the amendment that I have proposed is in consonance with similar provisions in other enactments of the legislature. I have a recollection that under the District Boards Act and also under the Municipal Committees Act there is a similar provision for the removal of members in certain eventualities. There the removal is subject to the proviso that before a member is actually removed he should be given an opportunity of being heard. The amendment is so reasonable that I do not think the Honourable Minister will oppose it.

Mr. President : Clause under consideration, amendment moved is—

That in clause 8, sub-clause (1) (c) the following be added before the word 'or' at the end :—

' Provided that the member affected shall be given an opportunity of being heard before he is removed. '

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang (Minister for Local Self-Government): I fully appreciate the idea lying at the back of this amendment, but unfortunately this amendment has not been properly worded. If it was properly worded I might have accepted it. If the House thinks that the principle underlying this amendment is a sound one and necessary I shall have no objection, but the question is whether the House considers it necessary to give an opportunity to a man for an explanation after he has been convicted, because this amendment only applies to persons who are either convicted of any such offence or are subjected by a criminal court to such order as in the opinion of local Government implies a defect of character which unfits him to continue to be a vice-chairman or member of the board. I do not think, that this amendment is necessary so far as convicted persons are concerned. If a person is convicted of an offence of an ordinary nature Government certainly will not remove him, for instance, if a man is driving a car rashly on the Mall, is held up by the police and is fined Rs. 5 or Rs. 10, certainly that is not a conviction for an offence which implies a defect of character which unfits a man to continue to be a vice-chairman or a member of the board. But if a man is convicted of a more serious offence which implies a defect of character or moral turpitude as cheating or something similar, he will certainly be unfit to continue as a vice-chairman or even as a member of the board. (An honourable member : Why not hear him before removing him?) There will be the judgment of the court. He has plenty of opportunity in the court to defend himself. A charge is framed against him; he is given every opportunity to make a statement under the law and produce whatever evidence he can in his defence. If after all that opportunity has been given and he has been allowed to produce evidence he is convicted, what further explanation should he give to Government before his removal, not from his home but only from an office in the Industries board? If Chaudhri Sahib were to think of it now a little more carefully he will realise that this amendment.—(An honourable member : Are political offences also included ?) If there is a political offence which implies a defect of character, then certainly it would be covered, but if there is a political offence which does not imply a defect of character then certainly he would not be liable to be removed. It will be left to the Government to decide whether he has been convicted of an offence of such a character as to render him unfit to serve on the board.

Before I give my final view on this point I should like to hear what other honourable members have got to say. I am sure the House will oblige me by giving me the benefit of their views as to whether in the particular case of conviction of a person in a court of law after following the usual procedure of recording his statement and taking evidence of his witnesses, if that conviction implies a defect of character rendering him unfit to remain as vice-chairman or even as a member of the board, whether even in such a case he should be given another opportunity by the Government to give an explanation why he should not be removed from the board. I would certainly consider the views of honourable members very carefully before I come to a final decision.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri (Punjab Industries) : I would like to bring to the notice of the House and the Government that this amendment does not purport in any way to limit the discretion of the local Government. The final decision is always with the local Government. It is left to the Government to decide whether the offence for which a person is convicted, whether political or non-political, constitutes such a defect of character as would necessitate his removal from the board. Therefore if the Government is to give an opportunity to the member to offer an explanation no harm will be done. In fact, it would assist the Government in making up its mind in doubtful cases. After all, the membership of this board is not such a privilege that people would like to stick to it, if they are not wanted and would go out of their way to pester the government with any vexatious representations. If a letter is sent to such a member and an explanation is sought from him in writing, I do not think any harm would be done or any unnecessary time wasted. The amendment is not of such a character as to interfere with the frame of the Act or with the convenience of the officers who have to administer it or with the ultimate decision which the Government may take. Therefore I commend it to the consideration of the Government and ask this Honourable House to accept it.

Khan Bahadur Malik Zaman Mehdi Khan (Sheikhupura, Muhammadan, Rural) : The Honourable Minister has laid great stress on the conviction for offence, but there is the second part of the sub-clause which reads—

‘ or is subjected by a criminal court to any such order as in the opinion of the Local Government implies a defect of character.’

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : I read the whole sub-clause myself.

Khan Bahadur Malik Zaman Mehdi Khan : Yes, but the Honourable Minister did not explain what was meant by the latter portion of the sub-clause.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : The honourable member is aware of orders that are passed under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code. That order constitutes judicial proceedings.

Khan Bahadur Malik Zaman Mehdi Khan : There seems to be no harm if a man who is convicted of an offence is given an opportunity to explain his conduct before his name is removed from the board. I know of many gentlemen of great respectability who have been guilty of offences in the past and who are now occupying very high positions.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : The clause says only 'may.' It is not obligatory for Government to remove that gentleman from the board.

Mr. M. A. Ghani (Non-official, nominated): The Honourable Minister said that the gentleman who was convicted must have had ample opportunity to vindicate himself in a court of law. My submission is that the court will examine him only from the point of view of the offence with which he is charged. It will not examine him from the point of view whether he bears a good character to enable him to be a member of the board or not. That question will not be before the court. The argument of the Honourable Minister is therefore quite fallacious in this respect. It is said that the local Government will see whether the offence for which a person is convicted is of such a character that he should not be allowed to be on the board. If so, I do not see any harm will be done if the local Government were to give the member an opportunity to explain his conduct. The local Government will certainly have before it full information by having a written representation or explanation of that member. It is therefore desirable that this amendment be accepted.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit (Hoshiarpur, non-Muhammadan, Rural) : I support this amendment inasmuch as it still leaves discretion to the local Government to declare whether a person is of good character or not. Suppose a person is convicted of an offence about which two opinions are possible. In such cases, there would be a necessity for the local Government to come to a decision whether the offence involves moral turpitude or not. It is, therefore, essential that that person should be given an opportunity to explain himself. Nobody would ever dream of doubting the moral turpitude of a thief, a murderer or a dacoit. But in some cases—after all there will be only a few such cases—even if a person is convicted of an offence after his appointment to the board, the minister in charge of this department may even as a matter of common-sense or as a matter of precaution call upon that person to explain certain matters with regard to his conviction. This amendment only makes it obligatory for him to do so. I do not see that any harm will be done by accepting the amendment.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : I am prepared to accept the amendment in principle, but I am not prepared to accept it as it is worded. If the honourable mover of the amendment would agree I would substitute this language—

Provided that before the Local Government notifies the removal of a member under this sub-section the reason for his proposed removal shall be communicated to the member concerned and he shall be given an opportunity of tendering an explanation in writing.

These words are taken verbatim from the Municipal Act to which reference has been made. If this amendment is agreeable to the honourable member, I shall move it in substitution of his amendment.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : In view of the Honourable Minister's remarks I beg leave to withdraw my amendment.

The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : I move—

That in sub-clause (1) (c) of clause 8 the following words be added after the word board:—

Provided that before the Local Government notifies the removal of a member under this sub-section the reason for his proposed removal shall be communicated to the member concerned and he shall be given an opportunity of tendering an explanation in writing.

The motion was carried.

Kanwar Mamraj Singh Chohan (Ambala-cum-Simla, non-Muhamadan, Rural) : I beg to move—

That in clause 8, sub-clause (1) (d) be omitted.

I move this amendment for very good reasons. This provision applies to all sorts of persons mentioned in clause 8, that is, to the Director of Industries, members nominated by Government, members elected by this Council and the members elected by commercial and industrial bodies. The procedure provided in this sub-clause is a queer one. It says that a person shall be removed from the board for not attending four consecutive meetings. (An honourable member : The clause reads "without excuse sufficient in the opinion of the Local Government"). I am fully conscious of these words in the sub-clause. If a member absents himself from four consecutive meetings he is asked by the local Government to give an explanation and then sits in judgment over that explanation to see whether the explanation given by him is sufficient reason or not. This means a long procedure for the Government and makes the position of Government rather difficult. Moreover it involves a long time between the member's offering an explanation and the Government's decision thereon. This is really highly undesirable especially when representatives of responsible bodies such as this Council and the commercial bodies are concerned. I have seen similar provisions in other constitutions, but where such provision exists there is always the power to co-opt members subject to the consent of the general body. Thus while the Government is considering the explanation of that member the board may have been allowed to co-opt another member to represent those interests which that particular member represented. But the power of co-option does not exist in the present measure whereas power is given to the local Government to remove a person elected by responsible bodies. For this reason I move my amendment.

Mr. President : Clause under consideration, amendment moved—

That in clause 8, sub-clause (1) (d) be omitted.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : Sir, I am sorry to disappoint the honourable member. But I am afraid I am unable to accept this amendment.

Mr. President : The question is—

That in clause 8, sub-clause (1) (d) be omitted.

The motion was lost.

Mr. President : The question is—

That clause 8 as amended stand part of the Bill.

The motion was carried.

Clause 9.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan (Ambala division, North-East, Muhammadan, Rural) : I move—

That in clause 9 the first proviso be omitted.

The effect of this will be that if a man who is elected by the Punjab Legislative Council renders his seat vacant, the next member should be elected and not nominated by Government and this is an amendment which does not require any lengthy speech. Why should the power be given to the Government to nominate? Surely the absence of the member will not render the proceedings of the board illegal and there is no hurry about it and even if it takes one month to fill up the place it does not matter. This Board should be composed of elected element and not of one whom the Government desires. With these words I move the amendment.

Mr. President : Clause under consideration, amendment moved is—

That in clause 9 the first proviso be omitted.

Khan Bahadur Mian Ahmad Yar Khan Daulatana (Muhammadan, Landholders) : I am very grateful to my friend, Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan, for having moved this amendment. I think it would have been a criminal indifference on the part of the members of this Council to have allowed the principle underlying this clause to be passed into Act without moving an amendment. Now, the Council elects several standing committees and also sends some members to the Railway Advisory Committee and if there is any seat that falls vacant it is either filled by the re-election by the Council or a substitute is nominated to it by the representative of the Council, that is yourself, Mr. President, from the same group to which his predecessor belonged. It is really amusing to find that in 1935 an Honourable Minister brings in a Bill in which there is such an irresponsible clause. It means that the power that we have already got is taken away from us instead of new powers being given to us. I think this is a principle which should be resented by all the members of this House and we should not allow the Government to take away any powers that we enjoy at the present moment. At the same time it is very gratifying for me to note that the Honourable Minister has such a great confidence in the future government of this province because he has by these Bills placed such vast powers in the hands of the future governments of this province which he was pleased to call sometime ago as the product of "the cup of poison."

Mr. M. A. Ghani (Nominated, non-official) : This proviso for the omission of which this amendment has been moved provides that where a member elected by this House ceases to be a member of the board, the local Government will be authorised to nominate a member in his place. So far as the question of nomination is concerned, I may quote the dictum of Lord

Lothian that in autonomous governments there is no nomination. As under the new Government of India Act we are going to have an autonomous government, my submission is that the power of nomination should not be given to the local Government or anybody else. I fail to understand why in the place of a member elected by this House the Government should nominate one, and why this very House should not be given an opportunity to elect another member in the place of one who ceases to be a member. Yesterday I wanted to give certain powers to the Government, but the Government refused to have those powers. Now the Government want to have this power of nomination. This is nothing but usurping the rights of this House by the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government. If we are going to have an autonomous government we should have the right of electing members on all bodies which are to have elected members. I, therefore, most strenuously oppose this proviso and heartily support the amendment.

Pir Akbar Ali (Ferozepore, Muhammadan, Rural) : I had no intention to speak on this Bill because I was one of the members who were on the select committee. But this amendment is so necessary that it should be accepted by the Government. Here election is being replaced by nomination. When once a member has been elected by the Legislative Council and he vacates his seat in any way, then it is provided that his seat be filled up by nomination. It is not reasonable in any way and I therefore strongly support the amendment.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang (Minister for Local Self-Government) : I am afraid the importance of this proviso has not been fully realised or if it has been fully realised, the idea behind it has not been properly appreciated. In order to appreciate this proviso, one should read the body of the clause itself. It says—

“When the place of an appointed or elected member of a Board becomes vacant by his removal, resignation or death, a new member shall be appointed or elected in the manner provided in section 3, and shall hold office so long as the member whose place he fills would have been entitled to hold office, if such vacancy had not occurred :

Provided that if the place of any member elected by the Punjab Legislative Council becomes vacant, the Local Government may nominate another non-official member of the Punjab Legislative Council in his place.”

It has been said that this proviso is undemocratic, that it takes away the right that this Council enjoys at present. With great respect to the honourable mover of this amendment, I would say that the Council does not enjoy this right at present, because no right has yet come into existence. Under this Bill when it becomes law, the Council will be given the right of electing five members as honourable members have seen from clause 3 (d). Now the principle on which the Punjab Council has to elect those five members is the principle of proportionate representation by means of transferable vote. Supposing by that process three Muhammadans have been elected, one Sikh and one Hindu or whatever the number may be and it so happens that the Sikh representative drops out by resignation or he goes to England then there is one vacancy. If you realise that the principle laid down in clause 3 (d) would not be applicable when only one person has to be elected, the whole Council may elect him. The apprehension of the minorities would be that the substitute would be elected as the majority party likes. It was to obviate that possibility of a grievance or of an apprehension that this proviso was put in. I appreciate what the honourable member Mian Ahmad Yar Khan Daulatana has said about my confidence in the future government. I am very glad if he has taken this Bill as evidence of my belief in the future government. He is welcome to draw his own conclusions. But certainly, judging from the mentality and psychology of the members of this House and of the public in general, I feel that they would probably have less apprehension if they know that the nomination is in the hands of the local Government and not in the hands of a particular rival party in the Council. Then the question comes in whether the nomination should be made by the President or by the local Government. I have full confidence in our President; but I do not know who the President is going to be in the future. The present President may continue as long as Providence would be pleased to permit him to continue, but even he, I appeal to you on the very basis of democracy for which all the members on this side have shown so much concern, is an individual whereas the local Government will not consist of a single individual. The President, howsoever great and impartial he may be, will be an individual and two are better than one and perhaps five or six would be still better than one. Local Government would not mean only one Minister in charge of Industries. Under the new constitution it would mean the whole cabinet, because we hope there would be real joint responsibility and every Minister will act in accordance with the wishes of the cabinet as a whole and not on his own personal responsibility. Even under the present constitution, the local Government does not mean the Minister, as has been very erroneously supposed by many people. People come to me and I am sure they go to my other colleagues saying "you can do this, why do you not do this?" We find it said on the platform and in the Press that the Minister has done this injustice or shown that favour and so on and so forth. They are totally ignorant of the meaning of local Government. Local Government under the present Act does not mean the Minister alone. Under the new Act it would mean the whole cabinet. Therefore, I think that even the honourable President, if he were speaking from the floor of the House, would support me in this that the proviso as framed is better than the suggestion made by the honourable mover of this amendment. In any case, there is no amendment to that effect and I am sure for the reasons that I have given, the House would oppose this motion of deletion made by the honourable mover and would support the clause as it stands. There is one amendment, however, to which I just want to draw the attention of the House and which will be presently placed before this House. I am sure no more explanation is necessary.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan : The explanation which the Honourable Minister has given for not accepting this amendment applies with greater force to the Government which will come into existence in the future. He has had a fling at the Muslims who will form a majority in the next Council. Suppose there are 4 Muslims, two Hindus and one Sikh in the board. He says, the Muslims would be in a majority. Does he not know that? The Chief Minister must be a Muslim and if he is so minded the evil would be removed. But the Council after all is a big body consisting of 175 members and I do not think the Council will be unreasonable to exclude the Sikhs.

That will never happen. The Government or the cabinet will be a small body though perhaps one community may be in a majority. If the Honourable Minister is so much afraid of the next Council then he can leave this power with the President and surely he cannot mean that the President, whoever he is, whether Hindu, Muslim or a Sikh, would not have greater regard for the members of this Council in not giving due representation to each community than the Government under the next constitution. He is perhaps labouring under the mistake that the Governor will interfere in such cases. I do not think he will, and his ideas gain no strength from the explanation which he has given and if he is now out to mislead I think he is surely mistaken in saying that the Government will be after all more mindful of the communal interests than this Council.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : It is useless to protest against the language of this honourable member but I think even he should use more appropriate language.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan : I have not used any unparliamentary language or expression. Will he point out even a single word ?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : You are accusing me of misleading the House.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan : It is a parliamentary expression and at least not as bad as atrocious conduct.

Mr. President : I am doubtful whether "Misleading" is an unparliamentary expression ; but as its use is personal, I suggest its withdrawal.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan : Then I withdraw it. We must stick to every little power or privilege that we have got. The idea that the representation of a particular community will be disturbed is a far fetched idea. This Council is a responsible body and I can give instances of their respecting the rights of every community. We had to nominate three members to the Railway Advisory Board and as the biggest party we were sure to have all three from our party but in deference to our Sikh friends, the Muslims withdrew their nomination in favour of one candidate and a Sikh was elected. The Council can show much greater sense of propriety than the present Government. In such bodies we should not give this power to the Government and again I appeal to the Honourable Minister to think over this. In municipalities and district boards and Legislative Council whenever a vacancy occurs of an elected member an elected member always substitutes him and not a nominated member. How is it that having been Minister for Local Self-Government and having worked the municipalities for such a long time, he has thrown this principle away ? Why did he not bring this principle in the municipalities ? In the municipality of Beri, to which I drew the attention of the House the other day, there are all Hindus and not a single Muslim and in a vacancy not a single Muslim can be elected. Why did he not introduce that principle there ? Yet he has the hardihood of defending it and casting a slur on the next Council. I should say that the Council under the future constitution will not be as irresponsible as the present Executive Council. The Council will at least recognize its master, the electorate, whereas the Government is almost irresponsible, though I think the next Government will be more responsible. With these words

[Ch. Allah Dad Khan.]

I press this amendment to the notice of the honourable members and if we are jealous of our rights and privileges then we should never leave a right or privilege which has accrued to us whatever evil there may be in it, although I have shown that this evil exists only in the imagination of the Honourable Minister. With these words I commend this amendment to the honourable members of this House.

Mr. President : The amendment moved by the honourable member Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan appears to be out of order. According to clause 3, just passed by the House, the Punjab Legislative Council has to elect its representatives to the Board according to the principle of proportional representation by means of the single transferable vote. But that system can apply only when two or more members are to be elected. Therefore, as pointed out by the Honourable Minister, when only one member has to be elected, how is that system to be applied ?

Pir Akbar Ali : The same principle will apply as provided in sub-clause (d).

Mr. M. A. Ghani : I do appreciate the difficulty which has been pointed out by you, but I think it will be left to the good sense of the House to elect a member of the same group to which the member who has ceased to be a member belonged. Supposing there was a Sikh member and he has ceased to be a member. Then I believe the Council will have the good sense of electing a Sikh member and not a Muslim member. In this way the difficulty can be obviated.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : I am very grateful to you, Mr. President, for supporting me by pointing out that the amendment is inconsistent with the part of the Bill which the House has already passed. I may just clear the mind of the House as to the point raised by Mian Ahmad Yar Khan. It is not an act of trespass on the rights of this House at all. It is a new right which is being created under this law under certain reservations. This power is not possessed by the House at present, under any law that is in existence. There is no question of principle either which is involved. A special law is being enacted, and under that law a privilege is being extended to the Council which it does not possess either under the Government of India Act which is in force at present or the Act that is to come into force, nor under any other existing Act. That privilege is being extended to the Council and I think the power that is extending this privilege to the Council can also impose some reservations and restrictions on the exercise of that right. If that right has been exercised by the Council once, it is open to the power which gives this right to add a reservation that in case a member elected by the Punjab Legislative Council goes out his place will be filled not by election but by nomination by Government. I do not see any breach of any constitution whatsoever in the proviso. No constitution has been pointed out to me, no provision in any Act has been quoted against which this proviso even to the slightest extent militates. Reference has been made to the procedure for filling vacancies in the Standing Committees of the Council. I would submit that the analogy does not hold good in the present case. The President exercises the power of filling up vacancies on standing committees when the Council is not sitting because those committees are subsidiary bodies to the Council. There is nothing in our Constitutional Manual giving any power to the President—I speak subject to correction—of nominating members to any committees which are not committees of this House. Standing Committees are all subsidiary committees of this Council exercising powers delegated by the Council to those committees and naturally, when a vacancy occurs on those committees and the Council is not sitting, it must be the President who would nominate a member to fill that vacancy. But this board is a body which is going to be created not to serve under the Council, not to exercise any powers delegated by the Council, not to do any act which is referred to it by the Council, but to tender advice to the Government and it is for the Government under this measure to select the persons from whom to take that advice. It has extended one privilege to this Council, to elect five members, and it has qualified that privilege by the proviso that a casual vacancy will be filled by the Government itself by nomination.

There is another reason also. The Council may not be sitting, it may not be possible for the Council to sit for six months, because there are no regular periods prescribed for the holding of the sessions of the Council. And there may be important business before the board. It should, therefore, be possible for the Government to fill up a casual vacancy of this kind. I am sure you will agree with me that this amendment is entirely out of order and if the honourable mover does not withdraw it you will be pleased to rule it out.

Mr. President : The amendment is clearly out of order and I rule accordingly. The proviso in the Bill will stand.

I have just received notice of an amendment by Chaudhri Riasat Ali proposing that for the words "local Government" in the proviso the word "President" be substituted.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit : I object to any such amendments. They are ill drafted, very hastily done and we have no notice of them. Anything might be said against the President in considering the amendment which we do not want to say. I object to the amendment and it should not be permitted.

Mr. President : Objection is taken to the amendment being moved and I uphold the objection.

Mr. J. D. Anderson (Legal Remembrancer) : I beg to move—

That in clause 9 at the end of the first proviso after the words 'in his place' the following words be added :—

'But the person so nominated shall be subject to retirement at the same time as if he had become a member of the Board on the day on which the member of the Board in whose place he is nominated was last appointed a member of the Board'.

I have not much to say in support of this amendment of which the purpose, I think, is obvious. I cannot myself imagine that any Government would take advantage of the proviso as it was originally drafted, but technically it is possible that a government by nominating for a particular period could deprive the House of its rights of election. It is to give statutory protection to the rights of this House and of the Assembly which will take the place of this House that an amendment in some such form is necessary.

[Mr. J. D. Anderson.]

I should like to say a word or two about the actual drafting of the amendment. I have followed in it section 84 of the Indian Companies Act of 1913. It is a section in that Act which deals with casual vacancies. It is possible that the House might prefer that the actual drafting should follow that of the sentence at the end of the main part of this clause. If so, obviously the change can be made by the drafting committee. I move my amendment.

Mr. President : The question is—

That in clause 9 at the end of the first proviso after the words 'in his place' the following words be added :—

'but the person so nominated shall be subject to retirement at the same time as if he had become a member of the board on the day on which the member of the board in whose place he is nominated was last appointed a member of the board.'

The motion was carried.

Mr. President : The question is—

That clause 9 as amended stand part of the Bill.

The motion was carried.

Clauses 10 to 16.

Mr. President : The question is—

That clauses 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15 and 16 stand part of the Bill.

The motion was carried.

Clause 17.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram (South-east Rohtak, non-Muhammadan, Rural) : I beg to move—

That in clause 17, lines 2 to 4 the words 'may inter alia include the following' be omitted and in their place the following words be substituted :—

'shall be one or more of the following.'

Mr. President : The honourable member may not move the whole amendment. He may move that the word "may" be deleted.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : I beg to move—

That in clause 17 the word 'may' between the words 'given' and 'inter alia' be omitted.

Mr. President : Clause under consideration, amendment moved is—

That in clause 17 the word 'may' between the words 'given' and 'inter alia' be omitted.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang (Minister for Local Self-Government) : I am afraid I cannot accept this. It will spoil the sentence and also spoil the chances of Government's amendment because it will render the sentence meaningless.

Mr. President : The question is—

That in clause 17 the word 'may' between the words 'given' and 'inter alia' be omitted.

The motion was lost.

Mr. J. D. Anderson (Legal Remembrancer) : I beg to move—

That in clause 17 the words 'inter alia' between the words 'may' and 'include' be omitted.

In the select committee when the first proposal was made to insert these words my instinct warned me against them. I was over-ruled. Since then I have thought a good deal about these words and reason has since reinforced instinct. My objection to the words is not so much that they are redundant, but that they are misleading. My objection is this. There are a number of Latin words and expressions which have for all practical purposes become part of the English language. In Acts of a legislature we use such expressions as per centum and per annum and everybody knows what they mean, as they are ordinary expressions in common life. The words inter alia are not a term of art in that sense at all. I cannot find them in any legal dictionary to which I have access and I do not know any judgment of any court which has pronounced upon the exact meaning which is to be given to them. I am not sure myself what the exact meaning is. Among the expressions used in the courts I may mention inter vivos. The Latin word "inter" is commonly used, and I think the legal members of the House will bear me out when I say that the meaning is 'from amongst' or 'as between.' A transfer inter vivos is a transfer from one living person to another living person and that I think is the ordinary meaning of 'inter.' But the meaning which is sought to be given to 'inter' here is a different one. It is 'among.' I do not think it can be used in that sense. You can use it specially in that sense. Take any Latin tag, inter arma silent leges—when surrounded by arms, the law courts cease to function. But that is a special meaning and I do not think the meaning here is intended to be that. I do not know what meanings the courts would attach to these words. I know at the moment that these words inter alia are a rather fashionable form of slang. If you pick up any judgment of a court, you will find the words inter alia as commonly used as you find the phrase the plaintiff sued on the footing of a bill or whatever it may be. It happens for the moment to be a phrase commonly used. But merely because a phrase is fashionable is no good reason for including it in an Act. If we are talking Latin, I can quote many expressions for instance, multa renascentur quae jam cecidere, cadent quae quae nunc sunt in honore vocabula, si volet usus quem penes arbitrium est et jus et norma loquendi.

I do not know whether I am in order in quoting before the House these Latin words but there is no doubt that their use in an Act of legislature is doubtful. There are many people who do not understand Latin and if you get a sub-judge in a distant part of the province to adjudicate upon the exact meaning of these words he is going to be in grave difficulty. I move the amendment.

Mr. President : Clause under consideration, amendment moved—

That in clause 17 the words 'inter alia' between the words 'may' and 'include' be omitted.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri (Punjab Industries): The reasons given by the Legal Remembrancer are convincing and I think his amendment should be accepted. I, as a member of the select committee, want to point out as to why the words 'inter alia' were added to section 17. The object of the members of the select committee was that the State aid which is to be given under section 17 should not be confined to the forms of

[R. B. Mr. Mukand Lal Puri.]

State aid which are detailed in section 17 but the State may and should in suitable cases, give aid in other forms not mentioned in the Act. Under the Bill, as proposed originally by the Government, it was also permissible to do so, but some members of the select committee wanted that the words 'inter alia' may be added to emphasise their desire that the State aid was not to be confined only to the forms which are specified in section 17. As a lawyer I am definitely of opinion that the original section as put in by Government or as now proposed, without the words 'inter alia' would mean exactly the same thing. When the word "include" is used to define any particular term, what follows is merely illustrative and not exhaustive. In this case State would be able, if necessary, to give aid in forms other than those mentioned in the section. Therefore, I have no hesitation in commending to the consideration of the House the omission of the words 'inter alia' because they do not at all affect the object of those who wanted to put in the words 'inter alia' which was merely to emphasise what was equally obvious in the language of the Act. We should avoid use of unnecessary words and specially, as pointed out by the Legal Remembrancer, of Latin words.

Mr. President : The question is—

That in clause 17 the words 'inter alia' between the words 'may' and 'include' be omitted.

The motion was carried.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram (South-East Rohtak, non-Muhammdan, Rural) : I beg to move—

That in clause 17, sub-clause (c), line 1, the word "gross" be added between the words "minimum" and "return."

The object of this amendment is that the resources of this province should not be committed to State aid in a manner in which the Government will be entirely at the mercy of the management of the industries concerned. Unless we add the word "gross" before the word "return," the management of an industry may so manouvre the whole thing that the minimum return which is to be guaranteed by the Government will never materialise except on the payment of a very large sum by the Government. I shall explain the point a little further. Suppose a return of 4 per cent. is guaranteed by the local Government. The management can easily engage fifty persons where only thirty or forty will do. The management can easily fix salaries on a lavish scale and a man who is worth only Rs. 200 a month may be paid Rs. 300 a month. In that way a huge expenditure may be incurred by the management on their own relations and friends at the cost of the general tax-payers. Therefore, I beg to submit that in order to safeguard the interests of the general tax-payer the word "gross" should be inserted between the words "minimum" and "return."

Mr. President : Clause under consideration, amendment moved—

That in clause 17, sub-clause (c), line 1, the word "gross" be added between the words "minimum" and "return."

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang (Minister for Local Self-Government) : I am afraid I cannot accept the amendment, because it is not apparently quite well considered. It is very difficult to define "gross return" or "gross profits." You may ask anyone who knows anything about industry to define "gross profits" and he will find it hopeless. "Minimum return" all understand, because that is something definite. It can be reduced to a percentage, it can be reduced to rupees, annas and pies. But what is a gross return? Is the interest to be deducted from this or not? Are the establishment charges to be deducted from it or not? Is depreciation going to be deducted from it or not? Are repairs and replacements to be deducted from the profits or not? Is the bonus or provident funds of the establishment going to be deducted or not? Unless you add a schedule of about two foolscap pages you will not be able to define what the Government would understand or the applicant for State aid would understand by gross return. I am sure a little more reflection would convince the honourable mover of this amendment that it is impracticable, that it is vague, and with due respect to the honourable member, meaningless, because the expression is incapable of being reduced to any definite character whatsoever. I am sure that the honourable member will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. President : The question is—

That in clause 17, sub-clause (c), line 1, the word "gross" be added between the words "minimum" and "return."

The motion was lost.

Mr. President : The question is—

That clause 17 as amended stand part of the Bill.

The motion was carried.

Clause 18.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram (South-east Rohtak, non-Muhammdan, Rural) : I beg to move—

That in clause 18 the following proviso be added at the end :—

Provided that preference shall always be given to an industry which consumes the agricultural or mineral products of the province.

The object of the amendment is manifest. If there are several schemes and the funds at the disposal of Government are limited, then, obviously the local Government will have to make a choice between the claims of various industries. It will have to select a particular industry or a particular number of industries to which State aid can be extended; and it will have to make up its mind as to the one or ones which should be refused this aid. When there is a conflict of claims of this character between an industry which will consume local products, either mineral or agricultural, and others which will depend for their consumption of raw materials on things other than those produced in the province, I think it is only fair that preference should be given to the industry which consumes local products. Therefore I urge that this amendment should be accepted by the Government.

Mr. President : The question is—

That in clause 18 the following proviso be added at the end :—

Provided that preference shall always be given to an industry which consumes the agricultural or mineral products of the province.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram (South-east Rohtak, non-Muhammdan, Rural) : I move—

In clause 20, line 6, the following words be added between the word "department" and the word "provided":—
'and to such conditions as the local Government may prescribe by rules made in this behalf'.

The object of this amendment is quite obvious and as this amendment has the effect of giving certain powers to the Government I hope Government will have no objection to have these powers.

Mr. President : Clause under consideration, amendment moved—

In clause 20, line 6, the following words be added between the word "department" and the word "provided":—

'and to such conditions as the local Government may prescribe by rules made in this behalf'.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang (Minister for Local Self-Government) : The amendment is unnecessary and I do not think we should add anything which is unnecessary, because the Government is certainly going to frame rules regulating the giving of loans and if the honourable mover had turned to the last clause of the Bill he would have found that under that clause, (clause 46), powers have been given to the Government to frame rules to carry out the objects of this Bills and clause 20 has been specifically referred to there. Even if that had not been referred to, the last sub-clause of clause 46, sub-clause (r) says, "all other matters pertaining to the working of this Act." That would cover this. The amendment is therefore unnecessary.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : I beg leave to withdraw the amendment.

The amendment was by leave withdrawn.

Mr. F. C. Bourne (Secretary to Government, Electricity, Industries and Labour) : I beg to move—

In clause 20, the proviso be omitted.

This proviso, as the House will observe, has been introduced in the course of the deliberations of the select committee. That select committee, I think, can certainly be accepted as representing the opinion of this House and that select committee introduced this proviso with a view to reinforcing the Act as a fostering agency for industries. Government, however, though fully appreciating the importance of those functions in this Act, are at the same time bound to pay equal, if not more attention to their duty to look after the tax-payers' money. This proviso is intended, I may say, to assist the borrower who desires a loan, to encourage him come to Government for money. But to what extent are Government in a position to offer that encouragement? Is it right that we should usurp the place of the ordinary banking corporations? Take the present position, as the clause now reads. The last loan was raised by the Government in 1933. The rate of interest on that loan was 4 per cent. In no case, therefore, if this proviso were law, would the Government be in a position to charge interest on any loan at a higher rate than 5 per cent. Is that a fair position for the Government to place themselves in? Loans under this Act are going to be asked for by concerns who will not be able to raise money in the open market, they will be for starting industries which are chancy or dangerous; and Government will be taking a risk which the banks will not. In these circumstances, is it right to tie the Government down to a rate of interest which no bank can afford to give? That is the essence of the reasons on account of which Government cannot accept this proviso. Another point is that the position in a few years time may have changed. Supposing Government took a loan now, they would probably be getting it at  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. if not 3 per cent. In five years time can we say that 4 per cent. interest would be an adequate return in all circumstances? The state of the market is constantly changing. Not only that, the circumstances of the individual borrowers will differ enormously. One borrower will be able to give very adequate security. He may be known to be a safe man and Government will be able to give him a loan at a more or less generous rate. But in other cases Government must reserve the right to demand a higher rate of interest, if circumstances demand it. It is not fair, in the opinion of Government, that they should be tied down—not this Government only but all Governments of the future should be tied down to this very low rate of interest. A low rate of interest may be given in some cases. But it is impossible to expect Government never to go beyond this extremely low limit. I therefore move the amendment.

Mr. President : Clause under consideration, amendment moved—

That the proviso to clause 20 be omitted.

Shaikh Muhammad Sadiq (Amritsar City, Muhammdan, Urban) : I am shocked to hear that this very important proviso which was added by the select committee should now be opposed by the Government. I cannot understand the Honourable Minister allowing the Government to have this proviso omitted. This is really the heart and soul of the Bill. If he takes away the proviso, let him take back the rest of the Bill. Otherwise what is the use of it? I cannot understand why when our industries are languishing, when all over the world the Governments are helping their industries by giving cheap loans, our Government should not do the same thing and help our industries. After all, by charging one per cent. more, Government will not be losing anything at all. What is the meaning of saying that Government cannot bind itself? It is not a question of rate payers' money. I challenge my friend, the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government, and his Secretary, Mr. Bourne, to say how the rate payers will lose anything? Suppose Government borrows at 4 per cent., we say let them not charge from the industries more than 5 per cent. How does the Government lose anything in this transaction? Now they are coming forward as champions not of our industries but of the foreign banks. Now, what is the position? People go and borrow at 9, 12 and 15 per cent., whereas the Punjab Government can borrow at 3 per cent. and give it at 4 per cent. and encourage industries. I am surprised to hear the Honourable Minister acceding to the request of the Government. He must have threatened the Government that he would withdraw the Bill without that proviso which is most important. He should not allow such an important item in the whole Bill to be taken away in such a manner. Now, Sir, what do we find? In a country like England they are spending millions of pounds on industries. In Germany, France and America they are doing the same. They are waging wars spending millions of pounds and shedding their blood for the sake of trade. In fact you find all countries fighting with one another for nothing but trade. Here we find that our own Government are not content to take a profit of one per cent. which is after all a big sum. Government will take security from people who borrow money. Their property is there as security and if Government borrows at 4 per cent. they can charge 5 per cent.

So, I must respectfully urge the house not to allow this proviso to be omitted, because if you omit this proviso the next Government may charge 8, 9 or 10 per cent. and they might start a money-lending business. It will be no encouragement to industry and I ask the leader of my own party not to look only up to the nose and see how this will affect his own zamindars. Hundreds of thousands of zamindars will be employed in industries. Take this point that because money-lenders charge too much from the zamindars, therefore the industrialists should be made to pay the same rate and cheap money should not be provided to them. My answer will be that in any new Act which my honourable friend may bring when he is a Minister, the Government will say that loans should be given on 4 per cent. more. The object of this Bill is to give cheap money to everybody whether zamindars or industrialists and this demand of the industrialists that they should have cheap money will strengthen the hands of the agriculturists, because they will see that the industrialists cannot make two ends meet by 4 per cent. rate. Surely there is no reason why agriculturists pay 12 per cent. The result would be the starting of mortgage banks which will give cheap money to agriculturists. I cannot see any cogent reason given by my friends over there. They had much better take away the whole of the Bill than allow this proviso to be withdrawn. I therefore most strongly urge that this proviso should be allowed to remain, and if the leader of my party thinks that agriculture should be treated in the same way we can bring forward a Bill in which the Government can see that an agriculturist can borrow money at the same rate at which an industrialist can borrow. We are ready to see to that but it is no use cutting the nose to spite the face. Let the Government start mortgage banks and give cheap money to agriculturists. Let this principle be understood and acted upon. We should not make industries of this province suffer because Government wants to help certain banks.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram (South-east Rohtak, non-Muhammadan, Rural) : I am afraid I must oppose what has been suggested by the honourable member who represents Amritsar. I extend my whole-hearted support to the amendment which has been proposed by Mr. Bourne. I think it would be inconsistent with an amendment which is standing in my name lower down the list and which also stands later on in the name of one of the official members, that the rate of interest chargeable shall be the same as the rate on taccavi loans for the time being. If this proviso is allowed to stand then the result may be a contradiction in the rates of interest charged on loans given for agricultural purposes and the rate of interest charged on loans to industry. I think there ought to be one uniform rule for helping agriculturists and industrialists. There is absolutely no reason why the rate of interest which is charged on taccavi loans should not be chargeable on loans made to industrialists. What is intended is that there should be no invidious distinction as regards the rate of interest charged from agriculturists and from industrialists. Let there be one uniform rule for the rate of interest on loans to everybody. If the rate for industries is lower I have no objection, but it should not be lowered to a larger extent than the rate of interest chargeable to agriculturists. The whole object is to make the rate uniform for agriculture as well as industry.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri (Punjab Industries) : The object of this measure was to foster, if possible, certain industries in this province and this object is attempted to be achieved by laying down the forms in which the State may give aid to industries. The most important form in which the State proposes to give the aid is by giving loans. There are various other forms in which the State could give loans, in fact there are other forms which are expressly laid down in similar enactments of other provinces, but which unfortunately have been omitted from the present Bill. Therefore the most important method in which aid would be given is by means of loans. I do not for a moment accept the argument advanced from the official benches that the rate of interest in the case of industrial loans should be determined by the amount of security offered and should vary from loan to loan. If the security offered was very doubtful, I would not advise the State to advance the loan even at 8 or 9 per cent. The desirability of fostering or encouraging a particular industry is to be determined in the first instance, and then a reasonable prospect of its success is to be demonstrated and ascertained, and when it has been demonstrated by experiments or experts that this is in the interest of the province that a particular industry should be encouraged, it is then only that the question of State aid comes in. It was pointed out by the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government in the select committee that it will not in ordinary circumstances be necessary to draw upon the coffers of the Government for any aid which may be given to any industry, and it will be possible to float loans for this purpose. Therefore the Government should have enough money to meet its incidental expenses by charging one per cent. more than the rate it pays either to the Government of India or to those from whom it has raised the loan. I, therefore, submit that the clause which is proposed to be omitted is the cardinal and basic feature of the Bill, that if industry is to be helped by a loan it should be helped by a loan at a reasonable rate of interest. I repeat again that the Government would be very ill-advised in advancing loans to any industry whose prospects of success are very doubtful. Once the Government has decided that an industry is to be encouraged, the Government should help it on reasonable terms. The difficulty of the matter is that whenever any proposals for helping industries of this province are made, in spite of the big professions to the contrary that industries should be developed, our agriculturist members raise all kinds of obstacles. I, for one, would not grudge the grant of loans to agriculturists to meet their requirements on as liberal terms as possible by the floating of mortgage banks. Security of the money should be assured. Of course normal risks there always are and these will have to be taken by any Government which is undertaking the responsibility of encouraging industries. If assistance is to be given there is no justification for not lending money at one per cent. above what the Government itself is paying on its loans. The Government is certainly not going to transform itself into a banking corporation. Therefore I respectfully submit that if advance of loan is to be one of the forms in which the State aid is to be given, the advances should be provided for at a rate which does not cause any loss to the Government and which gives substantial help to the industry.

Khan Bahadur Malik Zaman Mehdi Khan (Sheikhupura, Muhammadan, Rural) : It has been hinted at that representatives of agriculture do not generally support any proposal brought forward before the Council for the fostering of industries. In this connection it may be borne in mind that agriculture is the greatest industry in this province and there seems to be no reason why any preferential treatment should be meted out to these new industries. If zamindars are asked and compelled to pay 7 or 8 per cent. for taccavi loans and in connection with co-operative loans, there seems to be no reason why the same treatment should not be meted out to these industries. Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri has stated that it is a question of security, but he probably does not know that in the case of taccavi loans to zamindars the heaviest and the strictest security that can be demanded is demanded from the zamindar. His moveable and immoveable property, his cattle and everything is practically taken as a security. We do not grudge this low rate of interest to industry but we should add a proviso that unless a similar rate is charged from the zamindar in connection with taccavi loans or co-operative loans we cannot agree to these lower rates. I, therefore, support this amendment moved by the Government members.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd (Finance Member) : I should explain that this amendment has been made to a great extent at the instance of the Finance Department because mainly of the risk which Mr. Mukand Lal Puri appears to think is non-existent. In the case of taccavi loans which are given at the rate of 1 per cent. above the rate at which we can borrow from the Government of India we have the security of land which is something very definite indeed and which, if the Government cares to pursue it to the utmost, is absolute security. In the case of industrial loans if Government confines itself to advances to enterprises which are absolutely secure then you might as well wipe out this Bill. If Government is not going to take any risk you might wipe out this Bill. If an industry is so secure that there is no fear of the loss of the advance which may be made to it, then surely you will get persons all over the country tumbling over each other to take up the shares and they will get as much as they want. In order to encourage industries, Government must take risks and advance loans to industries that they think have a chance of succeeding, but the success of which cannot possibly be foreseen. It is for that reason that the Finance Department considered that a margin of 1 per cent. above such rate at which the local Government borrowed was insufficient, and as I have explained, in the case of taccavi loans, we have very definite security. It is true that we sometime wipe out what is due to us on taccavi loans. Practically we do wipe out certain amounts but that is purely a matter of grace, and not because we have taken undue risks. In the case of industrial loans, I think the element of risk must be always in existence and for that reason I think the provision contained in that proviso is not satisfactory.

Mr. President : The question is—

That the proviso to clause 20 be omitted.

The motion was carried.

Mr. President : The question is—

That clause 20 as amended stand part of the Bill.

Mr. President : The question is—

That clauses 21 to 30 stand part of the Bill.

The motion was carried.

Clause 31.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : I move—

In clause 31, after sub-clause (b) the following be added as sub-clause (c) and the existing sub-clauses (c), (d) and (e) be re-numbered as (d), (e) and (f):—

‘(c) That overhead charges shall not exceed such proportion of the paid up capital as may be prescribed by the local Government.’

I am not an industrialist and I cannot lay claim to any expert knowledge of the subject. But when conversations were going on last year at Simla with the members of the British Cotton Delegation I happened to read a book in which the tactics employed by factory owners in order to spend very huge sums as overhead charges, with the object of concealing their total profits, were given. A Bengali expert of great repute has written a very large book covering about 500 or 600 pages, in which that expert has taken exception to the huge overhead charges which were put forward by industrialists in order to be able to claim protection. Therefore, I desire to place the Government on their guard against these overhead charges being inflated. It will be in the interest of the province, it will be in the interests of the finances of the province, that a definite proportion of capital should be fixed for overhead charges. Unless that limit is fixed God knows how much Government may have to pay to these industries. With these words I move the amendment.

Mr. President : Clause under consideration, amendment moved—

In clause 31, after sub-clause (b), the following be added as sub-clause (c) and the existing sub-clauses (c), (d) and (e) be re-numbered as (d), (e) and (f):—

‘(c) That overhead charges shall not exceed such proportion of the paid up capital as may be prescribed by the local Government.’

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang (Minister for Local Self-Government): I am afraid, again, that this amendment cannot be accepted by me. The sentiment lying behind the amendment is certainly praiseworthy and I appreciate it. But unfortunately the amendment is impracticable. It is impossible to fix overhead expenses in relation to the paid up capital. In the first place, in case an industrialist wants to cheat Government, he can raise the capital and can also raise the overhead expenses. He will deceive the Government in two ways instead of one. Because, then he will get four or five per cent. on a larger capital and will also have raised his overhead expenses. So that, by this amendment you will be encouraging a fraudulent industrialist who has borrowed from Government or to whom a guarantee has been given, to commit fraud. While, if the provision is left as it is, Government before it gives aid to any party will consider the pros and cons of the proposition laid before it. And if the Government suspects that the men who are applying to it for aid are not such as should be trusted, the Government or the Minister, whoever he may be, or the Director will show them the door and no aid would be given. It presupposes that the Government would be wide awake, that the Government would act honestly, that it would act carefully with all circumspection, and having once done that it would face the risk which is implied in giving aid for the development of industry. And that risk is not an unnatural or an unusual one. It must be faced. I have often impressed the importance of this on all those interested in the matter that no industry can be developed unless both the people and Government are prepared to take risks. If you give a guarantee, say at 4 per cent. on Rs. 10 lakhs and that industry does not earn anything you have to give Rs. 40,000 a year on the paid up capital of Rs. 10 lakhs. The guarantee is for five years. In five years you give Rs. 2 lakhs. That is the worst imaginable case where the industry in which people who presumably understood business have sunk Rs. 10 lakhs and in five years it has yielded nothing, so that Government has had to give 4 per cent. on the paid up capital every year for five years and it has thus lost Rs. 2 lakhs. I say, let the Government lose Rs. 2 lakhs and sit quietly over it because other people will have lost Rs. 10 lakhs. Unless the Government is prepared to share a part of the losses and to run the risk which other people with their hard earned money are prepared to undertake there can be no development of industries. The proposition implied in this amendment as I have said is not practicable. Otherwise I would have had no hesitation in accepting it. It is impossible to make it definite unless you hedge it round with various other more detailed safeguards and provisions and provisos. As it is, I am afraid, I cannot commend it to the House. (An honourable member : How do you define, overhead charges)? That is the difficulty. That is why I say the amendment is vague, it is impracticable. If you define overhead charges it must cover a very large space. What would be an overhead charge? Would telephone be an overhead charge? Will electricity be an overhead charge? Will, again, as I said while speaking on another amendment, the provident fund or the pension fund of the establishment be an overhead charge? Will depreciation or renewal fund or any sort of sinking fund be considered an overhead charge? You cannot exhaust the list. And where is the book to which you can go for a definition of the term? I do not pretend to know much myself but I have not come across any textbook in which overhead charges have been defined with any amount of accuracy. I have seen many balance sheets of many companies. But their items are different, their headings are different and it is impossible to say what are really genuine overhead charges which would appeal to the honourable mover. The amendment is thus vague, indefinite and incapable of being reduced to any amount of definiteness and cannot therefore be commended to the House.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : I wish to say one word by way of reply. The Honourable Minister says that he does not know much of industries or much of business. I certainly know much less than he knows. But the word overhead charges is very frequently used by industrialists. I think it has some meaning, for this word was not coined by me and has existed in the English language for a long time. (The Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government : Yes, a very wide and vague meaning). Very well, still it has some sort of connotation attached to it. Any reasonable items which fall under the head of overhead charges may be regarded as such charges. I am not prepared to accept the explanation given by the Honourable Minister that it is impossible to define this term. You may define it for all practical purposes according as you think best to do. But I refuse to believe that this word has no meaning or that no meaning can be attached to it. If it has no meaning, that is, definite and precise meaning, attached to it, attach to it a meaning which is intelligible to you or the Government. The author to whom I made a reference in my opening speech suggested two remedies. One was that during times of prosperity a definite limit should be fixed to the dividends that may be paid to shareholders and the other remedy suggested by him in order to safeguard against fraud and tricks of industrialists was that a definite maximum limit for overhead charges in reference to paid up capital should be laid down. I think that by drawing the attention of the Government I have done my duty, I have satisfied my conscience, and it is for the Government to consider whether it will or will not act up on the amendment proposed by me.

In clause 31, after sub-clause (b) the following be added as sub-clause (c) and the existing sub-clauses (c), (d) and (e) be re-numbered as (d), (e) and (f): —

“(c) That overhead charges shall not exceed such proportion of the paid up capital as may be prescribed by the local Government.”

STIPENDIARY STUDENTS, MACLAGAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE.

*5172. Chaudhri Faqir Husain Khan : Will the Honourable Minister for Agriculture please state whether it is a fact that each B class student of the MacLagan Engineering College, during the course of five years received Rs. 4,200 for a complete course, and in return paid nothing to the Government?

The Honourable Sardar Sir Jogendra Singh : It is true as regards the period up to 1930-31, but there was a return of Rs. 300 per student on account of hostel and lighting fees. Since then stipends have been reduced and subsequently abolished and replaced by scholarships which give an expenditure of Rs. 1,200 over a period of five years with a similar deduction on account of hostel and lighting fees.

STIPENDIARY STUDENTS, MACLAGAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE.

*5173. Chaudhri Faqir Husain Khan : Will the Honourable Minister for Agriculture please state the number of non-Muslim students in the MacLagan Engineering College, who benefited each year during the last five years ?

The Honourable Sardar Sir Jogendra Singh : It is assumed that the honourable member wants information regarding scholarships enjoyed by Muslim and non-Muslim 'B' class students of the MacLagan Engineering College. Scholarships were first granted in 1933 since when 19 Muslims, 19 Hindus, 10 Sikhs and 3 Christians have received them.

STIPENDS IN MACLAGAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE.

*5174. Chaudhri Faqir Husain Khan : Will the Honourable Minister for Agriculture please state—

- (a) the amount spent each year in the MacLagan Engineering College, as stipends for B Class students ;
- (b) the exact material gain which the expenditure of such a vast sum brought to the Government or to the public ?

The Honourable Sardar Sir Jogendra Singh : (a) The following amounts were spent during the past five years on stipends :—

|                 | Rs.    |
|-----------------|--------|
| 1931-32 .. .. . | 87,440 |
| 1932-33 .. .. . | 74,000 |

| 1934-35 .. .. . | 57,000 |
| 1935-36 .. .. . | 33,000 |

In 1932-33, stipends were abolished and instead 10 scholarships of Rs. 20 per mensem each were sanctioned but it will not be till 1937-38, when all the students on the old rates of pay would have passed out, that expenditure on stipends will cease entirely.

- (b) The exact material gain cannot be estimated.

INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.

*5175. Chaudhri Faqir Husain Khan : Will the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government please state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that he contemplates a new scheme of establishing industrial schools in the Punjab ;

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : (a) No ; existing schools are being reformed.

- (b) More specialised and more efficient training.

(c) There are no such formulæ. All communities are equally entitled to benefit.

MUSLIMS IN HYDRO-ELECTRIC DEPARTMENT.

*5176. Chaudhri Faqir Husain Khan : Will the Honourable Minister for Local Self-Government please state whether he is aware of the fact that in spite of the already existing paucity of Muslims in the Hydro-Electric Department the percentage of Muslims in the gazetted posts of the Hydro-Electric Department has been further reduced by recruiting five non-Muslims during the last six or seven months to these ranks ?

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : Since the 1st April 1935, 6 persons have been promoted and one appointed direct to gazetted posts in the Electricity Branch—out of these one is a Muslim and 6 are non-Muslims.

MILITARY ASSISTANT SURGEONS.

*5177. Chaudhri Afzal Haq : Will the Honourable Minister for Education kindly state—

- (a) whether it is a fact that during the tenure of office as Minister of Education and Public Health of Sir Fazl-i-Husain, the Punjab Government decided to stop further importation of military assistant surgeons into the Civil Medical Department and formulated certain rules to that effect ;
- (b) whether it is a fact that one officer of the military assistant class has recently been imported into the Punjab while five officers of that class are still in the Punjab Medical Service ;
- (c) whether in conformity with the policy of eliminating this class of medical officers from the Provincial Medical Service, Government proposes to take any steps in the matter ?

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon : (a) In 1925 it was decided by Government that no officer of the military assistant surgeon class would be transferred to civil employ in the Punjab save at the request of the local Government. Five posts, however, were reserved for officers of this class. This number has recently been reduced to 4. In 1929 it was further decided that the Punjab Government would not, except for very special reasons, import a fresh Indian Medical Department officer from outside the province to fill up a post not reserved for such officers.

(b) Yes. The officer in question was imported to fill a post reserved for I. M. D. officers, as no officer of that class was available from the members employed under the Punjab Government. The officer in question was brought into the province temporarily and will shortly revert.

(c) Does not arise.

PRINCIPAL, MEDICAL SCHOOL, AMRITSAR.

*5178. Chaudhri Afzal Haq : Will the Honourable Minister for Education kindly state—

- (a) whether the appointment of the Principal, Medical School, Amritsar, is one of those posts which is not reserved for the Indian Medical Service by the Secretary of State for India ;

- (b) how Government intends to fill that post now that it is due to fall vacant ?

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon : (a) Yes.

(b) The procedure laid down in regulation 9 of the regulations embodying orders made by the Secretary of State in Council under rule 12 of the Devolution Rules and published with Government of India notification of 12th October, 1932, will be followed in filling the vacancy.

THE PUNJAB DEBTORS' PROTECTION BILL.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram (South-East Rohtak, non-Muhammadan, Rural) : I present the report of the select committee on the Punjab Debtors' Protection Bill and move—

That the Punjab Debtors' Protection Bill as reported by the select committee be taken into consideration.

In view of the interest which this Bill has excited throughout the province I should request the House to extend its indulgence to me in respect of a speech which may be fairly long. Before I come to any specific provision of the Bill I wish to draw the attention of the House to a few broad considerations which are generally liable to be lost sight of. I shall enumerate them at once as briefly as possible.

The first consideration which we should keep constantly before our minds' eye is that the total population of the Punjab is 23·5 millions out of which 90 per cent. is in debt which means 21,10,000. As against the interests of this overwhelming section of the Punjab population are pitted the interests of just 40,000 money-lenders. Let us not forget that. The main, in fact, the most important question before the House is whether the interests of over 2 crores are to be safeguarded or the interests of this huge number are to be sacrificed for the interests of just 40,000 of sahukars. That is the first consideration to which I should earnestly request the House to turn its attention to. (An honourable member: Where from is this 90 per cent. taken?) From the book of life. The second consideration to which I request the House to pay heed is that barring the provisions, relating to the registration of money-lenders and to the reduction of limitation, there is nothing in the Bill which did not already exist in principle or which was not recognised in principle by the rules made by Government or by means of judicial decisions. I will just refer to the clauses to make this clear. Clause 2 refers only to definitions and does not require any particular attention. Clause 3 also defines the words "land" and "collector." Clauses 4 and 5 contain matters which were already recognised in practice and all that is sought by means of this Bill is to give statutory form to what already exists. Clauses 6, 7 and 8 relate to matters of procedure and limitation in cases of appeals. Clause 9 relates to the exemption of ancestral property from attachment. This principle was unequivocally recognised by a Full Bench Ruling of the Punjab Chief Court in 1913 which is reported as 4 Punjab Record, 1913. Clause 10 relates to the exemption of standing crops and standing trees from attachment or sale. Now here the exemption which is sought in respect of crop relates only to some crops and the intention even in respect of these crops is not to deprive the decree-holders of agricultural produce but just to protect standing crops from being ruined. Ordinarily what happens is that standing crops are attached and made over to a sipurdar who is not personally interested in the standing crops. The decree-holder is not allowed to touch those crops, and the judgment-debtor is not allowed either to tend or to harvest those crops. The result is more or less total loss of the produce. The object of this clause is simply to protect these crops from going to ruin entirely. Even here exceptions have been made in respect of sugarcane and cotton crops for the reason that if a decree-holder were asked to get these crops attached he will have to get an order of attachment in respect of every picking in the case of cotton and in respect of every bari (turn) which brings the cultivator his gur in the case of sugarcane. Therefore sugarcane and cotton have been exempted from the operation of this clause. The second portion of the clause refers to the exemption of standing fruit trees. There are certain portions of the province where land apart from fruit bearing trees has no value whatsoever and these trees were treated as land until three or four years ago. This sub-clause only seeks to give effect to what was recognised by judicial decisions until three or four years ago. The next clause relates to the reduction of the period of limitation to which I have already referred. This is certainly new and whether it will or it will not be an advantage to effect this reduction it is for the House to judge. Clause 12 relates to the burden of proof of consideration. As the Bill has emerged from the select committee it saves the general presumption under the Evidence Act and also the presumption under the Registration Act, and, practically, the transactions in which the burden of proof will be on the creditor are confined to those which take place between a money-lender and an agriculturist. As far as these transactions are concerned, with the exception to which I have already referred, the burden of proof used to be on the money-lender until about 1925 or 1926. The other clauses which follow relate to the registration of money-lenders, which again are new. It will thus appear that this Bill does not contain any provision, with the two exceptions already referred to, which is entirely new.

The third consideration to which I should like to draw the attention of the House is the unexpectedly large measure of support which this Bill has received from various quarters. With your permission, Sir, I should like to give an analysis of the support which this Bill has received. This analysis was prepared by me with the help of a friend and so far as I have been able to check it, it is quite accurate. Four judges of the High Court support the Bill practically in its entirety. Three judges of the High Court appear to favour the application of some provisions of the Bill to the tillers of the soil but think that in the main the provisions of the Bill go too far. One judge of the High Court seems to support the principle of the Bill but regards its provisions as too wide. One judge of the High Court objects to clauses 6 and 7 unless they are to be regarded as matters of policy. The same judge has less objection to clauses 3 and 4 and approves, by implication, the remaining clauses of the Bill. Five judges support the Bill in varying but very substantial degrees, two of them being in their support nearer to the first four than to any of the rest. Twenty-four deputy commissioners have expressed their opinions. Of these as many as thirteen support the Bill. Three are undecided and only eight oppose it. Seventeen small town committees have expressed their opinion. Seven of these are favourable and ten are opposed to the Bill. Only two notified areas have expressed their views about the Bill and both of them are in favour of this legislation. Three cantonment authorities have expressed an opinion and all three favour the measure. Opinions have been expressed by 56 other public bodies including public meetings. Out of these as many as 25 favour the Bill. Twenty-three individuals have expressed their views on the Bill; and thirteen of them support it. Twenty-four district boards have expressed their opinion and all of them favour this Bill.

One feature of the opposition on the part of most officials is that it is chiefly due to their objection on administrative grounds. I do not say that no official has opposed the Bill on its merits; there are some who have opposed it. But the burden of their opposition almost all through has been that if this Bill is enacted into law it will entail a very huge amount of work on deputy commissioners and commissioners, and these officers are not men of leisure. Therefore if we eliminate the portion of the opposition which proceeds upon administrative grounds, the volume of opposition to the Bill will be very considerably reduced. This is not all. I am very pleasantly surprised by the support which I have received from a quarter from which I have received nothing but consistent opposition so far. Here is a weekly Urdu paper named Guru Ghanthal which is issued from Lahore. Its issue of the 9th November makes a reference, a fairly long reference to this measure. I will just read a few sentences from the editorial note which appears in this issue :—

سود کی لعنت سے باشندگان پنجاب کو بچاؤ

” بلاشبہ سود ایک لعنت ہے جس سے کسی ملک کے باشندوں کو بچانا نہایت ضروری ہے۔ جس ملک کے لوگ اس لعنت کے بوجھ تلے دب جاتے ہیں وہ ملک کبھی ترقی نہیں کر سکتا۔

Having acknowledged its previous policy of consistent opposition to me the paper proceeds—

لیکن باشندگان پنجاب کو قرضہ اور سود کی لعنت سے نجات دلانے کے لئے وہ پنجاب کونسل میں جو کچھ کر رہے ہیں اس پر نہایت ٹھنڈے دل سے غور کرنے کی ضرورت ہے۔ ہم مانتے ہیں اور تسلیم کرتے ہیں کہ ان کے مجوزہ قانون ساہوکار سے چند ہزار ساہوکاروں کو تکلیف ہوگی۔ مگر یہ امر بھی یاد رکھنا چاہئے کہ اس سے پنجاب کے دو کروڑ آدمیوں کو فائدہ پہنچے گا۔

[R. B. Ch. Chhotu Ram.]

Now the support coming from the quarter which I have disclosed is of a very deep significance. Unless the principle underlying this Bill had been perfectly sound, the paper, owned and managed by a non-agriculturist drawn from a class which follows the profession of money-lending, would not possibly have extended its support to my Bill. Again, it is sometimes suggested that the only section of the Punjab population which favours the present measure consists of agricultural and depressed classes alone. Apart from agricultural classes and depressed classes, it has been suggested very frequently, no other class favours either the specific provisions of the Bill or the principle of the Bill. But I have received innumerable letters from non-agricultural classes which support this Bill. Some of the letters are signed by more than a hundred, others are signed by over a score, and yet others by a dozen people or so. Even to-day I have received a post-card in which I have been asked not to forget that non-agricultural classes are also indebted and that their interests also require as much protection as the interests of agricultural classes. As a matter of fact, the contents of that post-card make a sort of complaint that I have been rather selfish and I have not so framed my Bill as to cover the case of non-agricultural classes also. Another paper, weekly paper again, which is named Desh Bhagat, Multan, supports my Bill, and through its columns, many who call themselves non-agriculturist zamindars strongly urge that the benefit of my present Bill should be extended to them also, and like the previous Bill, that is, the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Bill, this Bill should not be restricted in its application to agriculturists only. Therefore I think I can reasonably claim that my Bill has received an amount of support which certainly surpasses my expectations, and I believe also surpasses the expectations of those who are more or less in an impartial state of mind while to those who are opposed to this measure the amount of support which has been extended to my Bill will be really staggering. In view of the support which I have been able to receive for my measure, I think, I can request the House reasonably to pass the present Bill with such alterations as they think are essential in the interests of debtors or in the interests of honest creditors.

I must also make a reference to the awakening which has taken place among the ignorant masses. The best tribute to this awakening came from Shrimati Lekhwati Jain when she was making a speech in opposition of this Bill. She made a reference that the zamindar members of the House are anxious to push forward a legislation of this character because they fear that unless they gave their support to this Bill, they would have no chance of being elected. This means quite clearly that the masses are fully alive to the need and useful character of this legislation. If this had not been the case Shrimati Lekhwati Jain would have been the last person to make a reference to the feelings which she must have observed for herself and which exist from one corner of the Punjab to the other. This awakening of the masses requires to be carefully noted not only by zamindar members, but also by the representatives of money-lending interests in this House and the official benches. It is sometimes assumed that the masses are sleeping and that they will not be affected this way or that way in their feelings whether a particular legislation is passed or is not passed, whether a particular legislation is opposed or is not opposed by certain interests. I think the House as a whole should take into consideration the deep feelings which have been stirred throughout in favour of my Bill.

Another consideration to which I may invite the attention of the House is that the present Bill is really a complement to the Bill which was passed by this Council during the Budget Session, that is, the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Bill.

Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath : Or stultifying its provisions, as I will show.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : That is your view, not mine. I can certainly depend upon the good sense of the House to come to a fairer conclusion than has been reached by Raja Narendra Nath. As the member in charge of the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Bill explained in the House and as I also had the occasion to explain to the House, there were certain clauses inserted in that Bill during the select committee stage in respect of which the Governor-General had not given his previous sanction and in the absence of which previous sanction that Bill could not have been proceeded with. Another reason given by the honourable member in charge was that in respect of these particular clauses the High Court had not had any opportunity of expressing its opinion. Therefore certain clauses which were added to that Bill by the select committee had to be omitted. This Bill supplies the deficiency which the select committee felt about the provisions of the predecessor of the Bill which is now before us. In another way also this Bill may be regarded as a necessary corollary to the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act. The judgment debtors, ordinarily speaking, will not be liable to arrest in future. Houses belonging to agriculturists, unless they can be proved to have been unoccupied or to have remained vacant for more than a year, will not be available for the execution of a decree. Therefore decree-holders will naturally concentrate upon the attachment of agricultural land, and unless a fresh law is enacted to give statutory form to the practice which already existed in respect of agricultural land, I am sure that a very large proportion of the agricultural land of this province will be attached and temporarily alienated. The result of this wholesale attachment of land will be that a very large proportion of the population will be thrown out of employment, and it is in the interests of everybody, it is in the interests of debtor classes, it is in the interests of money-lending classes, and it is also in the interests of law and order that no wholesale dispossession of agricultural classes should take place in consequence of attachment of agricultural land. This attachment is bound to be resorted to more and more by decree-holders in future in view of the provisions that have already been passed by this House in the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act.

Another factor to which I may be allowed to draw the attention of the House is that the debtor classes form as high a proportion as 90 per cent. of the population of the whole province. The whole economic fabric of the province depends upon the prosperity of these classes. If these classes perish, economically, I think every other section of the population will have ultimately to perish. Therefore it is really no act of obligation to the debtor classes that they should be kept alive and healthy. If the Government exchequer is to be replenished regularly every year, if trading classes have to be enabled to carry on their business profitably, then this huge section of the population should be kept not only in existence, but in healthy economic existence. If there is an end to their prosperity they will not be able to contribute what they have been contributing to the provincial revenues so far, and they will not be able to provide the requisite amount of custom to trading classes. Their purchasing power would be so seriously crippled, all the trading classes and all the classes of middlemen will come to grief within a very short time of the economic collapse of this 90 per cent. section of the Punjab population.

Any way we are all on trial in respect of this legislation. Government is on trial because it will have to prove that its sympathy for the poorer classes is genuine and real and deeper than lip sympathy. I do not mean to suggest that the Government has not shown sympathy towards the poorer classes of the population in the past or that it will not show its sympathy even in respect of the present Bill. But I think I ought specifically to draw the attention of the Government to the fact that its attitude towards this legislation will really be a test of the genuineness of its sympathy. If Government is unable to extend its support even to things which have been recognized either as good law or as good custom for the last 50 years, it will be very difficult for Government to contend that it is in real and genuine sympathy with the debtor classes. In the same way I may be allowed to suggest that the Bill will be an acid test of the sympathy of the Hindu Sabha group towards the weaker section of its community. The Hindu Sabha group in this House does not represent only money-lending interests. Money-lenders are no more than 40,000 in this province. Even assuming that the whole lot of these 40,000 are drawn from the ranks of the Hindu community there is another very large section of the population which is Hindu. The total population of Hindus in this province may be put roughly at 70 lakhs. If we exclude ten per cent. of this population as being entirely free from debt, sixty-three lakhs still remain who are indebted. If the members of the Hindu Sabha group in this House prefer to safeguard the interests of forty-thousand people and ignore the interests of sixty-three lakhs who are just as good Hindus as they themselves or money-lenders, are, they cannot possibly claim that they are the real protectors of Hindu interests. That is a warning which I think I might reasonably be allowed to utter in this House. The members of the Hindu Sabha group will have to come out definitely and give proof of their sympathy for either sixty-three lakhs of people or just for forty thousand. If they prefer to side with the forty thousand we will know where we stand, and they will know where they stand, and the debtor classes will know how far their interests are dear to the members of the Hindu Sabha group in this House.

About the Sikhs I need not say very much. The feeling against indebtedness, the feeling in favour of some legislation which will relieve the burden of indebtedness, among Sikhs is very deep and very acute. I think the Sikh members know it quite well. They realise the strength of feeling which lies behind the demand of the people for a really effective lightening of the burden of indebtedness. There was a conference in Toba Tek Singh which was very largely attended. That conference passed a resolution in favour of this Bill unanimously. There was another very largely attended conference held not many weeks ago at Lyallpur. There again, the conference passed a unanimous resolution in favour of this Bill. There was a third conference held within the last ten days, I believe, in Jullundur. This conference was known as the Doaba conference. This conference passed a resolution which was more drastic than any provision of this Bill or anything which this House is likely to agree to. Therefore, it may be taken for granted that the feeling among Sikhs is very deep in favour of a legislation of the character which this House has at present before it. I am glad to say that so far as the Sikh group in this House is concerned, its attitude as a whole has been very helpful and very sympathetic. I need hardly say anything more with regard to their attitude.

With regard to the members of my own party I need, again, hardly say anything. I do not think there is a single member of my party who is in the least opposed to the provisions of this Bill. The support from this section will thus be whole-hearted and solid.

After these remarks about the general considerations which should be borne in mind by the House as a whole I may also be allowed to say just a few words with regard to the changes which were made by the select committee. The select committee consisted of thirteen members. Out of this thirteen, two were officials and one was a non-agriculturist. The select committee had an overwhelming majority of agriculturists on it. But the agriculturist members did not take advantage of this majority, and agreed to certain changes which they thought were reasonable. In the initial stage the Hindu Sabha group seems to have decided to non-co-operate so far as the proceedings of the select committee were concerned, but their absence was not taken advantage of by us. As a matter of fact, the select committee was very careful to see that the absence of the members of the Hindu Sabha group did not result in anything which was unreasonable. We had a clear majority. (An honourable member: The members of the Anjuman-i-Islam take a contrary view). I am not aware of that. When that view comes before the House we shall see how to deal with it. Let someone give expression to the views of the Anjuman-i-Islam. I was submitting that the absence of the Hindu Sabha members from the select committee was not allowed to do any harm to the money-lending interests. As a matter of fact, the select committee showed very considerable deference to the views of those who had decided to absent themselves from the proceedings of the select committee and in spite of a clear majority, agriculturist members agreed to insert many amendments which were suggested by official members, particularly with regard to appeals against the order of the collector when dealing with temporary alienation of land or when removing the name of a money-lender from the register of money-lenders. The amendments made by the select committee have very considerably softened the provisions of the Bill and the Bill comes out in a very much improved form from the point of view of money-lenders. I hope the representatives of the Hindu Sabha group in this House would be able to take a dispassionate and cool view of the measure and will give us the benefit of their suggestions during the course of the debate which is to follow.

Mr. President: Motion moved—

That the Punjab Debtors' Protection Bill as reported by the select committee be taken into consideration.

(Mr. President called Rai Bahadur Mukand Lal Puri.)

Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath : I got up to speak.

Mr. President : The mere fact that the honourable member got up does not entitle him to be called. As there is an amendment in the name of Rai Bahadur Mr. Puri, I have called him to move it.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : I do not move it.

Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath (Punjab Land-holders, General): It is my painful duty to oppose the motion. I do it purely from a sense of duty because I am not very optimistic as to the fate with which my opposition will meet. I am grateful to the honourable mover that he wrote to me and gave me an opportunity to serve on the select committee. I replied that I was unable to accept his invitation. I informed all the non-agriculturist members of my party as to the answer which I had given and they agreed with me. My refusal to act on the select committee was not based on any sentiment or emotion or on any spirit of infructuous non-co-operation. No possible amendment of the clauses would make the Bill acceptable to us. I was guided mainly by the opinion of experienced European officers of the Revenue Department, the substance of whose opinion is that the Bill is too drastic, that it is too one-sided, that it comes too soon after the Act that we have just passed about the relief of debtors, and that it upsets rural economy. I do not think that it is necessary for me to explain these points on which I am supported by high revenue officers of experience. But there is one point to which I wish to draw the attention of the House and of the Leader of the House. And that is a point which was not noticed by the revenue officers who were consulted. I say that this Bill, if passed, will stultify the working of the Act that we have just passed about the relief of debtors. The main provision of that Act was the appointment of conciliation boards. I do not see how it will be possible for conciliation boards to work when the decrees which they give, when the agreements which they bring about will, if payment is to be deferred, result in zero. Unless the debtors are prepared to tender cash payment there could be no settlement. The creditors will not be satisfied with a promise to pay hereafter, because the credit of the debtors is absolutely abolished by this Act and all the means of satisfying the decree of a civil court are taken away. It was unnecessary for me to refer to the special provisions or to the clauses of the Bill at this stage. But my honourable friend the mover has made special reference to them and therefore you will excuse me if I make such reference. Clause 10 of the Bill saves all standing trees, all standing crops, except cotton and sugarcane. Very little is left for attachment considering these exemptions with the other exemptions which the agriculturist already enjoys. And then we have clause 5 which provides that sufficient provision is to be made for the maintenance of the family, the family being a very vague term, before anything is attached or anything is taken away from the debtor. With these provisions, if the Bill is passed into law, the decree-holder will find it extremely difficult, if not impossible, to satisfy the decree and will not be satisfied with any agreement which the conciliation board may effect, deferring payment to a future date.

The Act which this Council passed lately and which provides for the appointment of these conciliation boards adopted the policy of other provinces—the Central Provinces, Bengal, Bihar and the United Provinces, and I should think Bombay and Madras though I am not quite certain about the last two. In those provinces the economic problem will not be complicated by a legislation of this kind. In Bhavnagar State itself there was cash payment but the financial condition of the agricultural classes in this province is such that no cash payment is possible. Therefore before long we will have reports from the other provinces that the number of settlements was high, but the report in our province will be that the number of settlements is very small because no creditor will be satisfied with a mere agreement and a mere decree based on that agreement.

My honourable friend has said something in support of almost every clause and I hope you will excuse me if I offer some criticism on some of the more important clauses. Clause 5 lays down a policy which is in contravention of section 12 of the Tenancy Act and section 62 of the Revenue Act. Under section 12 of the Tenancy Act no account is to be taken as to how much is required for the maintenance of the tenant's family. The first charge is the landlord's rent, I mean the rent which is due to the landlord. Then under section 62 of the Revenue Act the first charge on the land and the landlord's profits is the demand of Government. I am aware of the fact that in this Council a demand has been made that Government revenue should be considerably reduced, that in fixing Government revenue account should be taken of the amount of the produce needed by the landowner for the maintenance of his family, but I do not think that any similar demand has been made in favour of the tenant. The reason is obvious. None of the honourable members who compose the Unionist and the Zamindar Party are actual tillers of the soil. They are as much capitalists as the money-lending classes themselves or the non-agricultural landlords. They are the receivers of rent which amounts to at least as much as is necessary for the expenses of the election to the Council. Then clause 5 is so vague in its phraseology that it would be almost impracticable to work it. It is so much in contrast with the definite legal provisions of section 60 of the Civil Procedure Code. Section 60 of the Civil Procedure Code exempts certain things from attachment, exempts the salaries of those who receive orders of attachment but in providing for these exemptions it is definite and it is quite clear in what it lays down. What is a family? A family may consist of twelve members or it may consist of three members. What is the standard of living to be allowed to the family? Is the head of the family to be allowed the use of a motor car or of a bullock cart? (Laughter). My honourable friend is laughing at this remark. Why is it that section 60 of the Civil Procedure Code is so definite in its provisions? Why does not this section lay down that so much of the salary of an official as is required for the maintenance of the family be exempted from attachment? These are very vague provisions.

I will not make a long speech, I never intended to do so, nor am I in the habit of making long speeches, but my friend has alluded to the heavy indebtedness of the Punjab peasant. I met this criticism last time in Simla with the remark that it is because absolutely wrong direction has been taken in adopting the policy which is supposed to help the agriculturists. What the agriculturist needs is the curtailment of his expenses and the increase of his income. Nothing of that sort is being attempted. The Punjab peasant has had the curtailment of his credit, yet his indebtedness is heavier than the indebtedness of agriculturists of any part of the country outside the Punjab. Why, because a wrong remedy has so far been attempted and the right remedy has not been applied.

I do not think it necessary to recall the communal composition of the supporters or the opponents of the Bill. The opponents of the Bill may be in a minority. That is quite immaterial. They may belong to the Hindu Sabha and the supporters of the Bill may belong to the Anjuman-i-Islamia. That is quite immaterial and irrelevant to the question before us. The point before us is whether the Bill is a just measure, whether it is a practicable and workable measure, whether it will or will not introduce economic complications which will be very difficult to solve. These are the questions before us and not whether the Bill has the support of so many Hindus, Muhammadans or Sikhs or non-Sikhs. That is not the question before us. My honourable friend the mover in making this reference was I think beside the point and he did not convince me at least.

With these words I resume my seat and I hope that the honourable members of this House will give due consideration to the remarks I offer and I especially expect justice from the official members.

Rai Bahadur Mr. P. Mukerjee (Punjab Chamber of Commerce and Trades Association, Commerce): The other day, when the honourable member for Hoshiarpur was opposing the Criminal Law Amendment Bill and waxing eloquent over the absence of communist activities in this country at that time I thought he was right, but after hearing the honourable member the sponsor of this Bill I have to change my opinion. That such a seasoned politician as the honourable Chaudhri Chhotu Ram should be carried away by communist feelings was a surprise to me. I find that the main theme of his argument is that if two crores of people are inclined in a certain way 40,000 people should submit to their wishes. This Bill as it stands aims at nothing but expropriation. Let the honourable Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram point out a single clause of this Bill which does not aim at expropriation. The second reason that he gives out is that excepting two clauses, that is, the licensing of money-lenders and the clause of limitation of six years, all the other clauses are present either by a verdict or by the rule of the courts. Why then is he so anxious to have statutory provisions made?

He has analysed the remarks of various public bodies and various persons and has proved to his satisfaction that his Bill has been favoured by the majority. But how much of that majority is unprejudiced, may I ask? I agree with the honourable the sponsor of the Bill that it has come out from the select committee in a much improved condition. I congratulate him and his colleagues on the select committee for bringing out the Bill in a better form, but the substance is there and it remains as unacceptable as it was when he first moved its consideration. I will not try to deal with the Bill clause by clause to prove the utter uselessness of this Bill, but I would remind him that if this Bill is passed like the others on the same subject that have been passed in this Council the very credit structure of this province will be undermined and if he thinks that he is doing a great service to the agricultural population he is entirely wrong. If the credit structure is lost, neither the agriculturist nor the money-lender nor anybody else will progress and it will set the hands of the clock back to 100 years. My friend the honourable member for Rohtak has made a lot of the opinions that have been expressed in favour of this Bill. I should like him to note what responsible commercial opinion is on the subject, both European and Indian. The all-India organisation of the European body, the Associated Chambers of Commerce dealt with the question of rural indebtedness and passed the following resolution at their annual meeting in December 1934. The resolution reads :—

In view of the all-India importance of relations between debtor and creditor, this Association recommends to the Government of India that a conference of representatives of provincial Governments should be called forthwith to co-ordinate all measures, legislative or otherwise, passed by provincial councils to effect the relief of indebtedness of agricultural population and that in view of its possible repercussion all commercial interests and representatives of Chambers of Commerce should be associated with the conference.

In March 1935 the Federation of the Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry passed a similar resolution expressing great disquiet and grave concern at the various Bills that have been passed into Act in the different provinces undermining the credit structure of this country. In this connection, I hope you will permit me to quote what His Excellency Sir Malcolm Hailey said in the United Provinces Legislative Council. His Excellency observed :

If in attempting to relieve the indebtedness of one class we undercut the general operation of credit, we may cause mischief, the full extent of which we can none of us foresee.

I hope the Council will bear this in mind and will not accept the proposal of the Honourable Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram who has moved this motion. I oppose it.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri (Punjab Industries) : Most of the provisions of the present Bill had been definitely rejected by the select committee on the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Bill which was appointed by this Council (Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : Were they ?) and that in spite of the fact that the mover of this Bill and the other representatives of the debtor classes had a definite majority in the select committee. But seeing that he has had considerable success in the last session of the Council in getting large number of absolutely new provisions included in the last legislation which had been rejected or not considered by the select committee and which had been opposed in the first instance by the Government, the mover of the Bill has brought these further proposals, to repeat his recent triumph. I consider that none of the provisions of the present Bill are such that they can be justified on any grounds of justice or equity or are in any way conducive to the well-being of the province. In this matter I share the opinion of the Commissioner of Multan who was our late Chief Secretary and a member of this House throughout the discussions relating to the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Bill and who was connected with the various sub-committees which had been previously formed to consider measures connected with relief of indebtedness. He says—

I greatly regret that I can find no trace of justice or of sound sense in any of the provisions of the Bill now presented.....It would result in a total destruction of agricultural credit and it offers nothing in its place.....I can only recommend that this present effort be scrapped in toto.

It was my opinion that it is impossible to frame any decent legislation on the lines of the provisions of the present Bill which led me to refuse to serve on the select committee. It was not in any spirit of non-co-operation, as Raja Narendra Nath has already explained that both of us refused to serve on this committee. We felt that the principle of the Bill was so abnoxious, so utterly subversive of all sense of justice that we thought that we could not be of any use on the committee. Our refusal to serve on the committee was not due to the unjust constitution of the committee or to the fact that we were in a minority. I have always held the view that even one person although in a minority can kick sufficiently strong and intelligently, to make his presence felt. The present proposals, however, were of such an expropriatory and revolutionary nature that we could not be in any way a party to them. Further we thought it would be useful to let Chaudhri Chhotu Ram attempt to improve his crude proposals with the help of his Muslim party and one or two members of statutory agricultural tribes alone. But the result is very disappointing. The Bill is in exactly the same form, with one or two worst features, still more intensified. I have only to invite attention to the substitution in the clause relating to ancestral property of the words 'next holder' for the word 'heir'. The obvious intention of this change by the select committee seems to be to extend the provisions of the Bill to cases which were not covered by the original proposals of the Bill. It had been definitely laid down as long ago as 1915, in P. R. 39 of 1915, in a Division Bench Judgment to which Honourable Mian Shah Din himself a member of statutory agricultural tribes, was a party, that ancestral land in the hands of a widow of the deceased was liable for the debts of the deceased. Again, it has been definitely laid down in 12 P. R. 1918, that the land in the hands of a daughter was liable for the debts of the deceased. If the substitution of the words 'next holder' for the word 'heir' is intended to make the land in the hands of such persons as above mentioned also not liable, it extends the provisions of the original clause, and thus intensifies the original proposals. Under the clause as it has emerged out of select committee, the land in the hands of persons, to whom it is not ancestral, has thus been made liable.

Let us look at the main provisions of the Bill as they have emerged out of the select committee, as to what effect they are likely to have on the existing debts and the general credit of the province. Let me for this purpose divide the population of this province into two classes, members of the statutory agricultural tribes and those persons who are not members of the statutory agricultural tribes. With respect to the members of the statutory agricultural tribes, they may also be considered in two sub-divisions, persons who are actual cultivators and persons who are merely landlords. Now, my contention is that the actual cultivator is sufficiently protected by the existing legislation. He is amply protected under section 60 of the Civil Procedure Code and the proviso to section 70 of the Land Revenue Act. Let me read out the exemption which he enjoys under the existing law.

The effect of all these sections is summarised in the Rules and Orders of the High Court and it is as follows. You will find that the actual cultivator of the soil has all the privileges which the present measure proposes to give him. (Pir Akbra Ali : Why then do you oppose this measure ?) Because the present measure does not give those privileges to the actual cultivator of the soil only, who already enjoys them, but extends them to the capitalist landlord to whom those privileges are not available at present. You will find that the privileges which the actual cultivator of the soil enjoys at the present moment are as follows :—

“ Reading the provision of the Code with the Revenue Law alluded to, it will be seen that the following moveable property is, in the case of agriculturists paying revenue, exempted from liability to attachment and sale in execution of decree, namely :—

- (a) the necessary wearing apparel, cooking vessels, beds and bedding of the judgment-debtor, his wife and children, and such personal ornaments as, in accordance with religious usage, cannot be parted with by any woman (section 60 (1) (a) of the Code);
- (b) implements of husbandry, and such cattle and seed-grain as may, in the opinion of the court, be necessary to enable him to earn his livelihood as an agriculturist, and such portion of agricultural produce or of any class of agricultural produce as may have been declared by the Local Government with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council to be free from liability under section 61 (1) (b);
- (c) so much of the produce of the land as the Collector thinks necessary for seed-grain and the subsistence, until the harvest next following, of the judgment debtor, his family and cattle exempted under head (b) (section 70 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act read with section 38 of the Punjab Tenancy Act and section 60 (1) (p) of the Code of Civil Procedure).

Section 60 (1) (c) of the Code further exempts, from attachment and sale, houses and other buildings (with the materials and the sites thereof and the land immediately appurtenant thereto and necessary for their enjoyment) belonging to an agriculturist and occupied by him.”

This section has been extended by the last Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act to include not only one house, but a number of houses provided they are in a village and they are not let out. The word ‘occupied’ has been substituted by ‘not let out on rent.’ In fact, Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram himself admitted that the houses in villages are now exempt. Thus you will see that with respect to the actual cultivator the Government has already secured to him exemption in all these respects. What benefits the Land Revenue Acts and the Tenancy Acts and section 60 of the Civil Procedure Code confer on the tillers of the soil, the present Bill proposes to confer now on the capitalist landlords. So far as the actual tillers of the soil are concerned they are amply protected and no further measures are necessary for them, and no further protection is being proposed by the Bill. With respect to those members of statutory agricultural tribes who are not the actual tillers of the soil, the position is this : What is the property that a member of the statutory agriculturist owns ? The property is usually land. With respect to land there is a provision in the Land Alienation Act that it cannot be sold in execution of a decree and the courts have held that it can be only leased for twenty years. The other property which he owns are houses. Those houses also have now been exempted from attachment by the last legislation of the Council. The other possible property may be some moveables, but moveable property in the form of cash and other forms is so elusive. It can be and is so easily concealed, and is never available for a creditor. The one incentive which had some influence to persuade debtors to part with a part of their moveable property was the fear of arrest. Now, it is acknowledged and it has been stated on the floor of the House by Chaudhri Chhotu Ram himself that as far as the agricultural tribes are concerned, the arrest provision has practically been abolished. Therefore the only asset against which the creditor can proceed for realization of his debts from the landlord member of an agricultural tribe is this attachment of land for twenty years. Now, what does the present legislation purport to do? Government has repeatedly declared as its settled policy that in relations between the creditor and the debtor the provisions of the Land Alienation Act will neither be extended to the advantage of the debtor classes nor will they be restricted to the disadvantage of the debtor classes. This assurance was in the first instance given on the floor of this House by Sir Fazl-i-Husain. Later on when the question of the term of lease was discussed in the Council, that is, whether the land of a statutory agricultural tribe could or could not be leased for more than twenty years, this assurance was repeated by Sir Sikander Hyat Khan speaking on behalf of the Government. Now what does the present measure propose to do in this respect? Instead of bringing forward a straight forward proposition, that the period of lease should be reduced to ten years or seven years, a proposition which the Government could not swallow, in the face of its previous declarations, Chaudhri Chhotu Ram has come forward with a proposal that before a land is leased provision should be made for the subsistence of the judgment-debtor and his family. Ordinarily when the decree is to be realised from a lease of the land, the decree-holder gets only a fraction of the amount due to him say four annas in the rupee. Statistics prove that. If you attach a statutory obligation that the income from the land would be available only after providing for the subsistence of the judgment-debtor and his family, in 90 per cent. of the cases no lease of land would be possible, because the landlord's share which is the only one which we are considering now, and which is generally leased is hardly enough to provide the maintenance for the judgment-debtor and his family; and this coupled with the provision to exempt the sale of the standing crops and trees from attachment reduces the security of the creditor against a debtor who is a member of the statutory agricultural tribe to absolute zero. How much land would be required to provide maintenance for an insolvent and his family—the average number in a family, according to economists, is five out of the landlord's share of the land? The person having the average holding in the Punjab would be exempt altogether, while people who own areas twice or thrice as large as the average holding in the Punjab, would also be able to claim exemption of their entire holdings on the ground that they will be barely sufficient for their maintenance. And then kindly remember that you are applying this legislation not only to the future but also to the existing debts which were advanced on the security of twenty years' lease which is now crippled, if not destroyed. It means nothing more nor less than an expropriation in its entirety of the entire debt due from the members of the statutory agricultural tribes. I challenge my learned friend to say whether this provision relating to subsistence is intended and calculated to destroy the security of a lease of twenty years or not and whether in any case the necessary effect of such a provision is not to destroy or curtail this security. Is there any other security left? If that is so, permit me to repeat that this is simply expropriation and nothing more nor less. I have made bold to say that if these provisions are adopted, the security of the creditor for his present debts against statutory agriculturist debtor is reduced to nothing. This is not only my opinion but the opinion of those officers whose sympathy for the agriculturist is unquestioned and who cannot be expected to be biassed in any way consciously or sub-consciously. The Registrar of Co-operative Societies is of opinion that—

Sub-section (3) of section 3 introduces new matter making it obligatory to exempt from temporary alienation such portion of the agricultural land belonging to an agriculturist judgment-debtor as is sufficient for maintenance of himself and his family. This sub-section, coupled with the provisions contained in sections 4 and 5, still further restricts the resources of creditors in the execution of their decrees against agricultural debtors. Section 60 of the Civil Procedure Code already contains provisions for exempting from attachment certain assets of such debtors; these sections go even further in exempting—

- (1) sufficient land for the maintenance of the debtor and his family (itself an extremely elastic term),
- (2) in the case of debts incurred by a debtor's predecessor in interest, all ancestral land, and
- (3) all standing crops.

Thus with the restrictions recently introduced in the matter of civil arrest, the resources open to the creditors are reduced to vanishing point.

I could not put it more emphatically than has been put by a gentleman who is in constant touch with the rural conditions and especially those of members of agricultural tribes and who is also in charge of the credit institution of the Government and who is in a position to give an authoritative opinion. My own opinion is that the facilities for the realisation of debt were reduced to such an extent by the last Act that it is practically impossible even without this new Bill for any creditor to realise his debt from members of agricultural tribes. But the object of the honourable mover is not to be satisfied with what Government has already done for his class. He wants to make it physically impossible for any creditor to even think of realising his debts. He is of opinion that a creditor should not even consider it worth his while to make an attempt. That seems to me to be the only intention of the mover of this Bill. Now, all shrewd men can see that this legislation, although it would wipe off existing debts, would not ultimately help the statutory agriculturist but unfortunately the mentality of a person who is oppressed with an existing liability is to get rid of it at all costs, regardless of its effect on his future or other future consequences. In this connection may I invite the attention of the honourable mover to the opinion of a Muslim Economist, professor of Hailey College of Commerce at Lahore. (Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : Does he not come from Bombay ?) No, he is a Punjabi, and was the Editor of the Muslim newspaper Eastern Times of Lahore, before his appointment as Professor. He says—

There is one big touchstone to test the validity of such Bills, namely, the peasant's credit. By all means give the peasant as much protection as possible but our solicitude for his welfare should be tempered with caution, lest we should drown him in our zeal and ill-judged legislation. Is it not a fact, one may ask, that the peasant, in the existing circumstance, cannot dispense with the services of the money-lender and, if so, will it be advisable to pass a measure which is likely to undermine his capacity as a borrower and render him liable to pay higher interest because of his reduced credit.

Chaudhri Chhotu Ram, however, would let him drown, if he can also kill the creditor, the bitter enemy of the mover. Again he is in total agreement with the Registrar of Co-operative Societies—

And if along with exemption of standing crops and trees from attachment rules are also framed to empower the collector to exempt even from temporary alienation practically the whole of the agricultural land on the plea that this will be hardly more than what is necessary for the maintenance of a small agriculturist and his family, then it is difficult to see what impetus will be left for the money-lender to continue his relation with the peasant. The rate of interest is legally fixed, ways are devised to make "tricks" impossible on the part of the money-lender, insolvency procedure is simplified for the peasant and now you want to reduce his assets to almost nothing so far as the creditor is concerned. This, we fear is not business.

Security reduced to nothing with a retrospective effect. He says, this is not business. But who can possibly expect fair play from the sponsors of this legislation? This then is the opinion of two experts as to the result of this legislation so far as the creditor is concerned; he would lose his entire debt because the available security of the creditor is being reduced to vanishing point. As to what the effect would be on the statutory agriculturist himself, I cannot do better than quote the opinion of Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Diwan Chand Saini, himself a member of the statutory agricultural tribe, a leading lawyer of Gurdaspur and last year vice-chairman of the district board. He says—

The Bill, if passed into Act, will affect all debts in existence at the time of the passing of this Act. The provisions of this Bill are designed to bring the chances of the recovery of a debt from a debtor by a creditor to a minimum and to make the business of money-lending extremely difficult, if not impossible. . . . . The Bill, if passed into law, means that a creditor shall not recover his debts in the Punjab which will amount to legalized swindling. . . . . I as an agriculturist, shudder to think of the consequences of this sort of legislation. In plain language it means that the sturdy peasantry of the Punjab which consists of small proprietors will disappear. Within the coming 10 years the best land of the agriculturists will pass into the hands of big moneyed agriculturists of the Punjab. The alienation of Land Act will become a dead letter because the debtor must mortgage or sell his land in the hour of need, because sahukar will not advance him a penny.

I wish to lay great emphasis on this opinion, and ask the House to consider carefully this weighty pronouncement by a leading member of agricultural tribes. One hears a lot about the curtailment of credit as a panacea for the ill of zemindars. I say, this outcry is absolutely bogus, a myth, merely put forward to carry on this "legalised swindling". You cannot restrict the credit of a person unless you restrict it on all sides. Now members of the statutory agricultural tribes enjoy unrestricted credit amongst themselves. A member of a statutory agricultural tribe can sell his land, mortgage his land without restraint with another member of agricultural tribes. Therefore if you entirely destroy his credit with the non-agriculturist in the nature of things he admittedly cannot do without credit and, therefore, he must run to a member of the statutory agricultural tribe in time of his need, and this gentleman will either purchase or get a mortgage of his land before he would accommodate him. The necessary effect will be that the land of the poor agriculturists will change hands at once in hour of need and that for ridiculously low prices. Therefore if you think or if any member on the Government benches thinks that the restriction of credit is a thing desirable in itself, is a remedy for the ills of the agriculturist debtor, he must advocate the restriction of such credit with all classes. To restrict his credit with one class and give him unrestricted credit with another class is no good, is a mere comouflage. I put it to Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram if he honestly believes that the credit of the members of the statutory agricultural tribes is restricted by restricting it as against the non-agriculturists only. I am surprised that in the various proposals which have emanated from that source, there is not one which suggests that some restriction might be placed on the power of a member of the statutory agricultural tribe, restricting the alienation of their land by sale or mortgage even in favour of a member of the statutory agricultural tribe. This could be done by inserting a clause in the Land Alienation Act, requiring that the permission of the deputy commissioner should be obtained in every case of alienation by a member of this class whether in favour of agriculturists or non-agriculturist. Why has not such a proposal been brought forward. The absence of such a proposal shows the real intention of the proposers of this measure, which is not to restrict the credit of agriculturists in general but to restrict it with a class, while permitting them to enjoy it with their own class, thus enabling themselves to grab the law of their poorer brethren at cheap prices. I respectfully submit that the effect of this Bill would be that money lending would be carried on more and more by members of agricultural tribes and in future, the number of agriculturist money-lenders which is sufficiently large even at present, will considerably increase. In fact, this will become their monopoly. In the absence of other facilities for credit money lending has to continue and cannot be abolished. The House is familiar with the observations made in the "Punjab Peasant in Prosperity and Debt" by Mr. Darling and similar observations in another treatise by Mr. Calvert, our late Financial Commissioner. It is hardly necessary to repeat oft-quoted observations about the agriculturist and particularly Jat money-lenders and a comparison which is made by both these servants between the money-lender belonging to agricultural tribes and the one drawn from non-agriculturist classes much to the discredit of agriculturist money-lender. Let the House be aware of the danger and take note of it. You are practically throwing the poor and needy members of statutory agricultural tribes into the mouths of wolves which are not anxious to get back the money but hungry for land. There are as I have already stated, the apprehensions of a gentleman of the standing of Rao Bahadur Diwan Chand. Now, these are the probable effects of the provisions of this Bill as far as the statutory agriculturist is concerned.

As to the effect the successive measure of relief have had and are having on the mentality of our agriculturist classes. I cannot do better than quote the opinion expressed by the Honourable Financial Commissioner, the head of the Revenue Department in our province. He says that these successive measures are "having a noticeably bad effect on the will to pay even of a solvent zamindar." The Registrar of Co-operative Societies expresses the same opinion, and says—

One cannot be blind to the fact that as a result of systematic agitation carried on his behalf and of legislation already enacted the attitude of the rural debtor towards his obligations whether incurred before or after the period of depression has changed very much for the worse. He has been encouraged to believe that the demands of the creditors are invariably unjustifiable and that he is justified in putting every obstacle in the way of recovery. This Bill is one more move in the same direction.

Thus the effect of the preceding legislation, so the highly placed official observes, has been to increase dishonesty amongst the propertied zamindar classes.

[R. B. Mr. Mukand Lal Puri.]

So much with respect to the portion of the Bill dealing with the statutory agriculturists. The other provisions of the Bill are calculated to bring about the same situation among the non-agricultural classes also which exists among the agriculturists. Would it not restrict credit altogether if ancestral property in the hands of a Hindu or a Muslim which is usually the only property which he holds in this province is exempted from payment of debts or if realization of debts is made contingent on the continuance of the life of the debtor as the Bill proposes to do? Human life is the most uncertain factor in this universe. Would anybody agree to lend say even Rs. 5,000 to such rich man as Raja Narendra Nath or Rai Bahadur Ram Saran Das or the Minister for Local Self-Government if the payment of debts is contingent on the continuance of thier lives? Again take the section relating to burden of proof? Would it be worth the while of any creditor to lend money if in spite of holding a pronote or a bond in the handwriting of the debtor himself, acknowledging receipt of consideration, he has some years afterwards to produce false witnesses to prove that consideration actually passed? Again the provisions relating to registration of money-lenders would entirely wipe out of existence the casual lender, who, I think all sections of the House would be agreed, is the most respectable and honest creditor in the province and whose money goes to finance the petty trader and artisan and the agriculturists. Assuredly the registration would restrict the number of money-lenders, and thus curtail facilities for credit, not only for agriculture but also for trade. In the absnec of adequate banking facilities, would not these restrictions restrict the credit of non-agriculturists and thus hamper trade? In fact enact all these provisions which the Bill contains and without doubt you sound the death-knell of all credit facilities in the province, whether carried on by private individuals, or by companies or by banks. Chaudhri Chhotu Ram has never concealed his hatred for what he is pleased to call "the urban classes of Hindus and Sikhs" in the province. Of course he has a particularly soft corner for 'the urban classes of Mussalmans' but he has never concealed his hatred for 'the urban Hindus and Sikhs.' He has often boasted of it. I admire him for his outspokenness.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : You are paying me a compliment which I do not deserve and which I do not try for.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : Of course the honourable member has always maintained, nay, proclaimed that if a right or a privilege or anything is to be given even though as of right to what he is pleased to call an 'urban Hindu or urban Sikh' he would much rather it were given to a Muslim or a Christian or a European. Such is his hatred of other Hindus, under the influence of his Muslim friends. I ask Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram to deny if he has not boasted of it openly in the presence of his Muslim friends. (Interruption). Therefore, the second object of this legislation is to harm the urban Hindus whom he hates for reasons best known to him and which I have never been able to understand. But I respectfully ask, should this Council consisting of respectable Muslims and respectable Sikhs and respectable non-officials be a party to a vindictive object of that type? This legislation is intended to harm the Hindu creditor.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : Forty-thousand creditors.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : I shall deal with that point presently. Do not be impatient. This legislation is intended to harm the Hindu creditor as against the statutory agricultural tribes who as is well known to him and according to the census figures overwhelmingly belong to the Muslim community. His remedy for the Hindu creditors is "No, I know that you cannot realise, the Government at my instance made it practically impossible by the last legislation, the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Bill; but I shall not permit you to make an attempt even to realise. I know the force of my threats and the mettle of the present Government." So says Chaudhri Chhotu Ram: "Did I not coerce the Government last time against their better judgment to accept in this Council half a dozen clauses which they opposed in the first instance but which they quietly accepted in the end? Let me raise a cloud of dust hoping that some will stick". His object, so far as statutory agricultural tribes are concerned is the total wiping off of their debts and so far as non-agricultural tribes are concerned, his intention is not to help the debtor classes but to sap the very foundation of credit on which the occupations and prosperity of the trading classes or what he calls urban Hindus depends. My opinion in this respect is shared by a large number of persons who have sent their opinions on the Bill. In fact his own speeches in the Council do not have much doubt on this point. The Registrar of Co-operative Societies is of opinion, an opinion which is endorsed by the Honourable the Financial Commissioner also, that "the object of the mover of the Bill appears to be two-fold." I am reading from page 2 of the supplementary book containing opinions:—

- (1) The usual political manoeuvre to place themselves in the position of benefactors of the rural population, thwarted in their objects by the opposition of Government;
- (2) By keeping this Bill hanging over the heads of the creditor's community for as long as possible, to induce them to compound their existing claims on the zamindars on even more lenient terms than they are prepared to do at the present.

Now, I submit, that Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram in his speech in Council to-day has given complete proof, if any proof were necessary, of the truth of the observations of these two senior officers. He has held out a threat to the Government that if they do not pass this legislation, they will lose credit with the rural classes. He has held out threats to every section of this House. He has warned them. He says 'Remember the number of debtors in the Punjab is far larger than the number of creditors and that the members have in the very near future to go to the polls, and have to canvass these constituencies.'

He has warned the members of this House with dire consequences if they go against the wishes of the vast majority of the debtors of this province, in the interest of money-lenders who number only 40,000, even though dictates of good sense, equity and justice might induce them to take the opposite view. He has threatened every one of us, Hindus, Sikhs and Muslims. I confess with a certain amount of shame that this threat which he has not used for the first time alone, but which he has been expressing privately and in public outside the Council has demoralised a large number of members who have to canvass rural votes. I have met members of this House respectable members of this House belonging to the statutory agricultural tribes who have in answer to my question definitely told me that the legislation on this subject has gone too far and the present Bill oversteps all limits and is not a desirable piece of legislation. They have given me instances where they find that the existing legislation has not only injured the creditors but has created difficulties for members of agricultural tribes. I do not wish to give their names, they are even now sitting in the House. I say that they are respectable members of this House almost leaders of definite groups of statutory agriculturists in this House. They have adopted an attitude of neutrality or even the outward appearance of supporting the Bill. They are afraid that if they give expression to their honest convictions in this matter, it will be used against them by their rival candidates, to influence ingoerent rural voters against them. I do not admire the attitude of these gentlemen, but I can understand their positions and sympathise with them. I wish that these gentlemen had the courage of their convictions but they say that propaganda against them has already been started in their constituencies by their opponents who are going about the countryside preaching that such and such a man is in favour of bania and is not in favour of the zamindars. Chaudhri Chhotu Ram has succeeded not only in coercing the members of the Government but also members of this House by these threats. I feel sorry that instead of allowing the members to give their independent and unbiassed opinion on the merits of the Bill, the honourable leader of the debtor classes has threatened with dire consequences, the Government, the Sikhs and the Hindus and of course he takes it for granted and rightly too that all the Muslims are with him whether they belong to urban or to rural classes, the reason being that muslims are debtors and creditors are Hindus and Sikhs, there being hardly any money-lenders amongst the Muslims, on account of the injunctions of the Holy Quran against interest. I submit, this is not the way to create a proper atmosphere for a dispassionate and honest consideration of the merits of the Bill.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : Chalis hazar ke liye bari garmi Ai hai.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : I am further opposed to this Bill because its provisions are calculated to contravene the declared policy of the Government not to extend the principles of the Land Alienation Act so far as the relations of the debtors and creditors are concerned. I am opposed to the Bill because if enacted it is calculated to bring the whole system of administration into contempt. I agree with the Deputy Commissioner of Kangra that "the Bill is totally opposed to all canons of law and equity and if passed would result in bringing the administration of justice and Government generally into disrepute." I also endorse the views of the Deputy Commissioner of Hissar that "the present Bill appears to be a bigotted and vindictive attack upon the rural money-lender designed to hamper and restrict it in every way and to deprive the money-lenders of his civil rights which are based on equity." I share the apprehension expressed by him that "if passed into law the Bill will fail to produce the effects which it is designed to produce and will increase the tension between the borrowing and the lending classes and in almost complete cessation of rural credit". Is it not significant that you get a similar opinion from Mr. Jones, Deputy Commissioner, Hissar, from South-East Punjab as you get from Mr. Garbett, Commissioner, from remote Multan? There are people not mere drawing room politicians, discussing theoretical problems, but people engaged in administration and conversant with their conditions and in daily touch with the rural circumstances. Again mark the opinion of another European Deputy Commissioner, i.e., of Lyallpur to the same effect. He says "Looking at the Act as a whole, it appears that its author's intention is to prevent any money-lending in this province. If that is his intention, then I consider that the Act will undoubtedly fulfill this purpose." Unfortunately it is too true as the honourable member the Leader of the Unionist Party said, the number of debtors in this province far exceeds the number of creditors. But this would be true of any province or any country in the world. His argument is, for the sake of 40,000 creditors, are you going to disregard the wishes of two crores, or at any rate, as all are not debtors, of several lakhs of debtors? It should be remembered that the present legislation does not deal with reduction in rate of interest or securing better and fairer dealing between creditors and debtors. That has already been dealt with and sufficiently provided for. At present the question is whether a person who has obtained a decree for just debts, which have been found due by the courts, after scrutiny should be permitted to realise even a portion of the decree from propertied classes or not. The present Bill is intended to make nugatory the decrees for just debts passed by courts. The argument of the mover of the Bill is that 40,000 creditors should be sacrificed and the debts entirely wiped off in the interests of the debtor classes of this province, who are much larger in number. The argument of the honourable member is that it is in the interests of a larger number of people to deprive the creditors of their property and to expropriate their debts. I submit, Sir, if this is the argument, let us say good bye to all legislation and system of administration based on respect for and sanctity of private property. I respectfully submit that every argument which he has used for the expropriation of the creditor against the debtor can be used effectively in favour of the expropriation of the ownership of the land. Now, the owners of land in this province are certainly fewer, far fewer than persons who are landless and are not owners of any land in this province or elsewhere. Can I appeal to you in the interests of that vast landless majority of population of this country to get rid of your lands and to divide this land on a more equitable and fair basis, would it not be in the interests of the teeming millions of landless people in this province, for the State to distribute equally amongst the population of the province. And this is precisely what the so-called leader of the Unionist Party has been preaching in the name of the party. The vast majority of Muslims and the Sikhs have not realised the grave consequences of the policy to which he a socialist and with no stake in the country is committing this House to. I invite the attention of the Unionist Party to the wholesome advice which was given by Sir Malcolm Hailey our late Governor when addressing the Legislative Council of the United Provinces in connection with similar legislation. He pointed out the dangers of such a policy and observed :—

Again, this is legislation affecting property, for, secured debt, at all events, must be ranked as property, and if legislation unduly considers the interests of one class of property holders, the immediate gain promised to them may prove to be short-lived and they may find that they have sown precedents for legislation regarding property rights from which they have to reap an unwelcome harvest hereafter.

4 P. M.

[R. B. Mr. Mnkand Lal Puri.]

Let us hope that anything which this Council has done—and it has done a great deal in this connection or anything which this Council might do now, would not lead to sow the seeds of that very communism against which the Government asked for special powers a few days ago, in the shape of the Criminal Law Amendment Bill. Let us hope such impassioned but foolish appeals to the passion of the ignorant masses or majorities would be infructuous and would not be followed by any real action.

Therefore in reply to argument of Chaudhri Chhotu Ram I commend to the consideration of this House the words of Sir Malcolm Hailey, a statesman who on a previous occasion saved the Punjab Legislative Council from a similar foolish action when he refused his assent to the Punjab Money-lenders' Bill in 1925.

In the end, I wish to place before the House the opinion of the Joint Committee of the Northern India Chamber of Commerce, and The Punjab Chamber of Commerce, consisting of European and Indian businessmen of Punjab and the Delhi Province who are opposed to the Bill "on the ground that it is expropriatory in its nature, that its provisions are revolutionary and without precedent, and that it will stifle rural credit. The provisions contained in the Bill, if enacted, will stop the flow of rural credit with harmful consequences to trade and commerce, and ultimately to the prosperity of the province." The House will be well advised not to ignore such expert opinion.

Sardar Arjan Singh (Hoshiarpur and Kangra, Sikh, Rural): I am painfully surprised to hear at this stage, after so much time of the Council has been taken up with this Bill in the last session when it was introduced, after it has been circulated for eliciting public opinion, after we have received a sheaf of opinions on its provisions, after again the measure has been referred to the select committee and the select committee has worked upon it, that after all this, honourable members, instead of taking a dispassionate view, instead of examining the Bill as it has emerged from the select committee on its merits, should have thought it fit to oppose it. I need not take up the time of the House in regard to the provisions as they were contained in the original Bill. But now as the select committee has modified them, I shall confine my observations to the report of the select committee. This Bill only deals with certain matters which are already good law, as a matter of fact. So far as the question of exemption of ancestral property from attachment and from sale is concerned, this proposition was propounded by a full bench of the Lahore High Court and that case is reported as 4 Punjab Record 1913. In almost all the districts this ruling had to be quoted as soon as objection was taken and the courts released from attachment the property which had been attached. But of late years, unfortunately in some districts—I could cite my own district as an example—the courts now say that they have discovered after these eighteen, nineteen or twenty years, that there has been, in my district, —and that must be the case with other districts as well—the custom established by which the next heir in possession of the ancestral property is bound to pay the debts of his predecessor in interest. Therefore, for the last four or five years decisions have been given accordingly. After this long lapse of time since the judgment in 4 Punjab Record 1913.

was given and that judgment was good law, the subordinate judiciary, not to speak of the Honourable Judges of the High Court, have now discovered that perhaps that law was not correctly laid down in 1918. Therefore, all that the present legislation seeks to do is to give it statutory force, so that we may not have to depend upon the vagaries of the presiding officers of our courts from time to time. This is one of the chief changes that this measure seeks to effect.

The next question that is dealt with by this legislation is the exemption of standing crops and trees. On this point as well, the Lahore High Court has given various rulings. In some of them they have pointed out that trees are exempt, that they being part of land are free from attachment and from sale in execution. In other cases they have held the contrary view. The present Bill, therefore, seeks to put an end to this anomaly and this uncertainty in the minds of those whose duty it is to administer the law as it is.

So far as the Bill which was introduced was concerned, I think perhaps the select committee thought that the Bill had gone too far and therefore they have modified it. They have now suggested that certain cases of standing crops should be exempt, while others should not be, from attachment in execution of a decree. Therefore if anything, the select committee have modified the law, they have taken away the rigour of the law and there should absolutely be no opposition to the measure from honourable members over there. They should have been glad that the select committee have done the right thing which they ought to have done themselves.

Again, the question of onus in certain documents is also sought to be considered by this legislation. As a matter of fact, as previously introduced the Bill in the opinion of the select committee went too far and the select committee have tried to bring the question of onus in conformity with the existing law, that is, in accordance with the Indian Evidence Act and the Negotiable Instruments Act and the Indian Registration Act. All that the select committee have done is to bring the question of onus, which is of course a very important question in regard to the construction and execution of a document, in conformity with the existing law.

Next is the question of restrictions on money-lenders. I am one with honourable members who say that money-lending is certainly an important business. Nobody can question that it is an important institution. All that is sought to be done here is that the unscrupulous among the creditor class should not be spared. We have all respect for the honest creditor as he is an important institution, as important as any other institution. But we should not give any quarter, we should not show any mercy to the unscrupulous creditor who is a nuisance to society and who brings discredit to the creditor classes themselves. Therefore the representatives of the creditor classes themselves should have been the first to come to our help in passing this legislation.

Then there is the question of registration of the creditor classes. It has been very clearly brought out by the Honourable Mr. Justice Abdul Rashid. I believe, that an Act was passed in England in 1927 wherein they say the registration of money-lending classes was absolutely necessary. I think he further pointed out that if in a country like England where so many people were literate, where there was so much advance on all sides, if registration was necessary, ipso facto it was quite necessary when we were dealing with a province like the Punjab, a Province of peasants, of illiterate people and a province of zamindars who were not well acquainted with the technicalities of the law.

On the whole therefore this Bill only seeks to do away with the present anomalies of the situation. I have to make one or two observations to my honourable friends over there. They have been from time to time expressing the greatest sympathy, as they say, with the zamindar class. Now is the time, I will point out to them, to translate that lip sympathy into action. They should, as a matter of fact, try to consider this question in a dispassionate way. They should examine the various clauses in the Bill; they should try to help to bring this law into conformity with the law as it exists in other countries and they should not adopt these dilatory tactics. They should not, at this stage, oppose this motion. They should remember that even Mahatma Gandhi has told them in the most unmistakeable way that the only way to deal with the question of swaraj and self-government is to ameliorate the condition of the teeming millions of this country. They should, therefore, seriously consider whether they are the true representatives of the people who have sent them here, when they oppose a legislation of this nature. So far as the Government is concerned, I believe the Government has made up its mind to support this Bill. If Government Members have not, on the other hand, made up their minds, I think they should not be indecisive, they should not hesitate or vacillate, but should come to a definite decision. They should remember that here is a legislation which has gone through all the stages that a piece of legislation has to undergo. The other day there was a legislation before this House, I mean the Criminal Law (Amendment) Bill. That Bill was brought forward and the first stage when it must have been circulated for opinion was done away with, the next stage when the Bill must have been referred to a select committee was also done away with. Why did we do so? I am not asking now for a prize or for a reward for the attitude that we adopted regarding that Bill.

Why did we do it? We did it because we were impressed with what Government told us. They said, that this was a necessary legislation and that this legislation must be passed into law after considering it on its merits. I ask Government to take the same view now. They should consider this Bill from our point of view and they should remember that from our point of view it is much more important than the Criminal Law Amendment Act itself. They should remember that the Criminal Law Amendment Act deals with a microscopic minority, it deals with a few so-called terrorists, but this legislation affects the teeming millions of this province. They should, therefore, remember that it is an important legislation and they should not be misled by some misrepresentation which must have been made regarding the scope of this legislation. Government should also remember that so far as the Criminal Law Amendment Act is concerned, that has to deal with certain politically minded people or with certain educated people. But here we have to deal with the hungry people. So far as the question of other legislation is concerned we may wait some time. We may wait for legal rights, we can afford to wait for political rights, but when the question of bread comes, when the teeming millions are clamouring for bread, when they are groaning under the taxation of land revenue, when they do not get two square meals a day, when they do not know what to do under these circumstances, when they are as a matter of fact being eliminated and annihilated on account of the economic depression through which this province is passing, the Government should remember that they owe a duty to the province which they govern. Therefore, it is in the interest of good government, it is in the interest of society and it is in the interest of good administration that this legislation should be considered and should be forthwith passed.

I will make one more observation and that is this. Sometimes agrarian troubles are much more dangerous and serious than political movements. Those political movements ask for political rights, but these agrarian movements ask for daily bread. There lies the whole comparison between the two classes of movements. Therefore I say that the writing on the wall is very clear. Government should take into consideration the consequences that might follow their apathy in a matter like this. They should also remember that all their repressive laws will avail them not in a trouble like this and they should also remember that the cup of misery of the zamindar is full to the brim and there is room for not a single drop more. Therefore, I make a fervent appeal to the Government benches that they should support the motion that has been brought forward by Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram. With these words I support the motion. (Applause).

Lala Jyoti Prasad (South-East Towns, non-Muhammadian, Urban) : There has been much criticism on this Bill as a whole and on its various clauses, inside this House and outside it, in the press and on the platform, but so far as the interests of the creditors are concerned the select committee has not made any improvement whatsoever in the Bill. The Bill has undergone little change for the better. I would request you to turn your attention to the report itself and you will see that the different clauses of the Bill are as harsh as they were, when the Bill was originally presented to this House.

On perusing paragraphs 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 of the report we find that no change worth the name has been made in clauses 3, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8 of the original Bill. These are the most harmful clauses as they cut at the very root of the system of money lending and take away from the people their elementary right to advance money on credit. They penalise a particular class with a view to protect another. So many hardships have been placed on the creditor by the various enactments but nothing has been done to secure and guarantee the payment of his debts. Can anybody point out even a sentence to this effect either in this Bill or in the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act? Is it not fair and just that the dues of a creditor should be paid—dues which were advanced to either to meet revenue liabilities or to meet the necessities of life of the debtor and to save him from the clutches of law? The Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act which has recently come into force already contains such drastic provisions that will set at naught the whole system of money lending in the province. In this Act the treatment meted out to the money lenders is against all sense of justice and equity. The creditors have no other recourse left but to bid goodbye to all their investments. They can never have the courage of sticking to their trade of money lending in the future. When this Act of indebtedness was only passed and had not yet become law, the poor money lenders had to face a very serious situation as the agriculturist debtors had started giving flat refusals to their sahukars as regards the repayment of their money. The poor money lenders were quite non-plussed, but what could be done? Now when the Act has come into force may the Almighty God only come to their help!

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram has now brought forth another Bill and wants us to have it passed as if the present Act has not proved enough to wipe off the very name of the money lender from the province. In the words of a European officer in charge of a district in the Punjab this Bill is a bigoted and vindictive attack upon the rural money lender designed to hamper and restrict him in every way and deprive him of those civil rights which are based upon equity. He further says that the Bill, if passed into law, would fail to effect the results for which it is ostensibly designed, and could only result in increased tension between the borrowing and lending classes.

I should like to inform the House what the Bombay Government recently did in connection with agricultural indebtedness. The Mercantile Committee addressed the Government of Bombay in the matter and were informed that in the Bombay Presidency the Deccan Agriculturists Relief Act was already in force which covered a good many of the objects which the new legislation for the relief of agricultural indebtedness in other provinces had in view. The Government of Bombay were averse to introducing or according support to any fresh legislation aiming at interference with private contracts and the ousting of the jurisdiction of civil courts. In accordance with the recommendations of the Land Mortgage Committee the Government of Bombay decided to establish additional land mortgage banks. I am further informed that a private Bill was introduced in the Bombay Legislative Council last year for the purpose of regulating the money-lending business. The Bill was, however, thrown out. I trust that the Punjab Government would follow the Bombay Government in this respect.

The Bill in my opinion is intended to add insult to injury and is sure to prove highly detrimental to the best interests of the creditors as well as the debtors. It simply offers want of security and inconvenience to the creditor. It is nothing else but a class measure and in no way helps the poorer section of the community for which it is introduced. As a matter of fact it is aimed at saving debtors who recklessly at the expense of others lead princely lives out of proportion to their income and have large landed estates. It renders to all intents and purposes the realisation of a debt by way of execution an impossibility. If the Bill is passed into law, the poor creditor would never forget the tyrannical oppression of the majority party in the Council. With these words I oppose the motion for consideration of the report of the select committee.

Shrimati Lekhwati Jain (North-East Towns, non-Muhammadan, Rural) (Urdu): Only the other day the House passed the Relief of Indebtedness Act, and soon after that another drastic legislation has been introduced in the Council to crush the sahkars. I am at a loss to understand how the honourable Chaudhri Sahib has thought it necessary and advisable to present a similar Bill before the House. The poor sahkars have not yet recovered from the severe blow of the previous Act, but they have been most mercilessly struck another blow. It means that a man who is already weeping and has not as yet given sufficient expression to his grief should be given another kick and knocked down.

I fail to understand the object of that party here which is concerned with the zamindars. The zamindars are in a great majority in this province. As compared with them the number of sahkars is very small; they are merely 40,000. It appears that the Unionist Party wants to destroy the sahkars wholesale. It is often said that the minorities should be protected, but in this case the matter is quite the reverse. In his speech Mr. Mukerji remarked that when the Criminal Law Amendment Bill was brought forward by the Government it was urged that one of the objects of the Bill was to check the growth of communism in this country. But I ask, what is the purpose of bringing forward these Relief of Indebtedness Bills? Do they propose to deprive the sahkars of their wealth and make them like a zamindar who is under debt? If the Government would accept this Bill or lend its support to this measure it will be construed that Government itself favours a legislation which openly preaches communism. The Government often send those people to prison who preach communistic doctrines. Will it now support this Bill, which is nothing but a propaganda for communism?

If we look at the various clauses of this Bill, we are greatly disappointed. Those who have carefully read the Bill, will agree with me that its provisions are anything but fair. It is often argued that the powers of executive officers should be given to the judiciary. But this Bill proposes that the powers vested in the civil courts should pass into the hands of executive officers. I cannot understand why the Chaudhri Sahib is so bitterly opposed to the civil courts. If, however, he thinks that these courts are entirely useless, he will do well to bring forward a measure that the civil courts should be abolished. Thus there will be a great deal of decrease in Government's expenditure. In another clause it is laid down that such portion of the judgment-debtor's land shall be exempted from temporary alienation as in the Collector's opinion is sufficient to provide for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and his family. When it was proposed to refer this Bill to the select committee, I said that it was not proper to make a provision in this Bill that if a judgment-debtor has more land than is necessary for his and his family's maintenance then alone will his land be attached and alienated temporarily in the execution of a decree. A man can easily increase his expenses and no amount of land will be sufficient for his subsistence. He can live in a bungalow; he can keep four servants. Such legislations are absolutely uncalled for. If a piece of land is to be attached, it should be publicly auctioned. At the time of a public auction any price can be offered for the land. But in the present case the collector will depend on the report of the patwari who will be easily persuaded by a zamindar to say that the land is of very low price and is hardly sufficient for the maintenance of himself and his family. Therefore this clause is not acceptable. In another clause it has been laid down that the ancestral property in the hands of an heir shall not be liable to attachment in the execution of a decree relating to a debt incurred by any of his predecessors in interest. It means that after the death of a debtor the creditor should not be able to realize his debt from the debtor's son. It is very strange that after a debtor's death his son should become master of the property but he should not pay the debts incurred by his father. I do not understand how the honourable Chaudhri Sahib has thought it fair to deprive the sahkars of their money with which the zamindar has been enjoying himself. By introducing this Bill he has not only harmed the sahkars, but he has also put the life of the zamindars in great danger. We find that sometimes a son gives poison to his father when the latter is insured for Rs. 50,000. The son thinks that after his father's death he will get that huge sum and he will lead a comfortable life. In the case of the zamindars when a zamindar's son will find that his father is heavily in debt and that he will become master of that property without paying any debt, he will feel inclined to kill his father. But if he knows that even when he inherits the property he will have to pay back the debt or he will not become master of the property after his father's death he will refrain from taking the life of his father.

I do not know how the Chaudhri Sahib has expressed a hope that his own party and the Sikh party will lend countenance to this Bill. I opposed even its reference to a select committee. I am really pained why a religious and pious man like the honourable Chaudhri Sahib should bring forward a measure which lays down that the son should not pay off his father's debts. When the Anti-Beggary Bill was introduced in this House, he opposed it on the ground that it interferes with Hinduism, according to which there is a certain stage in man's life when he should depend on alms and charity. I fail to understand why he now deviates from the path of religion. I do not suppose that the whole Unionist Party will be converted to the honourable Chaudhri Sahib's views that the son should evade the payment of debts incurred by his father or any of his predecessors. It is really strange that the son should inherit the property but he should not pay his father's liabilities and not liquidate his debts. Sometime ago when I said that women should be allowed to become members of municipal committees and district boards, the Chaudhri Sahib opposed me on the ground that to grant such permission was against the Hindu Dharma. But by moving such Bills and bringing forward such legislations he has betrayed himself and has shown that his religious views are not strong and he is not a staunch Hindu.

In another clause it is laid down that no fresh application will be made for the attachment of property after the expiration of six years. But according to the existing Act the execution of a decree can be made within 12 years. Thus the more closely we look at this Bill and its provisions, the more we become aware of the motive underlying the Bill. The whole object of this Bill is merely this, that the zamindars should take loans, enjoy themselves, go to England, return as Bar-at-Laws, but should not pay back the money which they borrowed from the sahkars. That is why the period of twelve years fixed for the execution of a decree has been reduced to six years. This short period of time the debtor can spend anywhere. He can hide himself somewhere. He can go to a city ; he can go to a State.

Again, it has been provided that the sahukars should secure licences for advancing loans. One can understand a tonga-driver or a lorry-driver obtaining a licence. The object is that if an accident occurs, he may be easily traced. But when the sahukar is asked to obtain a licence, what accident is contemplated ? If it has been made obligatory for the sahukar to get a licence, it should have been made necessary for the debtors also to get a licence. The officers of the Government can see whether the debtor actually stands in need of money or not, whether he requires the money for paying the land revenue or other liabilities or he merely wants to purchase wine and fight elections. If the officer finds that the zamindar wants loan for the last two things, he can say that it is not necessary and he should not be allowed to borrow money. But instead of taking the debtor to task, the poor sahukar is being reprimanded and cruel laws are being made to ruin him. Not only that, if it is found that he is not registered he will be fined Rs. 1,000. It appears that the honourable Chaudhri Sahib is bent upon crushing poor people to death. This Bill is not meant to help them at all. It aims at helping the big zamindars and the rich landlords so that they may enjoy themselves and lead luxurious lives. Suppose a poor man who is my neighbour receives some guests and he has no money or flour in the house. He comes to me and asks for a loan of five rupees. According to this Bill it will not be possible for me to accommodate him with a small loan unless I obtain first a licence. If that man fails to pay back that debt, and I unfortunately lodge a complaint against him, I will be at once fined Rs. 1,000 for helping a poor man in his extreme need. The honourable Chaudhri Sahib should have thought of the poor people also who have to depend on others for the bare necessities of life. He should have taken into consideration the condition of everybody. If every money-lender will be called upon to obtain a licence before advancing any money, poor people will perish. Then, the sahukars do not advance loans to the zamindars simply with the intention of earning interest ; in many cases they are moved to compassion on account of the sad plight of the zamindars. It is represented to them time and again that a zamindar is on the verge of starvation and that he should be saved by the advance of loans. But now when the money advanced is claimed back it is again being pointed out that the zamindar is very poor, he cannot pay and he should not be asked to pay. I cannot understand this position of the gentlemen who have come here as advocates of the zamindars. After all the zamindars are being asked by the sahukars to pay back what they had borrowed ; nobody is asking them to part with their pound of flesh. Do these gentlemen really believe, that the demands of the sahukars are unreasonable and unjustifiable ? My greatest complaint against this Bill is that it has not been conceived with the intention of helping the poor and the needy. It is proposed to include in the term " trader " all the rich business men and brokers. It is not proposed that the petty dalal who hardly earns more than four annas a day and even that after crying all day long should be protected. Nor is the Bill meant for protecting the poor hawker who earns a penny out of his wares which are worth hardly more than a few annas. The Bill is meant to help big lawyers who are enjoying lucrative practice and occupying seats in the Council, the Assembly, district boards and municipal committees. Need I point out that such people need no protection? I will not take much of your time. In fact I had no intention to speak on this Bill. But then it is very difficult that one should see the House being misled into supporting such unjust measures and remain silent. The honourable member from Hoshiarpur, Sardar Arjan Singh, has said while delivering his speech in support of this Bill that it is even more important than the Criminal Law (Amendment) Bill. Yes, it is more disastrous for the country even than that abominable piece of legislation. It is even more drastic than the Criminal Law (Amendment) Bill. I am glad that even a supporter of this Bill had the fairness to admit that. You ought to have waited to see first what good the Relief of Indebtedness Act has done to this country. Why have you been so quick? You have brought this Bill before the House now because you have a majority here. In the next provincial Assembly also you hope to be in a more stable majority. You could have rushed such a measure through that Assembly any time. The Government should support the circulation motion and get this Bill circulated to elicit public opinion. Many changes have been made in it since it was referred to the select committee. Attempt has been made, through this Bill, to cut the throat of a whole community. The Government should not take this affair lightly. It is a grave problem. You should certainly find out whether the public opinion favours the amended form of the Bill or not. I know very well that people can safely disregard public opinion in this House because they have a sure majority here. But the Government should never minimize the importance of public opinion. The learned Chaudhri Sahib has referred to two zamindara conferences which passed resolutions in support of his Bill. Last time I had thrown some light on those resolutions and I had acquainted honourable members of the House with some funny arguments that were put forward in support thereof. For instance, it was urged that the zamindars had purchased lands with the money borrowed from the sahuks and as the prices of landed property had gone down considerably they could not pay back the money borrowed. I have again to point out as I did last time that the sahuks advanced money in cash and they want it back in cash. The zamindars became bigger zamindars by purchasing landed property with the money borrowed from the sahuks and the latter did not earn any profit. Why should the zamindars now come here to make laws like the Debtors Protection Bill in order to evade payment and why should the Government encourage them? You come here to say that your Bill has the support of two zamindara conferences held at Lyallpur. Do you not know that your Bill has been opposed in as many as twenty Sahuks conferences? Why mislead the honourable members of the House by saying that your Bill commands so much support? But you have the satisfaction that you are in majority in this House as well as outside this Council and the poor sahuks are only 40,000 in number. But the Parliament of the Punjab should not be prepared to trample under foot the rights of a minority on such flimsy pretexts as your Bill embodies. I again declare that this Bill is not meant to help the poor and the needy. It is meant to benefit those rich people who spend money like water on their luxuries and then try to deny their obligations.

Khan Bahadur Nawab Muhammad Hyat Qureshi (Shahpur West Muhammadan, Rural) (Urdu): I had no intention to speak on this motion nor do I see any necessity for speaking at this stage, but I feel called upon to point out that the motion which the honourable member for industries has moved and the reasons which he has adduced in support thereof are untenable. In fact the honourable member ought not to have moved his motion at this stage. This Bill has been introduced in this House, has been referred to a select committee and now it has emerged from that select committee in a considerably modified form. If any substantial changes had been made in it in the select committee it may have been again circulated to elicit public opinion. But, as it is, no substantial changes have been made in it, and I see no reason to recirculate it. Therefore the motion moved by the honourable member is not justified.

Sardar Arjan Singh: But he has moved no motion.

Khan Bahadur Nawab Muhammad Hyat Qureshi: I want to point out that no substantial change has been made in the Bill by the select committee. So any opposition at this stage is undesirable. The select committee has already considerably pruned and amended it. There were several members of the select committee who represented urban Hindu interests but they did not attend the committee's deliberations. But our party took great pains to delete those provisions from the Bill which might have been objectionable from those members' point of view. Several other provisions were modified.

The first objection that has been raised by the Opposition is that whereas the Relief of Indebtedness Bill has already been placed on the statute book, there is no necessity of pressing this measure. But they will please recall that when certain amendments introduced in it by our party were dropped by an understanding, it was suggested that those things should be brought forward in the shape of a private Bill. So, it is those very suggestions which the present private Bill seeks to give effect to.

Another important objection raised by my honourable friends is this that the provision relating to the prohibition of a lease for a period of 20 years in connection with meeting the liabilities of a progenitor is unjustified. But even this is not a new thing. The High Court has admitted this to be a sound provision in the case of many districts already and it is in order to give this provision a legal force in the remaining districts of the province that this provision has been incorporated in the Bill. We want to make the substance of a High Court ruling universal in this province and nobody should object to it.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri: But you are going against the Shar'-i-Muhammadi.

Khan Bahadur Nawab Muhammad Hyat Qureshi: No, we are legislating for the benefit of those people only who follow the customary law. Those people who choose to follow Shariat are at liberty to do so even at present.

Then an objection has been raised that the transfer of power from civil courts to the collector is not desirable. But perhaps the honourable members who raise this objection overlook the fact that even the collectors will act as judicial officers while disposing of cases under the proposed Act.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit : But what is the use of transferring the powers of civil courts to the court of a collector ?

Khan Bahadur Nawab Muhammad Hayat Qureshi : Let me explain. The present practice is that the papers in such cases are forwarded to the collectors by the lower civil courts. And it is on the orders of the collectors that the sub-judges decide their cases. It is seldom that a sub-judge goes against the finding of a collector. So, it is with a view to avoid the delay in the decisions that the provision of a transfer of power from the sub-judges to the collector is incorporated in this Bill. Further, a collector is a far superior officer to the sub-judges and is drawing much more pay than the sub-judge who only draws Rs. 200 or Rs. 300 a month. You can expect that under the present arrangement there will be more justice than you can expect from the sub-judges.

Then, the honourable member for industries has expressed the apprehension that if the present Bill is passed into law, big zamindars will take away the lands belonging to the petty zamindars. But perhaps he forgets that this law will apply to the agriculturist money-lenders in the same way as it will apply to other sahuks. It does not recognise any difference between a bania and an agriculturist money-lender.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : But agriculturist money-lenders never go to courts. They purchase the lands of their debtors outside the courts.

Khan Bahadur Nawab Muhammad Hyat Qureshi : No, the proposed law will apply equally to the agriculturist money-lenders. I am considered to be a big zamindar. I am prepared to support any proposal brought forward by my honourable friend which might preclude the possibility of an agriculturist money-lender escaping the application of the provisions of this law to him. Then, we do not want that the money advanced by the sahuks should be wasted or not recovered. We want to deal with them fairly. If you go to my ilaqa you will learn that we help the sahuks to recover their debts even without seeking the help of the courts of law.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : That is true ; but by supporting this Bill you propose to carry to your district the germs of the disease from which Rohtak is already suffering.

Khan Bahadur Nawab Muhammad Hayat Qureshi : Now I should like to request the honourable members of this House to be ready to decide everything on its merits. They should not do anything which might be detrimental to the interests of the province as a whole. Our party will be ready to agree to any reasonable suggestion put forward by the honourable members occupying those benches. They, on their part, should not adopt the unreasonable attitude of opposing each and everything proposed from this side of the House. If they table constructive amendments we will consider them favourably but they should refrain from adopting wrecking tactics.

Much stress has been laid on the point that this Bill, if passed, will destroy the credit of the zamindars and consequently they will stand to lose by its passage. But let me say at once that this argument carries no conviction with us

We know that the Punjab zamindar enjoys good credit and I should say better credit than that which the zamindars of other provinces enjoy and I am sure that he will continue to enjoy this credit even after this Bill is placed on the statute book. Therefore the honourable members who are opposing this Bill on that ground need have no fears on that score. I may also assure these honourable members that the zamindars are always prepared to amicably settle their accounts with the sahuksars provided the latter are honest and they are in their turn prepared to meet their debtors half-way. It will be admitted even by the worst enemies of the zamindars that the latter have fallen on bad days. They are certainly not in a position to pay off the entire amounts of the debts due from them and, therefore, if the sahuksars are ready to take a lenient view of the situation and are honest in the bargain, there is no reason why they should not get back at least a reasonable portion of the money advanced by them. I may say once again that the zamindars are by nature very honest and it is their desire to pay off as much of their debts as they are in a position to pay. In support of this contention I can quote any number of cases in which the zamindars have paid their debts which were time-barred and for which they could not be sued against in the courts. It is, therefore, clear that this fear of some of the honourable members is unfounded that the entire debts of the sahuksars will be wiped out by this and other similar measures. The honest sahuksars will get back the whole or at least some portion of that money even after this Bill is passed into law.

The difficulty is that some of the honourable members do not try to see things as they are and do not try to appreciate the difficulties which face the zamindars at present. They ought to know, if they do not already know, that on the prosperity of the zamindars depends the prosperity of the whole province. If they are happy, they can keep all others happy. If the zamindars have plenty to eat and to spare, every other section of the people will have plenty to enjoy. The sahuksars and the Government too will face no financial difficulties. But if the zamindars are poor and are starving as some of them are actually starving at present, the sahuksars, the Government and in fact every other section of the people must also starve. It has not been wrongly suggested that these zamindars are the back-bone of the province and the country. It is, therefore, our duty to keep them happy. It is in the interest of all that the zamindars should not be exasperated by demands which he is unable to meet. And if we all look at the situation from that point of view, I am sure that all the difficulties with which we are faced at present will be easily removed. I may also say that if the sahuksars and their representatives change their present mentality and they begin to help the zamindars, better understanding can be created among all sections of the population and they can have all the pleasant relations which they used to have before. With these words I support the motion under consideration.

Rai Sahib Lala Labh Chand Mehra (Non-official, nominated) (Urdu) : I intentionally did not take part in the debate that took place the other day in this chamber on the motion for reference of this Bill to a select committee. I hoped that the select committee appointed to consider this Bill would take all the criticism received in regard to this Bill into consideration and delete all the obnoxious provisions in the Bill. But I now find that I was wrong to cherish that hope and I have no other choice left but to oppose the motion for the consideration of this Bill. The honourable mover of this Bill has been pleased to say that there is a large volume of opinions in its favour and he has received and even is receiving letters from members of all classes and communities intimating that this Bill, if passed, will not only help the zamindars but will benefit non-zamindars also. I do not mind if the honourable member wishes to please himself by saying all this, but let me tell him that there is nothing to wonder at if he has received letters even from the non-zamindars saying that this Bill ought to be passed. As one who has seen much of the world he ought to have known that there are black sheep in every class and community and that there is no dearth of such men in any community who would like to evade payment of their debts if they could find a way for doing so. If such people have written letters to him and have expressed their desire to muster strong under the banner raised by the honourable member from Rohtak, it is nothing to wonder at. But that is no argument why this Bill should be placed on the statute book. In referring to the opinions received in favour of this Bill and also to the letters which the honourable member has received from, what I should call, dishonest persons, because I am sure that no honest persons will do that—he has conveniently forgotten to mention that much larger volume of opinions have been received against this Bill. It appears that he has not even cared to go through the opinions that are against this Bill. For his information I will read one sentence from the opinion of the Deputy Commissioner, Montgomery, who, it will be seen, supports my view in the matter.

There may be some bankrupts, insolvents and other failures in business amongst the non-agriculturists and some spend-thrift land-holders who may welcome such a proposal; but I do not think that it is desirable for society to protect such persons at the expense of other more useful members.

These words speak volumes and I would like the honourable mover of this Bill to read them carefully. I am glad to say that by the grace of God there are honest men even amongst the agricultural classes and one such person, who is a man of no mean position, has said the following words while expressing his opinion on this Bill :—

The Bill, if passed into Act, will affect all debts in existence at the time of the passing of this Act. The provisions of this Bill are designed to bring the chances of the recovery of a debt from a debtor by a creditor to a minimum and to make the business of money-lending extremely difficult, if not impossible.

It is high time that the Government should put its foot on this sort of legislation.

The Bill, if passed into law, means that a creditor shall not recover his debts in the Punjab which will amount to legalized swindling.

We are under a civilized Government and every citizen expects the Government to enforce contracts between its subjects, inter se. Any legislation may be passed for the future but the present contractual liabilities of the debtor should not be wiped out.

It is clear that the Bill, if passed into law, will effectually stop money-lending for the future and also wipe out all existing debts when the chances of recovery under the law will be reduced to a minimum.

I think it is clear to the Government that an agriculturist cannot make his both ends meet, he must borrow. The money-lender will cease to give him a penny.

I, as an agriculturist, shudder to think of the consequences of this sort of legislation. In plain language it means that the sturdy peasantry of the Punjab which consists of small holding proprietors will disappear. Within the coming 10 years the best land of the agriculturists will pass into the hands of big moneyed agriculturists of the Punjab. The Alienation of Land Act will become a dead letter because the debtor must mortgage or sell his land in the hour of need, because sahukar will not advance him a penny and the so-called Co-operative Societies, which are reported to be flourishing, are in fact in a really deplorable condition because the recoveries of debts shown in those societies are really fictitious in many cases.

Alienation of Land Act was designed to protect the small peasant proprietors and this legislation will destroy them. The recent last legislation on the subject is already a very grave step.

I think the proposed legislation may prove a straw which may break the camel's back.

If the Government wants to protect the small proprietors at the hands of big money-lending agriculturists, then the Government should oppose the proposed measure or else the big moneyed agriculturists will devour their poor brethren by acquiring their lands by way of mortgage or sale and the sturdy peasantry of the Punjab which is the back-bone of the Indian Army will disappear as such altogether.

In the interest of the British Empire, the Government should not play into the hands of a small section of the so-called agriculturist leaders in the Punjab Council who do not really understand the best interests of the Punjab zamindars.

It is Rai Bahadur Chaudhri Diwan Chand Saini, a member of an agriculturist tribe, who has said these words and who, I should say, had the courage of conviction to say these words. The honourable sponsor of the Bill has been pleased to tell us that a majority of the deputy commissioners in the Punjab have expressed themselves in favour of this Bill, but he has not cared to mention that the Financial Commissioner who is much more experienced than any of the deputy commissioners, does not look upon this Bill with favour. Mr. Dobson says :—

Generally speaking this legislation is superfluous in view of the existing Acts already in force on the subject, namely :—

The Usurious Loans Act, 1918 ;
The Punjab Regulation of Accounts Act; and
The Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act, 1934.

He further says that :—

"As a matter of principle it would appear desirable to await the result of the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act."

He further says :—

"The Bill appears to contain a series of drastic and far from impartial provisions designed apparently to fortify the indebted classes, who are already exceptionally favoured by recent enactments, in resisting the claims of their creditors."

Coming to specific sections he observes :—

"Section 4 can only have the effect of injuring both debtor and creditor."

Proceeding further he says that :—

"Section 6 disposes the burden of proof in a manner contrary to the existing law of evidence."

He further thinks that :—

"In view of the very indefinite nature of the proposals, this fresh attempt at a very questionable piece of legislation should not be supported."

I shall now proceed to read out one or two sentences from the opinion expressed by the Registrar, Co-operative Societies, who has so much to do with the zamindars and whose opinion should certainly carry weight with their representatives. Besides saying so many other things he says :—

"There is no indication that it (this Bill) will help the smaller debtor rather than the most substantial landlords."

[R. S. L. Labh Chand Mehra.]

Then he says—

“Thus with the restrictions recently introduced in the matter of civil arrest, the resources open to the creditors are reduced to vanishing point.”

It will further interest the honourable members to learn what the Senior Secretary to the Financial Commissioners says when expressing his opinion with regard to this Bill. He says—

“The general opinion agrees with the view which I have already given in my letter quoted above, that these successive measures are having a noticeably bad effect on the will to pay of even the solvent zamindar.”

I need not repeat what Mr. Garbett, Commissioner, Multan, has said while expressing his disagreement to this Bill. Other Commissioners also have disapproved it.

Mr. President : If any gentlemen want to carry on conversation, they should do so in whispers, so that when a gentleman is speaking, those who wish to hear him, might do so.

Rai Sahib Lala Labh Chand Mehra : I can quote any number of opinions expressed by men of experience which go to show that this Bill will do more harm than good to the province as a whole.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : On a point of order. These opinions were received before the Bill was sent to the select committee and the select committee considered those opinions. How is the reading of these opinions relevant now?

Mr. President : The relevancy of these opinions cannot be questioned, but the desirability of their being read in extenso is certainly questionable. The honourable members may, in certain cases, read one or two opinions in support of their views, but if they make it a rule to read every opinion, which supports their views, that, I think, would be objectionable.

Rai Sahib Lala Labh Chand Mehra : I bow to your ruling, Sir, I have in fact not been reading all that has been said against it. If I were to do so, it will take me days. I have been reading only small portions from these opinions. The realisation of old debts was already a matter of great difficulty, but the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act has made it altogether impossible. I do not like to say anything as to how money-lenders are faring under the existing law, but being a business man I want to show that this Act is seriously affecting business. I belong to Amritsar which as you know is a big centre of business. All business is being adversely affected by this legislation. Leaving all other business, take the case of cloth and piece goods which has least connection with money-lending. The dealers of cloth and piece goods are very badly hit by this legislation.

Mr. M. A. Ghani : The honourable member is an honorary magistrate and he says that he is a business man too. I ask if a business man can also be an honorary magistrate.

Rai Sahib Lala Labh Chand Mehra : I am sorry the honourable member is wasting the time of the House by indulging in such unnecessary and absurd interruptions. I was saying that people from mandies all over the province come to purchase piece goods from Amritsar. All the business is done on credit. These people also sell on credit in different towns and villages. The village and town bazaz (draper) who is a village sahukar as well cannot realize his debts and hence cannot pay to mandi merchants. When these merchants cannot realise their debts, it is very difficult for them to pay to the big merchants at Amritsar. Thus the whole business is upset and the trade suffers. The honourable member from Shahpur has been pleased to remark that even now the honest debtors are prepared to settle their debts with their creditors. That is right. The honest debtors do not stand in need of any such legislation. But the difficulty of the matter is that this sort of legislation is going to encourage the dishonest debtors to evade the payment of their debts. This legislation is surely going to seriously harm the credit of the country at large. It is already very difficult to realise old debts and the present Bill if passed into law will make the realisation of such debts altogether impossible. This is not only my opinion but it is the opinion of all prominent businessmen of the province. I do not like to discuss the provisions of the Bill at length, for it has already been done by the honourable member for industries who has clearly shown in his speech that the Bill is most injurious to the best interests of the country. With these words I strongly oppose the Bill under discussion and request the honourable members to reject it.

Sardar Sampuran Singh (Lyallpur, Sikh, Rural) (Urdu): I am at a loss to understand why so much opposition is being offered to the Bill now before the House. It does not introduce any material change in the law now in force, though it provides for a few more simple things. In the first instance it requires that whenever a civil court orders that agricultural land should be attached and alienated temporarily in execution of a decree, the proceedings of such attachment and alienation should be transferred to the collector. According to the existing law a civil court orders attachment and temporary alienation of agricultural land in execution of a decree, after the collector submits his report as to how much of the land is available for such alienation and how much of it is required for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and his family. The only change that is being introduced is that final orders in this connection should be passed by the collector who is familiar with the local conditions and not by the civil court. This does not make any material difference because even under the existing law a civil court orders temporary alienation of agricultural land on the report of the collector. In my opinion this change does not in any way violate the principle of justice and equity. In the second place the Bill requires that ancestral property in the hands of an heir should not be liable to attachment in execution of a decree relating to a debt incurred by his predecessor in interest. Even this is no innovation. Under the existing customary law the ancestral property in the hands of an heir is not liable to attachment in execution of a decree relating to a debt incurred by his predecessor. Of course there are a few rulings that in certain districts there is a custom justifying the attachment and temporary alienation of agricultural land in the hands of a son to satisfy the debt incurred by his father; and the present Bill intends to meet the situation that has arisen on account of such rulings. I fail to understand how this Bill if passed into law will deal a death-blow to money-lenders or stand in the way of realisation of old debts due to them. In my opinion the present hue and cry over this is absolutely unnecessary. It would not in the least adversely affect the previous debts or as a matter of fact the future transactions. Another fundamental principle of law is that the persons who come to seek remedy in a court of law should first establish the claim. This is the recognised principle of law but of late the courts have held that when a person admits to have signed a particular document, it will be taken that he has incurred the debt. But in many cases the judgment debtors have argued that their thumb impression was taken when they were either asleep or drunk. In order to avoid this it is proposed that the burden of proving that any consideration entered in a bond or promissory note or in any other document have actually passed shall be on the creditor. This is quite in consonance with justice, equity and good conscience. I therefore do not regard even this to be a new change in the law now in vogue.

I belong to a profession for which a licence is necessary. No lawyer or advocate can start practice without first getting a licence. Similarly medical practitioners have also to get their names registered and obtain licences to carry on their profession. For motor driving a licence is necessary and no one can drive a car without a licence. Therefore, it is wrong to say that by a licence or by registration a man's position or status will be lowered. If really it is degrading to apply for a licence for legal practice then it means that we who are in the legal profession are disgraced and as such, how can we tolerate that other professions and trades should not be degraded by making registration or licence necessary for them? If the legal profession is degraded simply because it is necessary for those who follow it to obtain a licence, then naturally we should desire that sahlukars should also be stigmatized by making their profession of money-lending subject to the issue of licences to them.

Another point which I would like to submit is that in the profession of money-lending there are many people who are not well acquainted with this calling and they by following it have to suffer a good deal of loss. If this profession is subjected to the obtaining of a licence or registration then it would save those people who are not expert in this profession from a good deal of loss. Then there are also such people in this profession who are not honest. They practise deceit and bring this profession into disrepute. If registration or licence for this profession is made necessary then such dishonest money-lenders will have to leave the profession and consequently this profession will become more honourable and respectable. If the profession of money-lending is purged of all such people who are not honest in their dealings then it will once again re-establish its good name and reputation. If all the money-lenders become organized and subject themselves to a law then the status of the profession will rise and not fall as feared by some honourable members. Rai Bahadur Lala Mukand Lal Puri suggested that by this law it will become impossible for the zamindars to get debts and consequently to meet their necessities they will have to sell their land at a very low price which would be more detrimental for them than anything else. This idea had also suggested itself to me. But borrowing has become an incessant evil and in order to stop it all drastic measures should be adopted. Borrowing has become a continuous process just like the unending "Arabian Nights." The suggestion of Rai Bahadur Mukand Lal is quite sound but it does not mean that such a wholesome principle as is underlying this measure should not be admitted and this measure which is at present under consideration should not be passed. If after the enforcement of this law we find that the land of the small holders is passing into the hands of the big landlords then at that time we can make new amendments in it and the Council will remove all those defects which will become apparent after its application.

Khan Sahib Chaudhri Riasat Ali (Gujranwala, Muhammadan, Rural): While following the debates on this motion I find another proof of the saying that history repeats itself. We have been following the debates of the Relief of Indebtedness Act and if we compare the methods observed then and the tactics which are being adopted now, we see that there is not the slightest difference in all the lines followed. Things are going on in exactly the same way even when examined in details as they were going on at the time of the discussion of the Indebtedness Bill. It need not be repeated that this Bill like its predecessor-in-interest if I may coin that word, was circulated for public opinion, and this Bill like that Bill was also referred to a committee of 13 members, rather an unlucky number, and this Bill again when it came before this House for consideration was opposed by my same worthy colleague, Raja Sahib. He was the first to open criticism and objections on that motion and he is to-day also the first to speak against this motion. I am not suggesting anything, but I am simply drawing your attention to the fact that more or less the speakers who have taken part in this debate have been called upon in the same series of circles as they were called upon in the case of the Relief of Indebtedness Bill.

Coming to the Bill itself, I would suggest at the very outset without going into details that this Bill has been commented upon and considered by the people outside this House and inside this House for more than eight or nine months. It was introduced in the Council on the 29th March, 1935. We have received no less than 800 opinions and opinions from all sorts of people, from the Judges of the High Court down to the lowest zamindar or sahukar, in their independent capacity as well as in their collective capacity in the shape of meetings where opinions have been expressed on this Bill. We cannot say that people have been taken by surprise so far as the question of public opinion is concerned. As was pointed out by the honourable the Leader of this Party at the time he moved the motion for circulation of this Bill, so many deputy commissioners, so many commissioners, so many judges, so many lawyers, so many associations, so many political bodies, so many trade unions have expressed their opinion against this Bill and so many in support of the Bill, a smaller number, of course, against it. Practically everybody even the Judges of the High Court have accepted the principle underlying this Bill. You may refer to the various opinions if you want any proof. I have said it for the simple reason that once the principle has been accepted by you as well as by other people, there should be no opposition at this stage against this Bill. If there are any differences of opinion, let amendments be tabled, as there have been some and let us decide those amendments on their merits taking them one by one. Let us fight out the pros and cons of the question on the floor of this House rather than oppose the motion for consideration of the Bill.

[K. S. Ch. Riasat Ali.]

Now a charge which has been laid against the select committee is that the select committee has made the Bill very 'intense' to quote Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri. I would suggest that a cursory glance at this Bill as it has emerged from the select committee will show that the charge is more illusory than real. Members should not be afraid of the fact that the Bill now contains 21 sections, whereas before it went to the select committee it contained only 11 sections; that the Bill had one chapter before and now it has as many as four chapters. They should not be terrified at all because the subject matter of the Bill has not been changed by an iota. If you refer to the sections it will be proved that I am right. The only extensive changes that have been made, have been made in section 2. But they are not changes if you examine them closely, because in the old Bill the words 'money-lender' and 'creditor' occurred. It was considered convenient to define these expressions, because in the former Bill it was stated that they would have the same meaning as in the Punjab Regulation of Accounts Bill. In order to find out the meanings of these expressions in that Act we had to go to the Public Library or some other library, but for easy reference and as a good practice we have now defined all those expressions here in this Bill. We have removed the definitions bodily from that Act. Now a new addition has been made so far as section 2 is concerned. The expressions 'interest,' 'bank,' 'company,' 'co-operative society,' 'trade' and 'trader' happen to occur in the definition of "loan" in the Regulation of Accounts Act; therefore it was considered essential for us to define these expressions as well, and as the word, "loan" occurs in the definition of "money-lender" adopted in this Bill we have to define it; that is the explanation why this section now comprises of about 60 lines instead of 16 lines. There has been no material change otherwise at all.

Another thing is that in the old Bill in section 3, the expression 'land' and the expression 'collector' occurred. It was essential to define the word 'land' and the word 'collector' and it is on account of this that the section is now bigger than the original section. It was considered necessary to define these expressions as it was felt in the select committee that there will be abnormal addition to the work of the collector, if he were to act judicially, and therefore his powers should be delegated to some other revenue officer. For this purpose who adopted the definition of the word 'collector' as is given in the Revenue Act. Therefore practically there is no difference in these words and the words in the old clause as it stood. Then sections 6, 7, 8 and 9 are only added as consequential because when we say that there should be an appeal from the order of the collector, there should be provided a limitation as well as an officer to whom the appeal should go. So far as the section relating to the limitation for execution of decrees is concerned, we have removed section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code bodily from it and inserted it in this Bill with the only difference that the digit 6 has been inserted instead of 12. There is no other change in any respect. The section relating to the burden of proof remains the same. As to the registration of money-lenders the Bill provided that they should obtain licences and that they should be registered as money-lenders. Therefore it was essential to give directions to the collector that he shall give a licence and should register his name as money-lender. The reason is that no collector is bound under this Act to act as we want him to act unless we make necessary provisions for it. Section 21 concerns the rules of procedure. One important provision that we have made is that these rules should be subject to the criticism of the Council before they are enforced. This is nothing new because this provision exists in the Regulation of Accounts Act, it also exists in the Executive Officer Act and it exists in the Land Revenue Act (section 60-A). So nothing new whatever has been added by the poor select committee composed of the unlucky number of 13.

The second thing was—and it was much emphasised by our worthy Raja Sahib—that the Bill has come too soon after the last Bill. My answer to this is that after all there is no limitation for any Bill to follow or to precede another Bill. It all rests on the urgency of the matter. If circumstances demand, we might have to repeal an Act which we have passed only yesterday, but if circumstances are such that they should strengthen the measures that we have already passed, there is no bar on our passing an Act to supplement that Act even on the very next day, if the circumstances are such as have been stated on the floor of this House by many of my honourable colleagues, that they do not brook a minute's delay, and if the position is such that the Act which has already been passed has not been able to give sufficient relief which it was desired to give. Without making any references or casting any sort of aspersions on any honourable court, I would submit one or two instances to show that that Bill has so far failed to achieve the end for which it was passed. I put a number of questions on the floor of this House to the Honourable Finance Member the other day and two or three of them are relevant so far as this aspect of the question is concerned. I asked him as to the number of cases pending in the civil courts of Lahore division only in which judgment-debtors were arrested after the passing of the Relief of Indebtedness Act. The answer was that the number was 45. Within two months, in one division alone, that is one-eighth of the province the number arrested in spite of the Relief of Indebtedness Act is no less than 45. Then, I asked him as to the number of cases in which notices for arrest were issued. The answer given was 1,895. This too only in one division. Again I asked, in how many cases only the affidavits of the decree-holders were considered sufficient to show that the judgment-debtor was "contumaciously" avoiding payment of debts and the reply given was not less than 15 cases. (An honourable member: Out of how many?) I do not know. In not less than 15 cases the mere affidavits of the creditors were considered sufficient to put the debtors under arrest. The intention of the legislature was that it should be made practically impossible for the court to put any man under arrest on one pretext or another. But the mere acceptance by the courts of the affidavits of the decree-holders and the putting under arrest of the debtors shows that the relief has not been given in practical shape to the extent to which we intended that it should be given. There is one more aspect of the question. I asked how many people were arrested for decrees up to the amount of Rs. 200. The answer was 22 in one division. Taking only these figures into consideration it is clear that the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Bill has failed to achieve the object of giving that relief which we wanted to give to the people. Therefore there is a necessity of giving that further relief by supplementing the provisions of the Relief of Indebtedness Act by the provisions of the present measure.

[K. S. Ch. Riasat Ali.]

Another thing which is relevant to the present case is that in a certain case in my district notice of arrest was issued to a man owning 6,000 acres of land. That man on receipt of the notice of arrest appeared in court and said that he would either pay off in instalments or that his movable property consisting of cattle may be attached. The court ordered him to produce his cattle in court. It must be remembered that the man lived in a village about 60 miles from the court headquarters. He pleaded that there was no guarantee that the cattle will not be robbed on the way if he were to bring them to the court and that their value will be reduced by undertaking such a long journey and so he requested that they may be attached on the spot. Where was the harm in the court accepting this request? Further he contended that as long as the cattle were not attached he should not be ordered to produce them in court. This contention was taken to mean that the debtor was "contumaciously" avoiding the payment of the loan and a warrant of arrest was issued. Of course that order was reversed on appeal. Still, this is an instance in which a man even though he offers everything in his possession is taken to be "contumaciously" avoiding the payment of loan and a warrant is issued for his arrest. These facts prove at least that the Relief of Indebtedness Act has not been sufficient to give relief to the poor zamindars.

The next point I wish to take up is the contention that this is a new Bill. That point was sufficiently dealt with by Sardar Arjan Singh. I will only content myself by saying that there is nothing new in this Bill. The principles of the Bill were enunciated in clauses 36, 37 and 38 of the Indebtedness Relief Bill when it emerged from the select committee. The honourable member contended that there are principles incorporated in the present measure which were cut down by the select committee at that time. That is entirely wrong. A mere reference to that Bill will show that the whole thing excepting the registration of money-lenders had been in the Relief of Indebtedness Bill as my honourable friend Nawab Muhammad Hayat Qureshi just now mentioned. Only these clauses were asked to be removed from that Bill by the Government and brought forward in a separate Bill, and that is why this Bill is now before the House. The clause relating to the onus of proof of consideration and the clause relating to the transfer of decrees to the collector were taken bodily from that Bill and inserted in the present Bill. Therefore the contention that the select committee on the previous Bill threw out certain provisions and that they have been brought forward in this Bill is totally wrong. A mere reference to that Bill as it emerged from the select committee will amply prove my statement.

Another point mentioned by the honourable member was that this Bill was most unjustifiable. I would confine myself by saying that this is a very essential measure, rather that it is indispensable seeing the state of things now prevailing and the economic depression which is raging throughout the rural area. The next thing which Mr. Mukand Lal Puri said was that sufficient exemption was already there in the law and there was no need to make any provision to exempt people from certain sort of attachment and other things. If properly examined that statement will be found to be not correct. The only section in the Civil Procedure Code which is relevant to the present case is section 68 which I will read with your permission—

"The Local Government may declare by notification in the local official gazette that in any local area the execution of decrees in cases in which the court has ordered any immovable property to be sold shall be transferred to the Collector...."

This is only in cases of sale and not of attachment. Honourable members may be aware that no rules have been made by the local Government under this section. It is, therefore, more or less a dead letter. No exemption is provided in the Civil Procedure Code as suggested by Mr. Mukand Lal Puri. Then, so far as the rules for exemption from attachment of the agricultural produce is concerned, no rules have so far been made by the local Government or by the High Court on this subject. I may invite the attention of the House to section 61 of the Civil Procedure Code and to section 70 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act and the High Court Rules and Orders, Volume I, Chapter 12-N, 1(b) and (c). Again as to the land which is necessary to be kept enough for the subsistence of the debtor and his family, attention is invited to paragraph 255 of the Land Administration Manual. The word 'enough' has not so far been defined by the local Government or by any other authority. So the law as it stands at present is very vague and it has, therefore, become necessary to codify it in the shape of definite sections, make it more definite and give the rulings on the subject a statutory form. Therefore the contention of Mr. Mukand Lal Puri that there are already many exemptions for the judgment-debtor in the matter of attachment of his property falls to the ground. It is necessary that some sort of provision should be made as no provision has so far been made in the rules under that section.

Another argument which the honourable member for Industries brought forward was that this Bill will spoil the credit of the zamindar and the security of the creditor. It has been argued over and over again that we do not want any credit for the zamindar. As long as there is credit for him he will go on borrowing. He will even mortgage paradise if he can lay his hand upon it as a security of his debts. No less an authority than Mr. Calvert has said in his famous book, "Credit holds up the debtor as the rope holds up a hanged man." I may submit that unless this so-called credit is obviated, we cannot have any sort of amelioration of the financial condition of the zamindar. If he has no security, why should the creditor advance any loan at all to him? The real truth is that money-lending is the most profitable profession in the province. It is even more profitable than investing money in commerce or industry. The money-lender will not leave the debtor unless the latter has taken some loan or other.

The honourable member for Industries also contended, "Why should we feel, so to say, for the interests of the poor debtors. The debtors are wide awake and can look after their own interests much better than anybody else can do." He also contended that if this measure is passed realisation of the loans will become very difficult. Again I will urge the same reply. If realisation is very difficult why should the money-lender advance any loan at all? What is the present condition of the zamindar? The poor tiller of the soil has lost all interest in his business as a zamindar. He has lost all hopes of claiming a single pie as his own. Therefore he is practically giving up the profession of agriculture. When this is the state of affairs, I do not know how realisation is easier now than it will be if this measure is passed. After all the money-lender is dependent on the flesh and blood of the poor debtor and it is in his interest that the poor debtor should be kept alive just as it is the interest of the lion to keep alive the goat and of the hawk to keep alive the partridge. Unless there is somebody to enable you to roll in wealth how can you grow rich? How can you move about in the "Rolls Royce" without our supplying you the means of it? Please allow us zamindars to live. Allow us to remain in a position in which we may be able to feed ourselves and also feed you. This reminds me of a misra—

مگر ہم نہ ہوں تو ناز تمہارے اٹھائے کریں

I think I have sufficiently met the point of Mr. Mukand Lal Puri so far as realisation of loans and the losing of security is concerned. Let not the money-lenders lend us anything. We do not want any loans.

SHORT NOTICE QUESTION AND ANSWER.

TWO PAPERS A DAY IN THE UNIVERSITY EXAMINATION.

Shrimati Lekhwati Jain : Will the Honourable Minister for Education be pleased to state—

- (a) whether Government is aware that the University of the Punjab has decided to hold two papers a day for the degree and intermediate examinations ;
- (b) whether Government is aware that previously also the University decided to do the same but on the agitation of the students had to rescind the same ;
- (c) whether the Government and the University authorities have received various protests against this decision ;
- (d) whether it is a fact that meetings have been held protesting against this decision of the University ;
- (e) whether it has been represented to the Government that the practice of holding two papers a day in the months of April and May will entail great hardship on the examinees and put them to great inconvenience ;
- (f) what action Government proposes to take in the matter ?

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon : (a) Not officially but it appears from the papers that this is so.

(b) No. Government understands that rescinding of the previous orders was due to the fact that it was felt that the students had not received sufficient notice.

(c) Yes, so far as the Government is concerned. Government has no information in regard to the university.

(d) Government has no information beyond what has appeared in the Press.

(e) Government is aware that the proposed change is not welcomed by some of the students.

(f) The honourable member is aware that when she did not move her adjournment motion Government promised to draw the attention of the

[Hon. Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon.]

Vice-Chancellor to the representation, though it must not be assumed that Government disapprove of the change. Since then this has been done. It may also be pointed out for the honourable member's information that the matter rests entirely in the hands of the Syndicate which consists of 17 members of whom 9 are non-official. With all the goodwill in the world it is not possible for Government to interfere in this matter. The proper course for the honourable member is to move some member of the Syndicate to raise the matter again.

THE PUNJAB DEBTORS' PROTECTION BILL.

Mr. President : The Council will now resume discussion on the motion of Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram that the Punjab Debtors' Protection Bill as reported by the select committee be taken into consideration.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan (Ambala division North-East, Muhammadan, Rural): I rise to support the motion under discussion. A good deal has been said by the party on my left as to the misery to which the money-lenders will be put and other matters. I need not go into them as they have been answered. But I want to put one observation before the House and that is that we must make an attempt to save the zamindars from utter ruin and collapse. If the facts which I give prove that the zamindar is on the brink of a collapse, I think all members should support this measure. My friends on this side have quoted Mr. Darling and really he is the chief authority on indebtedness. They have quoted only figures and facts without mentioning the conclusions which he has drawn from those facts. It now remains for me to state the conclusions. In 1922 Mr. Darling estimated that the zamindars owed a debt of 85 crores. Then in 1929 he again made an estimate and found that the zamindars owed a debt of 135 crores. Then in 1934 he again made an estimate and found that the zamindars owed a debt of 200 crores. From this he drew various conclusions which I will state now. He says that the interest on this amount at 20 per cent. per annum comes to Rs. 40 crores, that is about 13 times the land revenue which is about 3½ crores. The plain conclusion of this is that when the zamindars cannot pay 26th part of this, being one instalment, how can he pay 26 times as big a sum as the land revenue. They can never possibly pay. Look at this in another way. Suppose the zamindars were to make an attempt to pay off their debt by selling all the land that they possess, then let us see how it would work. The area of the land cultivated in the Punjab is roughly 3 crores of acres and if the zamindars sold all that land the amount of debt per acre would come to Rs. 67. It can very well be shown that the whole of the agricultural body is not under debt, for there are many agriculturists who are themselves money-lenders and as Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram showed the other day, more than half the number of money-lenders are agriculturists. Therefore taking a rough calculation that half the land belongs to those men who do not owe any debt or who are money-lenders, there remain only 1½ crores of acres of land and on this basis the debt would be Rs. 134 per acre. Now the average price per acre in the market, taking the figures for Lyallpur, is Rs. 100 per acre. Therefore even if the whole of the land of the debtors is sold, it will not pay off the debt. Even in that case much of the debt of the zamindar will remain unpaid. Now let us take the question of interest. The interest on this amount at 20 per cent. as I have said before comes to 40 crores of rupees every year. Now he made a calculation of the average holding, taking the figures for Lyallpur, and it is about 12½ acres per landholder and the income from this comes to Rs. 87 per annum to the owner if he cultivates with his own hand; but if he does not, giving to the tenant at half rate of batai, his share comes to Rs. 43. Now, the amount of debt per owner has been estimated to be Rs. 600 per annum on which interest comes to Rs. 120, whereas his income is only Rs. 87. Therefore even if he pays out all that he gets from his land, he would not be paying the interest and even in respect of interest Rs. 33 is outstanding each year. So in that way even if the whole of the income of the owners who are under debt is paid away, it will not meet the interest charges. Still this figure is an average figure and we know that in practice even much higher rates are charged. On an average a tenant owes a debt of Rs. 200 and the interest at the rate of Rs. 20 per annum comes to Rs. 40, whereas his income is only Rs. 43 and Rs. 3 is not at all sufficient even for the seed. Therefore even if the tenants and owners who are under debt pay the whole income which they get from the land throughout the year, it will not be sufficient to meet the charges of interest alone. Therefore the principal would remain where it is. It cannot be said, let this principal be hanging on and the money-lenders will not press for payment of the debts. Even after the Act which we passed last year there have been so many arrests and detentions in civil prisons as my honourable friend from Gujranwala, who is not now here, told us yesterday. He said that in a number of cases men were sent to prison even after the passing of that Act. If this further relief is not afforded to them, imagine the condition of the debtors. Now an attempt was made on this side to show that the zamindar is merely making a hue and cry for nothing, but probably the calculations which I have now given were not present in their minds and so they raised so many objections. Let them now pause for a moment and consider these facts coolly and calmly and then they can realize that if the agriculturists who are debtors were to be saved from utter ruin and collapse, the present Bill is most necessary and essential and this fact I hope the members on the front benches will also note. If they do not make an attempt to save the zamindar from utter collapse and ruin, they will find the whole administration coming to a miserable end. Without the zamindar being in a good condition, the Government cannot go on. This is the crying need of the hour and if we do not pass this Bill the zamindar will not be there, in the Punjab, at least. If anything, my estimates err on the side of under-estimate and they are by no means an over-estimate. Further these figures are for 1934 and by this time the amount of debt must have increased a lot more. If these figures are right, then it is the duty of every honourable member of this House, not only the zamindar members but also the other non-zamindar members, to support such measures as this Bill. We should not be sorry indeed that we have given this help to the zamindar. Indeed there is no help for it. If these figures are to be taken into consideration, then there is no other way to save the zamindar.

[Ch. Allah Dad Khan.]

As for the other arguments which have been quoted by my friends on this side, some answer has already been given. As I understand the honourable member, Mr. Mukerji, he said there is nothing new about this Act except the reduction of the limitation period of decrees to six years and the giving of powers to the collector.

Rai Bahadur Mr. P. Mukerji : I did not say so, Sir.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan : I noted very carefully what he said.

Mr. President : When the honourable member denies having made a statement, he should be believed.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan : Without mentioning his name I say that this is a new argument which is only a new feature of the opinions about this Act. The period of six years is not so very bad for money-lenders. During the 12 years the decree becomes old and people think that there is a long time ahead and they do not make any serious effort to recover it and if the period is shortened, they will make greater efforts and realize their amount. The zamindars will pay whatever they can within these six years. What is the use of harassing zamindars for 12 long years? Another reason why this period is necessary is that decree holders have been doing things with a vengeance during the twelve years. They have brought execution on such occasions as the marriage of the daughter of the debtor; when he is engaged in the reception of the party, the warrant of attachment is brought in. Such improper scenes should be put a stop to and if we cannot altogether stop it then we must make the period shorter. Then comes the question of giving this power to the collector which is not an unwholesome provision. Perhaps the honourable member is not aware that when a man makes a report he reports recklessly and puts everything in without undergoing much trouble or effort in verifying his facts. But when a man has to pass a final order, there is a sense of responsibility weighing upon him and he weighs his words and considers more carefully than when he makes the report. Thus the deputy commissioners will take greater care and exhibit greater sense of responsibility than they have shown hitherto if these powers are given to them. Now what happens is this. The deputy commissioner has to report. He does not care very much and takes a great deal of time in making his report; besides, there are many deputy commissioners who pass on a report to some subordinate officer who I know it from my own experience is a tahsildar or a naib-tahsildar and the deputy commissioner does not care very much to scrutinise it, but if this work is to be done by him, he will know that now the entire responsibility is on his head and if he passes a wrong order it will probably injure the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor and so he must weigh both the sides very carefully and bring more care and caution to bear on the matter. This provision therefore should be welcome. The deputy commissioner, as is well-known, is a senior officer and he will do much better than a junior sub-judge in the matter of execution of decrees. If you do not exclude senior sub-judges who have been long in service the junior sub-judges should surely be excluded who will pass very incorrect orders. The arguments against this view hold no water and the National Reform Party should accept this suggestion, because it is useful. Then the other question is the question of credit. They have spoken repeatedly on the question of the loss of credit. I do not understand how credit would suffer. As pointed out by honourable members on these benches, if the money-lenders are honest, they should have no fear. If anything, the loss of credit would be a loss to the zamindars and not to the money-lenders. Why should the representatives of money-lending interests be more anxious to extend the credit of the zamindars. If the zamindars do not deserve such trust let them withhold it. This reminds me of the story of the jackal which was once aimed at by a shikari. The jackal said to the shikari, "Do not kill me, for as soon as you kill me the world will come to an end." At first the shikari really thought that there may be something in this jackal, he may be a supernatural creature, but then he said alright let us see the day of judgment and accordingly shot the jackal down. When he was dying and there was no sign of the day of judgment arriving the shikari asked the jackal where was the end of the world and why it had not arrived. The jackal answered the end of the world for him had arrived and passed away. Similarly when loss of credit and harm to the people is talked of by the passing of these measures, I believe what is meant is the harm to these money-lenders more than to the debtors. Money can do hundred and one things. If money-lending is not profitable then turn to something else. Many of the money-lenders are turning to better things and more profitable things. Money-lending after all is a passive job. It makes money-lenders do nothing. He simply enjoys the fruits of another man's labour and undoubtedly a money-lender is a parasite and if not all of them, many of them are very bad parasites. Moneyed people are now turning their head to other things. Our late Chief Justice, Sir Shadi Lal, has started a number of factories which are working very well and our Minister for Local Self-Government has started factories. These are examples of moneyed people taking to more profitable professions.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : I am not a money-lender, nor is the late Chief Justice, Sir Shadi Lal.

Mr. President : The honourable member will please speak to the motion.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan : I am giving an example, that if a man has money he will take to so many things and if the Honourable Minister does not like my mentioning him, I will take another man's case. Everybody knows that if they stop money-lending, they can do many other things, and more profitable things. But a zamindar cannot live without money and cannot live a care-free life. If therefore a man cannot live an honest and respectable life, it is better for him to die than to have the debt hanging always on his head. What is the existence of a debtor? It is most miserable. He has no honour, no peace of mind and every time he has the fear of his creditor before his mind. It is better to spend less and deny many comforts of life than incur such a heavy debt which spoils one's life. So this loss of credit will be an advantage both to the zamindar as well as to the money-lender. If zamindars once make it a habit not to borrow money, I think everything will be well with them. They need only curtail some extravagances in which they indulge only because of being able to get cheap credit and easy credit on occasions of marriage of their sons or daughters. This stopping of his credit will do him more good than many social reformers can do with their lectures and talks. What lectures have not done, the loss of credit will do and it is not a disadvantage. If obstacles are placed in the way of passing of this Act, I think it will be bad both for the money-lenders and the debtors. The sooner this Act is passed the better it is. If the zamindars are well off, or at least living an honourable life, they can pay whatever little they can. I think this is to the advantage of the money-lenders. With these words I support the measure under consideration.

Rai Bahadur Lala Sewak Ram (Multan division, non-Muhammadan, Rural): The law point in the Bill has been fully thrashed out by such an able lawyer as my friend on my left and he has shown to the Council what a defective piece of legislation this would be if it is passed into an Act. My friend from Rohtak is a lawyer of some eminence and he understands what is a good law and what is a bad law, after hearing my friend on the left, I am sure he would have realized the correct nature of this law. I am not going into the defects of this Bill now, for, whatever I had to say about this I said last time when I spoke on it and whatever else I have to say I will say when the Bill is taken into consideration clause by clause. My friend from Rohtak has appealed to the Government and to our party, to this party and that party to somehow pass this Bill. When a person has a weak case, he generally goes from door to door begging for mercy. That is the exact position in which my friend from Rohtak stands. Having a weak case he implores the Hindu Sabha group and Sikh party. What is this? If you have a good law which is useful to everybody come out with your arguments. Why appeal to the mercy of the Hindu Sabha group or the Government? As regards his appeal to the Government I wish to say something. The British Government in this country is out to do justice, even-handed justice, to all the subjects of His Majesty who are under their charge. It is said so in the great Proclamation of Queen Victoria the good that even-handed justice will be given to all her subjects and it has been so given ever since 1858 when the Proclamation was made. Now, what do we see in this province? Ever since the second Council under the Montford Reforms, we find that minorities are being oppressed in every possible way. Why are they being oppressed? I should like to ask this of the Government. Is it that Government wants always to see the fun by trying to put one community against the other? If so, is it not sufficiently satisfied with the fun for the last 12 years? In the first Council this Council was not at all communal, in the second half of the second Council communalism began to appear and ever since this has been increasing. I hold the Government responsible for communalism in this province which has been going on for the last 12 years.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : Do you really ?

Rai Bahadur Lala Sewak Ram : If this Bill is passed that will be clear proof that Government are partial and they want to oppress the minorities. Now you know it very well and the lawyers that are sitting on Government benches, like the learned Legal Remembrancer and the Honourable Minister for Education and others who know law will tell you, that the passing of this Bill will only mean oppressing the minorities. What will happen? The minorities oppressed in one way will try to achieve their point in other ways. I should say here that those whom you wish to oppress in this manner possess better brains than their oppressors and it is their brains that have stood them in good stead for a long time through all the attempts at oppression; what have the Land Alienation Act, the Regulation of Accounts Act, and lately the Relief of Indebtedness Act done? This Bill is like its predecessors, though it will remain a dead letter, as it is a useless kind of measure. Have you been able to kill the minority, have you been able to kill the money-lender? I do not think that by this measure you will be able to kill those whom you want to kill. The blame for this will lie at the door of the Government that they have encouraged the majority, that is, the zamindar party with whom they are in clique and have helped the measure on its way to the statute book. If they succeed what the result will be we can very well guess. After all, how long can oppression succeed? The day will come when the oppressed will also have their turn. I do not wish to offer any threat, but I only wish to bring to the notice of Government that the blame lies at them alone for offering this encouragement. The Government have lent their support for all the retrograde measures of this kind in the past and I would request Government not to join their hands any longer in this unholy business. In passing this Bill they are surely trying to oppress the communities which are already suffering under other disabilities and such oppression will always have evil results on the Government. I also appeal to Government in the name of justice, in the name of the Proclamation of the Great Queen, that enactments of this nature should not be allowed to be passed. Otherwise what will happen is, tang amad bajang amad. That will be the inevitable result if one community is oppressed for long. I do not wish to go into the details of this Bill for there will be plenty of time for that later, but I will resume my seat after once more requesting Government to be just and fair to the minority community whose destiny is placed in their charge at this moment and to be fair to everyone.

Chaudhri Ram Sarup (North-West Rohtak, non-Muhammadan, Rural) (Urdu): I hope I shall be excused if I say that the speeches so far made by the opposition and particularly the speech made by the lady member were all meaningless. The honourable the lady member freely indulged in taunts in her speech and said with all the force that she could command that this Bill, introduced by the honourable member from Rohtak, was in fact intended to wipe out all debts due to the sahukars. I really fail to understand the attitude and the mentality of the lady member and others who are of her way of thinking. There is nowhere provided in this Bill that debtors will be at liberty to refuse to pay their debts. Of course it is true that this Bill is intended to stop the dishonest money-lenders from continuing to get back Rs. 50 while they advanced only one rupee and so on. This Bill will not in future allow such money-lenders to suck the blood of the poor zamindars nor will it allow them to get fat at their cost. It will not be denied that there are sahukars in this province and the number of such sahukars is pretty large who have been indulging in corrupt practices and who have managed to grow so rich and also so fat that if one were to have a look at them from some distance, one is likely to mistake them for mounts. It is to extirpate such money-lenders that this Bill is intended to be placed on the statute book. It is not at all the intention of the Bill nor is it the intention of the mover and supporters of the Bill that the recovery of the reasonable amounts of loans should be made impossible. Therefore the honest money-lenders need have no fears. Their interests are quite safe. As I have said before, we are, of course, not prepared to tolerate the existence of the dishonest money-lenders and it is for that reason that deputy commissioners are being empowered to forfeit the licence of such money-lenders even after they have once obtained a licence to deal in money-lending.

A storm of opposition has been raised against the provision in this Bill exempting ancestral property from attachment. I wonder why so much hue and cry has been raised against this provision. It is not a thing which may be called out of the ordinary. The law already permits a man to dispose of his property not inherited by him in any way he likes. He can disinherit his own sons so far as that property is concerned and if now it has been considered proper to give a similar right to the sons to refuse to pay the debts incurred by their fathers to lead a life of luxury, I do not see any reasons why we should oppose such a right being given to them. It is one of the salutary provisions and we must, therefore, welcome it.

The honourable the lady member has been pleased to say that many zamindars have either themselves gone to England or have sent their sons to England for education borrowing money from the sahukars and it is not just that such zamindars or their sons should now refuse to pay that money which was advanced to them at the hour of need. But it is wrong to say that. At any rate it is an exaggerated view of the thing. There may be one or two such cases in the whole of the Punjab, but I can give any number of instances of men, who were either themselves money-lenders and who were the sons or relations of money-lenders, who have gone to England and have squandered money originally belonging to the zamindars and snatched by them by fair or foul means. It is, therefore, clear that it is another flimsy argument which the honourable lady member has advanced and we should not give any weight to it. Similarly we should give no weight to the argument advanced by the honourable nominated member from Amritsar who has said that this Bill and other similar legislations have adversely affected the trade of the province. I ask the honourable member, where was that trade going on which has been adversely affected? There is already so much slump in the markets and all trade and business are practically at a standstill for the last so many years for other causes which have world-wide effect. This Bill and other similar measures have certainly nothing to do with this slump. For similar reasons there are few employments to be found in these days and if that is so, it is not because this Bill has been brought forward before the Council. It will be foolish to attribute to this Bill or other measures of this nature the present economic condition as it will be foolish for a zamindar, whose buffalo happens to fall ill, to say that that buffalo has fallen ill because it has been contemplated to place this Bill on the statute book.

Effort has been made to create a sort of fear in our minds by saying that if this Bill is passed, the poor zamindars will not be able to obtain any help from the money-lenders and consequently they will not be able to do the work of tilling the soil. It has also been said that eventually they will begin to starve. I wonder at their solicitude for the welfare of the zamindars for whom they have never uttered one good word even in their most unguarded moments. I ask since when they have come to cherish such feelings for the zamindars and have begun to feel for them like that. Through you, Sir, I may tell these honourable members who are opposing this Bill on this ground that the zamindars produce so much of wheat and cotton every year and, therefore, they have got plenty to eat and cover their bodies with and these are the dire necessities of life which must be provided to enable a man to keep his body and soul together. And these zamindars have got in plenty as I have already said. Therefore the honourable members need have no worries on that ground. I know that in fact they are worrying for themselves and not for the zamindars and this sympathy for the zamindars is only a garb to give vent to their innermost feelings. They know that if this Bill is passed, the sahuksars whom they represent here, will not be able to get fat at the cost of the zamindars as before.

These honourable members have also accused the Government for supporting this Bill. I fail to understand why the Government should be so accused for doing its duty. Is it not the duty of the Government to stop corruption wherever it finds corruption going on? It is not a secret that many of the sahuksars are very corrupt and if the Government has thought fit to put a stop to their corrupt practices by extending its support to this Bill, it has only done its duty. Therefore these honourable members are not at all justified in accusing the Government for its attitude towards this Bill. With these words I give my whole-hearted support to this Bill.

Lala Bhagat Ram (Jullundur-cum-Ludhiana, non-Muhammadan, Rural) (Urdu): This Bill, if I may say so, is being supported and allowed to grow and assume the form of a billa (he-cat) so that it may easily swallow the meek, well-behaved and peace-loving sahuksars as well as the poor zamindars who may be likened to sparrows. I am inclined to think that a sort of conspiracy has been hatched to cut at the root of money-lending business and to destroy the money-lenders who are very useful members of the society and who have been always helping the zamindar in his hour of need. These sahuksars might have looked for support from the zamindars, but the zamindars are simple and unsophisticated and they are being led to believe that this Bill and other similar measures are sure to bring prosperity to them. These poor fellows do not know that a net is being laid for them and that the big landlords are anxiously waiting for an opportunity like the crocodiles to devour them. These big landlords certainly desire that the coast should be made clear for them and it is for that reason that the registration of money-lenders is being made compulsory. I am also inclined to think that these measures are being introduced in view of the impending elections when these members who are supporting such measures will be able to say to the voters that they had done this and that for them in the Council and that on that ground they alone deserve their votes. In short these are propaganda measures to deceive the ignorant masses.

As an argument in support of this Bill it has been said that the number of creditors in the province does not exceed forty thousand and if by sacrificing them, we can save 2½ crores of debtors from misery and starvation, we should not hesitate to do so. I ask the honourable member from Rohtak who is so very fond of advancing this argument whether this is the only way in which he can bring about an uplift amongst the zamindars. Has he exhausted all other means to bring about their salvation? If he really loves the zamindars and if he does not hate other communities, he ought to have searched for other means to achieve this end. What I really cannot understand is his feelings of so much hatred for the sahkars and the community to which the majority of these sahkars belong. Unfortunately, as I should say, this community happens to be peace-loving by nature and its nobility of character is being attributed to its cowardice. Otherwise the honourable mover of this Bill could not have the courage to openly suggest that the zamindars must be saved even if 40 thousand sahkars go to dogs in the attempt at saving the zamindars. If he is so bold and so courageous, why has he never suggested that the handful of Europeans should not be permitted to rule over us? If he had done that he knows that he would have been hauled up before a court of law under section 124, Indian Penal Code, or some such other section or at any rate his movements would have begun to be watched by the Criminal Investigation Department. He has advocated the destruction of the sahkars because he knows that he can do so with impunity. Some of us have begun to feel that this nobility of character of the Hindus is becoming the cause of our ruin. We are dragged in and harm is done to our interest in every affair even if we may have no concern at all with it. If the Shahidganj trouble began, the Hindus were boycotted although it was a matter between the Muslims and the Sikhs and if the trouble about a piece of land has arisen at Jhabbal, the Hindus are advised to suffer although they have got a decree of the highest court in the province in their favour and against the Sikhs, the other contending party but the Sikhs forcibly lay fields desolate. For how long do you expect the Hindus to continue to suffer at every step? For God's sake do not tax their patience and do not compel them to change their present peace-loving habits.

Yesterday in the course of debate an honourable member was pleased to say that the zamindars were honest and that they had paid back their debts even in some cases where those debts had become time-barred. I admit that there are some zamindars who are honest and who would always like to pay back the money taken by them on loan. I know from my own experience that some zamindars are so honest that on their creditors suggesting to them that their debts should be written off because they were not in a position to pay those debts, they have not agreed to that suggestion and have pleaded that for them and for the sake of their children they should be spared that ignominy. I have known zamindars saying that if they will not pay the debts incurred by them, their sons will pay for them. But this Bill and other similar measures will certainly have a very bad effect on the will to pay of even the honest and solvent debtors. This Bill will in a way encourage people to be dishonest and to be cheats. Who knows that this vice may not become very common and eventually a menace for the Government? The Government, therefore, must pause and consider before it blesses this Bill. We must also take into consideration that this Bill will prove a great handicap for the poor weavers and the chamars and the like. At present when these classes of labourers can get a loan of Rs. 10 or Rs. 20, they manage to earn a living for them. A weaver goes to a sahu-kar and obtains from him say Rs. 10 on the promise to return it as soon as the cloth, for which he must have the yarn and other necessary things, is ready and is sold. On that promise he gets a loan of money he requires and returns the same of course with some interest and also saves something by way of his labour from the bargain. Similarly a chamar goes and gets loan for purchasing leather for preparing shoes and gets some gain out of the bargain. But after this Bill is passed, these poor labourers, as I should call them will not be able to get loan and will most likely starve and curse those who are responsible for sponsoring this Bill. I say that in considering this Bill we must not forget such people who equally deserve our sympathy and protection by the Government. It must be also borne in mind that the sahu-kars whom you now hate so much have been your saviours. They have helped you at times when the question of your honour was involved and they have rendered that financial help by denying to themselves even full meals and by walking bare-footed in the streets. I ask, is this the reward you propose to give them? Does it behove the zamindars who have been helped by the sahu-kars at every step to treat the latter like that? If you insist on passing this Bill you will be doing injustice to your own benefactors. I ask if under such circumstances the peasants, I mean the small holders, will not starve and will be able to get seeds to sow their crops. By passing this Bill into law you would encourage the dishonest debtor to evade payment of his debts. This Bill may benefit Khan Bahadurs or Sardar Bahadurs but it is not going to benefit the poorer classes of the province. As you know, it is an article of faith with the Sikhs, Muhammadans and Hindus that they should pay back the money borrowed by them from others. When this is so, I wonder why this Bill is being sponsored so enthusiastically.

I do not like to discuss the provisions of the Bill at length but would confine my remarks to its certain objectionable features. The word "trader" includes all business men but I do not see any reason why cattle dealer is left out of it. Moreover it has been provided in this Bill that no execution proceedings shall be initiated or continued after six years have elapsed since the decree was passed. At present the money-lenders refrain from taking steps to have their decrees executed against the agriculturist debtors only because they know and realise that the zamindars have fallen on evil days. But by means of this Bill you want to persuade them to have their decrees executed without any further delay. Do you think that in this way matters will improve? Not the least. It will further straiten the relations of the zamindars and the money-lenders. Another provision of the Bill is that whenever a civil court orders attachment and temporary alienation of agricultural land in execution of a decree, the execution proceedings should be transferred to the collector. In my opinion a sub-judge is as good an officer as the collector. The latter is already very busy and as such will not be able to give much time to execution proceedings. The appellants will have to undergo a great inconvenience in going to the commissioner's head-quarter in order to prefer appeals. I for one consider this provision to be absolutely useless. You have further provided that ancestral land in the hands of an heir shall not be liable to attachment in execution of a decree relating to a debt incurred by his predecessor in interest. It means that temporary alienation of land for a period of twenty years will not be possible.

[L. Bhagat Ram.]

But my objection is, why do you resort to indirect methods? Why not provide that the old debts should be entirely wiped off? Under the existing law you cannot attach the house and the agricultural implements of a zamindar judgement-debtor and if the ancestral land in the hands of an heir shall not be liable to attachment in execution of a decree relating to a debt incurred by his predecessor, it means that you will not be able to proceed against the agriculturist debtor in any way and the rulings already in existence on the point shall cease to have effect. You have further provided in the Bill that the burden of proving that any consideration entered in a bond or promissory note or in any other document, actually passed shall be on the creditor. It is against the present practice. When a document has been executed not by the creditor but by somebody else and it has been signed by the debtor, I do not see any reason why the burden of proving that the consideration has actually passed should be on the creditor.

One thing more and I shall have done. It has been provided in the Bill that the collector in each district shall maintain a register of licensed money-lenders in his district. Obviously this provision will be a source of great trouble. Supposing a friend or a relation of a money-lender registered in Kangra comes from Jhang or Gujranwala to borrow some money from the latter. The latter will not be in a position to lend money to the former unless he gets himself registered in Jhang or Gujranwala as the case may be. I therefore submit that is a useless provision. It is further provided in this Bill that trees and standing crops with the exception of sugarcane and cotton crops shall not be liable to attachment. Here also I do not see any reason why two important crops, that is sugarcane and cotton, have been excepted from the operation of the Bill. These crops are the paying crops and if the zamindar ceases to sow these crops I fail to understand how he will fare in these days of acute depression. In the end I would submit that the Bill if passed into law will seriously hamper the trade and business of the province. You have already shut the doors of government service against the money-lending classes and you have also debarred them from purchasing lands under the Punjab Land Alienation Act. Now you intend to ruin their business. I ask, how will they be able to keep their soul and body together? Kindly take mercy on them. With these words I close my remarks and quote the following verse which suits the occasion.

مجھ پہ تاکید پہ تاکید کہ فریاد نہ کر

Chaudhri Bansi Lal (Lahore city, non-Muhammadan, Urban) (Punjabi): The Bill introduced by Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram aims at ruining the money-lending business in the province. Supposing a zamindar's cattle die and he comes to a sabukar for borrowing money. The latter will, if this Bill is passed into law, refuse to lend money to the former. I ask, how in that case will the zamindar be able to carry on his work without cattle? Another very stringent provision made in this Bill is that the collector in each district will be required to maintain a register of licensed money-lenders. Only the registered money-lenders will be allowed to carry on their business. It will seriously harm the credit of the country. One having no credit commands no respect (hear, hear). You are creating hardships for the money-lenders but you leave big zamindars free to swallow up small land-holders. The law should be such that those people who get loans should be made to pay and those who give loans should be made to receive them back with a reasonable amount of interest. It should be made impossible for the debtors not to pay their liabilities and it should also be made impossible for the money-lenders to charge more than their just dues. At present if a sahuکار advances a loan of Rs. 100 to a zamindar he charges Rs. 200 after a year and Rs. 300 after two years and Rs. 400 after three years. This is very unfair and should be remedied. Then the illiterate persons have to affix their thumb impressions on the account books of sahuکارs in place of their signatures. By this practice much deceiving becomes possible. A law should be made that the sum of interest should in no case exceed the sum actually borrowed. If the loan is of hundred rupees the total amount payable including the interest should in no case exceed Rs. 200. (An honourable member: Such a law has already been passed). Then, another evil is that if the house of a debtor is to be attached and its price is Rs. 10,000 the sahuکار attaches it for only Rs. 500. Some steps should be taken to stop such sort of misdoings on the part of the sahuکارs.

Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan (Jullundur, Muhamadan, Rural.) (Urdu): Before I say anything with regard to the Bill under consideration I would like to thank Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram Sahib for the wholesome measure which he has brought before the Council for the protection of the debtors as well as for the safety of the money-lenders. This reverend and pious gentleman deserves to be heartily congratulated for the initiative which he took in moving a measure which will certainly promote good will and good feelings among the various classes of the people who lend or borrow. I sincerely feel that a measure like the one at present under consideration is very necessary in the interest of the peace and tranquillity of this province. He also deserves all praise for the manner in which he has most tolerantly withstood the personal attacks made on him by the critics of this Bill.

After making these remarks which I felt in duty bound to make, I proceed with the real issue before the House. First of all we must see how far this Bill relates to sahuکارs. The Hindu benches are labouring under a very serious mistake and it is that they think that this Bill is mainly meant for them, and its application will prove detrimental to their interests alone. Chaudhri Sahib is a Jat by caste and amongst the Jats there are many persons who carry on the profession of money-lending. No such consideration that Jats are also money-lenders entered his heart when he framed this Bill or when he moved this Bill in the Council. Not only are there Jat money-lenders but there are money-lenders who belong to all castes whether Muslim, Hindu or Sikh. This Bill will affect them all equally and not particularly the Hindu money-lenders. Money-lenders who are honest in their dealings need not fear the provisions of this Bill. They will in no way harm their interests. It will only have the effect of making it impossible for the dishonest money-lenders to practise deceit in their dealings with the poor zamindars. The Hindu benches are much perturbed at this Bill and this shows that there is something wrong on that side which is the cause of this perturbation. Why are not the other classes of people upset by this Bill?

[Ch. Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan.]

They also carry on the profession of money-lending. Why are the Hindus alone disturbed at the prospect of this Bill's passing into law? You will forgive me if I say, that their conscience is not clear and in their heart of hearts they know that this Bill will form an effective check on their dishonest dealings. Let me assure them that they will also derive much benefit if this Bill became an Act. At present when the debts of zamindars become too excessive on account of the fraudulent dealings of the sahukars they become exasperated. Often they kill sahukars or at least give them a sound beating. There have been cases in which noses of sahukars are cut by the desperate debtors. This law will make the sahukars honest and in this way give them protection from the desperate debtors. The debtors become desperate only when by deceit and fraud their debts are made so excessive that their payment becomes impossible. This Bill is beneficial for the Hindus also but a Punjabi proverb—is too true in their case. The sahukars become rich by the earnings of the zamindars. They get higher education and build palacial buildings with the money which they squeeze out of the zamindars by dishonest methods. Their sons after receiving higher education become members of the legislatures and by their influence protect the interests of the money-lenders. A money-lender always starts his profession by first going to a village and establishing a small shop of oil and salt there. He treats politely all the people of the village and especially the lambardar. He often goes out of his way to please the lambardar. Whenever he has to go out to the town he regularly calls at the house of the lambardars and enquires whether anything is needed to be brought from the town. The lambardar asks him to bring for him a few cheap things from the town. He brings them and the lambardar is pleased. Then slowly and slowly he begins to be dishonest with the lambardar by charging more price for the things which he so often brings for him from the city. By being submissive and flattering he wins the confidence of the lambardar and then he begins to use his influence in dealing with the rest of the people of the village. By and by he wins the respect of all. The villagers begin to trust him and he on his part begins to fleece them. He gets everything from them and they, poor fellows, remain under the impression that the sahukar is a very sympathetic gentleman. This continues for some time and then suddenly all awaken to their loss and find that they are in the grip of the sahukars.

Then, we all know that in our country money does not come from foreign countries as a return for any manufactured articles. We have not got any industries with the exception of agriculture. We send out agricultural produce and in return get money from other countries. This money first comes into the hands of the zamindars but then slowly and slowly passes into the hands of the money-lenders. We have been losing the fruits of our labour in this way. But now we have realized that sahukars without spending their time or labour take away our earnings. This realization has resulted in the Bill which is before the House now or in similar other Bills which have already been passed into law. The representatives of the money-lenders say that this law will work a great hardship on them but they little realize that it is very necessary to save 2 crores, thirty-three lakhs zamindars amongst whom are included Sikhs, Hindus and Muslims alike, from the clutches of 40,000 money-lenders. It matters little even if any harm comes to the sahukars who are few as compared with the zamindars, because it will help the zamindar who is more useful for the country. Income-tax is not assessed on incomes which are below Rs. 1,000 a year. This concession is given because it is thought that an income of Rs. 1,000 a year is barely sufficient for the maintenance of a person. But the money-lenders do not agree to leave anything for the maintenance of the family of a debtor. If other Hindu members have criticised this Bill I do not mind it but I am really sorry to find that even Shrimati Lekhwati Jain who belongs to a religion which enjoins on its followers not to kill any living being, has also criticised this Bill. This means that although she believes that no living being should be killed she wants to kill a zamindar population of 23,500,000. The Jains put on a bandage on their mouths so that no germ or insect may be killed, but she has made a speech in opposition of this Bill with the same mouth to kill a very large number of human beings. Although she has shown much verbal sympathy for the zamindars indirectly she has not spared them. It is exactly like saying

پنچان دا آکھیا سر متی نے پر پونالہ اوتیے دا اوتیے

The sahukars do not keep their accounts like honest businessmen. When a zamindar requires debt the sahukar takes his thumb-impression on his bahi, but when he goes to pay it he does not give him any receipt for the loan returned. When a zamindar pays his debt by instalments he is not given receipts for the instalments paid. Whenever the question of squaring up accounts comes and the zamindar tells him that he has paid so much in cash and so much in the form of so many maunds of wheat the sahukar simply says that he has not received anything from him for there is no record of it in his account book. The unsophisticated zamindar feels himself at a loss to give him any reply and silently leaves him. This process continues for a few years and then suddenly the sahukar brings a suit against him in a civil court and obtains a decree against him. Sometimes a zamindar goes to a sahukar and asks him to give him sugar worth 4 annas. The sahukar weighs some sugar, gives it to the zamindar and asks him to affix his thumb-impression on his bahi for a rupee. The zamindar without knowing whether he is affixing his thumb-impression for a loan of a rupee or four hundred rupees affixes his thumb-impression and goes away. He only comes to know of it when he is sued in a court of law for the loan due from him. Sometimes it so happens, that a zamindar while passing from a bazar meets a few people. One of them who is a money-lender calls him and tells him that he wants to purchase a buffalo from such and such person and that he may also kindly affix his thumb-impression as a witness. The zamindar extends his hand and the sahukar affixes his thumb-impression on a deed about which the former does not know anything. In village Garhi, tahsil Nawanshahr, a zamindar once stole some melons from the field of Lala Ram Rattan. The thief was caught and brought before him. He was asked to pay the penalty or he would be taken to the police station. The thief had no money to offer, so he was taken to the police station. While the thief was on his way to the thana, he entreated Lala Ram Rattan that he should not be taken there and he would pay him whatever he demanded. On reaching home the Lala asked him to write a pronote for seventy rupees. The zamindar executed a deed. He could not pay that amount or interest on it. After three years he was made to execute a deed. At last, the Lala obtained a decree against him for Rs. 700 and realized that amount from that poor zamindar. Many such instances can be quoted to show how the sahumkars fraudulently make poor people execute the deeds.

The zamindars take loans in two ways from the sahumkars. One is by offering agricultural produce in return for things which they buy from them. When the zamindars takes corn to the sahumkar, he buys from him at the rate of  $1\frac{1}{2}$  maund a rupee, if the usual rate is 1 maund a rupee. While weighing he shows one maund as thirty seers. If thirty seers cost one rupee, he tells him twelve annas. As the zamindar is quite innocent and illiterate, he accepts the statement of the sahumkars. The zamindar does not take that sum from him, because he wants to buy certain things from the sahumkar. Suppose he wants to buy sugar from him. If the sugar is selling at the rate of 10 seers a rupee, he gives him  $7\frac{1}{2}$  seers, and while weighing he gives him 6 seers instead of 7 seers. Thus, for a rupee he gives him only eight annas. The second way in which the zamindar takes a loan is by buying eatables from the sahumkar. The zamindar does not pay him anything. He sells an article of food at the rate of 20 seers a rupee which is being sold one rupee a maund. The sahumkar enters all these things in his bahi, but he enters in the account of the zamindar many things like salt, oil, and sugar, etc., which he never bought from him. At the end of the year, the sahumkar makes his calculations and if the total is a hundred rupees, he shows four hundred rupees plus interest to the zamindar and gets his signature on his bahi. When the zamindar goes to the sahumkar to buy things, he asks him to sign his name under the articles he has bought. The zamindar is so simple that he does not bother to see what is written; he turns his head to one side and blindly puts his signature or thumb-mark. The writers of deeds (wasiqas) are usually in league with the sahumkars. They write whatever the sahumkar says. The zamindar in his satisfaction that he has got the things which he required, gladly puts his signature on a deed. The sahumkar usually gets a deed executed for a very high sum.

Now I will tell you how the sahumkar gets back his loan. When the time of pressing cane-juice comes, the sahumkar goes to the zamindar's field and leaves there his own man for the preparation of gur and shukkar. He takes his own vessel also for measuring the juice. Usually this work of measuring the juice is done by the raabia of the sahumkar whom he leaves behind him. The raabia shows much less measurements than the actual number of vessels. This number is generally written by the sahumkar's man, but as the sons of the zamindar have received some education, this work is now done by them. Therefore, the raabia, cannot do much harm to the zamindar and he cannot show less vessels. But he is very cunning and sly. He tries another trick. He quarrels with the zamindar and takes up that measuring vessel and strikes it hard on the balance and weights. As that vessel is made of a thin brass sheet, it is easily bent and the vessel becomes small in size and begins to measure less.

Thus the measurements go on decreasing and the juice ultimately becomes less by many maunds.

The other method is that the sahuکار goes and gets grain from his debtor. If the rate of corn is one maund, a rupee, he gets at the rate of 1½ maund a rupee. This is called the sahuکار's rate. When the corn is weighed, on every occasion he fraudulently weighs nearly 2½ seers more. When the whole corn is weighed, he takes along with him some cattle also of the zamindar which are due to him in payment of his debt. The price is settled between the sahuکار and the zamindar. When the sahuکار takes these things home, the zamindar goes to him to get a receipt for them. The sahuکار refuses to give any receipt and says that these things were taken in lieu of the debt owed to him by his father and grand-father. The poor zamindar goes to the police station and to the court, but nobody listens to him, as he does not possess any receipt. In this way the poor zamindars are exploited and looted. They are often made to write false pronotes. I would request that a small committee consisting of the representatives of the zamindars and sahuکارs to go with me. I will show them how the poor zamindars are robbed and deprived of their little money. Then alone it will be possible to save the zamindars from utter ruin. May God bless my honourable friend Chaudhri Chhotu Ram who feels so much for the poor zamindars. He has very kindly brought forward this Bill to help them. The sahuکارs do not show as much pity towards them as do thieves and robbers.

Again, reference has been made to that clause of this Bill which provides some maintenance for the judgment-debtor and his family. According to the existing law also some land is exempted from attachment for the benefit of the judgment-debtor and his family. But the difference in the two enactments is this. According to the old provision the sub-judge sends the papers to the deputy commissioner. The deputy commissioner sends the papers to the office of the tahsildar. That office passes on those papers to the kanungo. The sahuکارs offer some bribe to the kanungo and persuade him to report that the zamindar has some other means of livelihood. He takes out the cattle of other people for grazing and he does some labour. The kanungo submits a report to this effect. The zamindar is not at all consulted in the matter or informed of it. His whole land is quietly attached. For instance, there is a gujjar in village Burj Phambarian in tahsil Nawanshahr, named Nabia. Lala Durga Das got his land attached and he got this attachment effected through the girdawar by offering him a bribe. The girdawar reported that the gujjar looks after the cattle of other people and easily makes his living. But the truth is that for the last seven generations no member of his family has looked after the cattle of anybody. He is an old man. His land has been attached: he cannot do anything and he cannot get even food. The sahuکارs oppose this part of the Bill because formerly they could offer bribes and get land attached. But now that this matter will go to the deputy commissioner, they will not be able to do so. I think even if this Bill is passed the case of the zamindars will remain the same as that of a jatti in an old story. A khatri used to go to a jatti to buy ghee from her. He used to take his own weights which were heavier than their actual weight. When the khatri weighed ghee, he weighed 15 seers as 10 seers. The jatti became much surprised, so she brought her own weights. But the weight of ghee remained the same. The khatri said to the jatti

[Ch. Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan.]

4 P.M. that she may change the weights a thousand times but whose hands will she bring to bring about the desired change. Similarly, Chaudhri Chhotu Ram may take as much pains as he likes to make laws to help the zamindars out of their financial difficulties but so long as the courts are crowded by the members of money-lending classes these laws will be of no use to them. We all know that members of money-lending classes have a vast majority among collectors, munsifs and civil judges. Therefore, zamindars have no hope of justice from these courts.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit : On a point of order. May I enquire what part of the Bill the honourable member is discussing ?

Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan : I will now come to the question of temporary alienation of land belonging to the judgment-debtor. In this connection I want to point out that sahkars adopt harassing tactics to secure the alienation of lands belonging to their debtors and try to deceive the courts as well as the poor debtors. I have already referred to the case of one Nabia Gujjar whose land was temporarily alienated. Now when it is proposed that the existing law should be so changed that the person concerned should be produced before a collector the representatives of the crafty money-lenders naturally feel uneasy as they know full well that such devices which they could adopt in the past will be of no avail in the court of the responsible collector.

It is necessary that the standing crops should be exempted from attachment. Under the present rules the creditors have the power of ruining the poor agriculturists. Recently in the village Barnala Khurd in my ilaqa the standing crops of a person were attached. Rains set in and the whole crop was destroyed. Though afterwards the crop was released on appeal, it was of no practical value to the zamindar whose crop was already destroyed on account of rains. Therefore, the Government should lend its support to the proposal of exempting the standing crops from attachment. In this connection I have to make one more complaint. Under the present circumstances the sahkars not only secure the attachment of the standing crops belonging to their debtors but also of those which belong to the relatives of their debtors. It is necessary, therefore, that this practice should be entirely stopped. I intended to draw the attention of this honourable House to various other important points but as my friends urge that attendance on our benches has become larger and we should let the matter be put to the vote of the House, I shall resume my seat after making just one submission more. (Laughter).

It is essential that attachment of standing trees should be prohibited by law. We all know that standing trees are a great asset of the cultivator. He uses them in several ways. His agricultural implements like the plough, yoke, body of the persian wheel are all made up of wood and as the poor zamindar cannot afford to buy wood in the market he has to fall back on his trees. If you order that his standing trees should be attached he will not be able to get agricultural implements and therefore he will be subjected to severe hardship. Then the rafters of his house come from his trees. Moreover, this roof of wood does not last long and he has to renew it after every four or five years. If his trees are attached he will not be able to build his houses. Even if a zamindar purchases a modern steel persian wheel he has to provide a wooden installing apparatus for it. So the Government will do well to lend their support to the provision exempting the standing trees belonging to the agriculturists from attachment.

So far as the provision for the maintenance of the agriculturist judgment-debtor is concerned I want to point out that even at the time of assessing income-tax the minimum income of Rs. 1,000 is taken into consideration. Why should you not make a similar allowance in the case of the zamindar too?

Need I point out that the zamindar in this province is the sustainer of all. The sahuikars, the vakils, the barristers, the doctors and people like Shrimati Lekhwati Jain all eat out of the zamindar's earnings. But it is very unfortunate that they should come here and oppose his reasonable demands and even do not let the Government help him. The Government should know that it is the zamindars alone who have not so far started any agitation against it. All other people have tried their best to uproot the Government but the zamindar has not only remained loyal throughout, but he is a strong fortification for the government. The zamindar is not only the backbone of the Government but he is also the backbone of society in this country. Therefore, all should join hands to devise means for bettering his condition.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit (Hoshiarpur, non-Muhammadian, Rural) : I regret the tone of this debate. I think this was a debate in which the honourable members should have taken part after keeping themselves quite cool and calm but the discredit of initiating a debate and a tone of this nature must go to the honourable member who introduced the measure and supported it by attacking a certain section of this House. If we carefully consider the debate and the various points put by all the speakers we will find that the real question has not been discussed at all. The point for the consideration of the honourable members of this House and especially of the Government is that the Bill in one part deals with the execution of decrees. It is only the question of the execution of the decree, with which we are dealing, that is, the question of a person who has obtained a decree after having satisfied all the harsh provisions of the Usurious Loans Act and the Regulation of Accounts Act and other legislations of a similar nature. When a decree has been given to a decree-holder the question is whether he shall be permitted to realise the fruits of the decree. You may say all sorts of hard things about the sahuikar or the creditor. These facts are tried by the courts and when after the trial of these points of usurious interests, etc., a decree is passed in favour of a decree-holder, are you then justified in enacting a law which practically deprives the decree-holder of the fruits of his decree? This is the point which the Government should consider and which the honourable members of this Council should have considered whatever hard or bad things they may have said about the sahuikars or the creditors or the money-lenders. This Bill is really an attempt on the part of the judgment-debtors to deprive the persons who have got a decree after spending lot of money and time in courts to deprive them of the fruits of the decree. If therefore you carefully go through the provisions of the Bill you see that there is no justice, no legality, no equity behind most of the provisions of this Bill. This is one part of the Bill to which I will request the honourable members to address themselves. The other part of the Bill deals with the registration of money-lenders and the penalties that the money-lenders shall have to pay if they do not get themselves registered. These are the two main points which the Bill has under consideration. I will take up the question of the registration of money-lenders first. The question of registration of money-lenders was taken up by the Legislative Assembly in 1923. Mr. Muhammad Yamin moved a Bill for the registration of money-lenders in the Legislative Assembly in 1923. The Government of India invited the opinions of all the provincial Governments with regard to the registration of money-lenders. The ultimate conclusion arrived at by the Government of India was that the task was an impossible one, not only was it impossible but it was really cutting at the root of rural economy. That was the opinion of the Government as expressed in the Legislative Assembly in 1923. For the benefit of the honourable members who have cut jokes at the expense of the money-lenders or have abused them, I will quote this very important passage which occurs in the speech of Mr. P. B. Haigh who gave a reply on behalf of the Government when this Bill was considered by that august chamber in 1923.

This is what was stated there—

The question of registration of money-lenders was one of the questions specifically considered by the Government of India prior to the legislation that attended the Bill of 1918. All local Governments were then consulted on the matter, and with your permission, Sir, I shall read the replies of some of the local Governments on this subject. They were all unanimous that the definitions of the terms 'money-lender' and the registration of money-lenders were practically unworkable. The Government of Madras reported—

The registration of money-lenders would be a formidable and almost impossible undertaking and would be so far from complete as to be useless. Nor does the Governor in Council consider that any useful results would be produced by compelling money-lenders to keep accounts or give receipts from counterfoil receipt books.

The Bombay Government said—

The problem of dealing with money-lenders in England is totally different from that of dealing with them in this Presidency, and arguments from the success of the money-lenders Act in England are in the view of the Governor in Council full of danger. In England a small and fairly well defined class of professional lenders catering for a comparatively small class of borrowers has been taken under control without difficulty and without interfering with or unsettling the whole of the credit system of the country. In India practically everyone with a little money in hand lends it out, and the agriculturist who has saved a few rupees is often quite as rapacious as any sahuکار. Registration of money-lenders would represent enormous difficulties in India and in fact may be said at once to be impracticable. Even to arrive at a satisfactory definition of 'money-lender' would be a hopeless task.

The Burma Government—but I will not read, Sir, any more of the opinions in detail,—was of the same opinion. The Central Provinces Government was of the same opinion. The Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces thought that "all ideas of registering money-lenders, insisting on their keeping books and the like are quite out of the question."

That was the opinion of the various Governments and the Government of India. Then with regard to rural economy, he says—

Now I ask the House to consider the amount of oppression and extortion that that sort of thing might lead to. The whole result would be to interfere to a very great extent with the money-lending system of the country, and I would ask honourable members to remember as no doubt they will remember, that, whatever hard things may be said against money-lenders as a class or individuals in particular, the fact remains that the money-lender is one of the most useful members of society in this country. The honourable members say : " Question " ! But how is a vast agricultural country, especially in those tracts where the ryotwari system is prevalent, how is it to be carried on at all if money is not available for agriculturist ? Agriculture cannot be carried on without borrowed capital. The honourable member says : " co-operative societies ! " How many co-operative societies are there as yet in this country ? Does he not realise that co-operative money-lending, in spite of the great strides that it has made is still in its infancy, and that, if we were to strike a blow at the common system of lending money in this country, the result would be disastrous ? "

That was the opinion of the Legislative Assembly and the Bill was rejected on the motion of Government and was not even permitted to be taken into consideration. So strong, so well-founded, so unanimous was the opinion of the provincial Governments that the Government of India had to bow before it.

In 1925 the question of the registration of money-lenders was taken up in this Council. A Bill was moved by Mr. Maqbul Mahmood in the Council and it was stated then on behalf of the honourable members who were our predecessors here that that was really a Muslim measure and it was fully supported by statements which had appeared in the Muslim press. I do not want to repeat what was then stated by me but I then urged that it was really an effort on the part of the Muslim members of this Council to cut at the root of lending money on interest. And the honourable member who has just sat down whose speech was cheered by the Muhammadan members said that the question of interest should be dealt with in such a way that nobody should be able to lend money on interest in the future. That was a clear indication in the speech of not only the honourable member who preceded me, but other honourable members who had spoken with a feeling of heart. Undoubtedly there is a conflict of civilisation on this point. On the one hand you have got the Muslim civilisation which regards the lending of money as a very baneful thing. In the sacred books of the Hindus it has been laid down on the other hand that a person should not live in a village, in a place where there is no sahuakar. That has been laid down and it has been repeated, not by me in the debate of 1925 but by Chaudhri Ram Singh, a Rajput who represented the rural district of Kangra. He quoted chapter and verse to show that according to the Hindu religious books a place is not worth living in which there is no sahuakar, that is to say where there is no person to whom you can go at the time of your need and ask him for help and take a loan. There is, as I have submitted, a conflict of interest and therefore I can well sympathise with those of my friends who would like to see the rules of their religion enacted in one form or another. But they ought not to forget that there are undoubtedly other communities living in this province with different ideas with regard to interest and lending of money. And as they would be the ruling community in the new constitution they must take into consideration not only the feelings but the necessities of the other community. No doubt the honourable member who just sat down stated that the Government should not take into consideration the forty thousand people who live in this province and who are money-lenders but that those forty thousand should be sacrificed in order to please the majority. Those were the words used by the honourable member who sat down, those were the words used by Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan in regard to another debate. Those were the words used by Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Ohhotu Ram who voiced the feelings of the Anjuman Himayat-i-Islam, and the supporters of that body. The question is whether this House is going to give its adherence to a principle of this nature. Is not the Governor in the future constitution made the protector of the interests of the minorities? Are not the communities here charged with the duty of protecting the interests of the minorities? These are some of the points which I would very respectfully place before those honourable members who have been day in and day out crying for the blood of money-lenders. Whatever the honourable member, Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram, might say with regard to his views, his views are not shared by the people who live in his own district. There are hundreds and thousands of Jats and Rajputs who have taken to money-lending. This is proved by facts and figures. There are only twenty thousand money-lenders who belong to non-agricultural tribes while another twenty thousand belong to agricultural tribes. And with your permission, Sir, I will here quote for your satisfaction and for the satisfaction of Government and other members who should know that the views of Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram are not representative of the views of his community. Because in districts where the Hindu Jat predominates or where the Rajput predominates money is lent and taken from these people who are called agriculturists and who belong to agricultural tribes. At page 229 of Mr. Darling's book, 1925 edition, this is what he states—

Large sums, amounting sometimes to Rs. 50,000 or more, have been brought back from Australia and America by returned emigrants; many Indian officers came home from the War with two or three years pay in their pockets; many, too, of those who stayed at home, for the most part the larger holders, have been enriched by high prices. When a pucca house has been built, land has been bought and a wife decked with jewellery, what remains will be given out on loan. A retired soldier known to the writer, during 18 years' military service, saved Rs. 600, but four years of lending it out were sufficient to double it. Wherever, therefore, there are returned emigrants, ex-officers or large holders, who are not Muhammadans, the agriculturist money-lender will be found; and in these areas the whole mortgage debt is rapidly passing into his hands. The most prominent type is the Sikh Jat of the Central Punjab, who has some of the canny business flair of the lowland Scot. Round Jullundur he has already ousted the sahukar, and in Amritsar, Ludhiana and Hoshiarpur he meets him on almost equal terms. In the south the Hindu Jat of Rohtak " (my Rohtak friend has fled away) " a district full of ex-officers, runs him close, and—

Khan Sahib Chaudhri Riasat Ali: On a point of order. Is the honourable member in order in reading page after page? It was ruled only yesterday by you that references in the shape of quotations from books could only be made to the extent of a sentence or a few sentences to strengthen one's arguments. We are not here to listen to what is being preached to us from revealed or other books. I want your ruling to the extent to which these quotations are relevant.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit: I quote from no revealed book. My honourable friend is in the habit of getting up when the points made go home. I may be allowed to continue. Mr. Darling says :—

In the south the Hindu Jat of Rohtak, a district full of ex-officers, runs him close and here and there even the Muhammadan Jat is finding ways of squaring the precepts of religion with claims of business.—The Punjab Peasant in Prosperity and Debt: 1925 edn.

Now, the point really is this, that it is not only the non-agriculturist who takes to money-lending but it is the agriculturist discharged soldier and officer and other classes of people who are now resorting to it. Consider for a moment what would be the fate of a person who has got say Rs. 5,000, in a village where he is liable to attack by dacoits, murderers and thieves. It has already been pointed out that in India there are no banking facilities which are to be found in England, America and in other advanced countries. I challenge my honourable friends to prove that the number of banks or co-operative societies which exist in this province could be resorted to by those who have got money in their pocket. It is a very important point which must be taken into consideration.

Then there is another point which my honourable friends have not taken into consideration. The question here is, as was pointed out in the debate in the Legislative Assembly which took place in 1925 by the Member on behalf of Government opposing the proposal to register money-lenders, that in India almost everyone is a money-lender in one shape or another, at one time or another. A widow, a minor who has got left to him a certain amount of money, a sick person, a person incapacitated by physical infirmity—even these are the people who lend money in order to earn a little interest in order to sustain their livelihood. After all, what are they going to do? Take the case of 50 per cent. of the population of the province, I mean the non-agricultural tribes who cannot buy land because they are interdicted, cannot become Government officials because Government cannot provide opportunities for Government service for all people. What are these people going to do in the circumstances. If you take away even this very salutary and very wholesome provision which they have got at their disposal to get a little income, you would be really destroying the whole class. The State is a protector of the people and must make provision for their sick, for their unemployed, for the widows. If the State is unable to do that, why should the State be a party to a measure which one gentleman here called communistic but which I would term bolshevik. It is clearly a bolshevik principle which you are going to introduce by measures of the kind which are under contemplation here. Kindly consider the penalties that you impose. The penalties with regard to the registration of money-lenders are given in clauses 16 to 20. Clause 16 reads—

A money-lender who violates any rule made under this Act, shall, on conviction before the Collector, be liable to a fine not exceeding Rs. 1,000 and to the removal of his name from the register of money-lenders for such period as the Collector thinks fit.

Provided that the Collector shall pass no order against the money-lender under this section without giving him an opportunity of being heard and of producing such evidence as he may wish to produce.

Then in clause 20, the honourable mover asks the Council to accept this—

No claim for the recovery of a debt advanced after the date on which the provisions of this Act in regard to the licensing of money-lenders come into force shall be entertained by any court if that debt was advanced by a money-lender while his name was not borne on the register of licensed money-lenders.

Kindly consider the effect of these two clauses on the whole credit system of this country. The credit system of this country would be entirely upset and there would be great injustice and great hardship. It is very easy for you to say, do away with money-lending, do away with the credit system of the country, but you do not take into account the feelings which the ordinary poor man has at the time of his need. Take the case of a person who lives in a village. His son is very seriously ill or his wife is dying. He has no medicine in his house and he has no money. Where is he to get a doctor from? He needs a doctor but the doctor would not come unless he is paid at once. What is he to do? He has no money, the only thing he has is his land. He sells his land outright. But what is he going to live on after that land is sold? No less a person than Chaudhri Bansi Lal stated and stated very rightly: "You do not take into consideration the feelings of the suppressed or depressed classes who form more than 20 lakhs or 25 lakhs of the population of this country, and who are treated as pariahs, who have nothing to fall back on at the time of their need, who are not permitted to build houses in their villages, who are not permitted to own land." That representative of the depressed classes pleaded that such a thing should not be permitted by the honourable members who ought to have the interests of all the communities at heart. That is a thing which should not be permitted and you should take into consideration the views, the feelings, the desires and the needs of all the people living in this province. After all, you are not legislating for the 40,000 money-lenders whom you have in view, you are legislating for the whole of the province, for classes of various kinds who live in the province who have their needs to be satisfied and who cannot at the time of need go to a bank or a co-operative society because the banks and the co-operative societies have harsh rules in some cases which cannot be accepted by men of this nature. You know these facts. How, then, in the face of these facts can you possibly say all these hard things which you have said with regard to the money-lenders? I am one of those who believe that there are any number of money-lenders who are shylocks. For such shylocks we have no sympathy. By all means kill and crush them, but this Bill will not kill or crush them. It is impossible to crush the shylock money-lender by this Bill. On the other hand, you will have shylocks who, if this Bill is passed into an Act, will take away the land, the houses and every kind of property from the borrower who falls into their clutches and these people will come from the class to whom the honourable mover of the Bill belongs. This would be the class which at the time of need of the borrower would rather have the land and the house of the person who stands in need than look to his need. They will say, "We cannot afford to lend, you need money. Are you prepared to sell your land to me? If you are prepared then I will lend you the money." And the land will be sold outright without getting full consideration of its value. You know that very well. The courts have gone into this question and they have found that at the time of need the man has parted with his property and his land at the time of the sickness of his child or the sickness of his wife or at the time of demand for payment of land revenue. These things are not going to help you one bit. You are not going to put money into the pockets of these people by passing this Bill and you are not distributing the wealth equitably or equally. That is entirely a wrong view of things, if you think that by passing this Bill Raja Narendra Nath, Rai Bahadur Sewak Ram or the honourable members who adorn the benches on the other side of the House will have their land equally distributed between the various sections of society and they would be able to satisfy their needs and the Government of land revenue. These things would not be possible even if this Bill is passed. Therefore you must take into consideration these very great hardships that are likely to result if the clauses of this Bill pertaining to the registration of money-lenders and the penalties imposed or the other provisions of the Bill are passed.

The honourable Chaudhri Sahib when he was making his speech quoted the Honourable Judges of the High Court and said that the Honourable Judges of the High Court are in favour of this Bill. That is entirely a misconstruction of the opinions of the learned Judges of the High Court. In order to see if his statement was correct I took care to go through those opinions. Here is what one Judge of the High Court says—

I am all in favour of granting protection to tillers of the soil against unscrupulous money lenders but other debtors do not need any such protection.

Here is another learned Judge. He says—

The provisions of the Bill seem to be much too wide and to go beyond what should be really necessary to meet the object in view.

Here are two other Judges—

We agree with Rangilal, J. Further we are unable to agree to the transfer of the power of the trial courts to the Collectors as is contemplated by section 3 and are opposed to the rest of the Bill as going too far.

There is only one opinion quite completely against these opinions, and having read these opinions my considered opinion is that the Judges are not prepared to support the Bill as it stands except one Judge, and if that is considered to be an opinion in favour of the Bill by the High Court Judges I do not know what opinion can be against it.

My honourable friend Mr. Puri yesterday read out the opinions of the Commissioners and I understand that several European gentlemen who have taken no sides either this way or that have condemned this Bill which has been brought forward. I listened very carefully to the analysis of the opinions made by Chaudhri Chhotu Ram in his speech yesterday, and that clearly showed that the opinion about the Bill is sharply divided. It cannot be said that the opinion has ranged on only one side or on the side of Chaudhri Sahib. It is sharply divided. It is undoubtedly a class measure. It is undoubtedly a communal measure. It is undoubtedly a measure which creates, which will create and which is undoubtedly bound to create hatred between the classes of the people who live in the province. Does Chaudhri Sahib not know that in this province murders of money-lenders have been frequent of late? And he has been a propagandist against the money-lenders not only in his own district to which his activities were confined sometime ago, but now he thinks it his duty to go out into the far and distant districts and preach against the money-lenders. This inciting the people to hatred against this class, I submit, should not be permitted by Government to go on for any length of time. After all a Government is the protector of all the people whatever the hue or colour of the Government may be, whether it is Sikh, Muslim or Hindu, or whether it is black, white or yellow. It is its duty to maintain law and order and to give security and confidence to all sections of people. These measures which the Chaudhri Sahib has been bringing forward from time to time are merely (as he has confessed) intended to be an election propaganda. If he succeeds he will put down his success to his activity in regard to the measures he is bringing forward and if he does not succeed he can say that he did his best but that his case was spoil by a certain section of the party or the Government. His bread is buttered both ways. He definitely stated that the masses are in favour of the Bill. Of course the masses are illiterate and ignorant. You can incite them to do anything. I could incite them into crime and murder and violence. I challenge my friend to get me permission and to-morrow he will see that I could incite the masses to murder and violence. What are they after all? They are an ignorant mass of illiterate people. If you tell them that by passing this Bill you will be distributing wealth equally, they will cheer you up. The masses cannot read the Bill, they cannot understand the laws, they cannot see what is good and what is bad, they cannot tell the implications of such measures. The masses can be led by any man who has the cleverness to lead them or mislead them. Therefore taking the argument advanced by the lady member the honourable Chaudhri Chhotu Ram was very happy that the masses were in support of this Bill. I submit that he is entirely wrong. If the true picture of the measure is presented to them, if they are told that it would be impossible for them to get a pie from the money-lender at the time of their need, the masses would give their votes against Chaudhri Sahib. (Interruptions). I may tell you that he and I have tried this once before. When he was a Minister he went to Hoshiarpur district and went from place to place and the electors of that place—the agriculturists and the voters—placed their confidence in me as opposed to the man whom Chaudhri Chhotu Ram was supporting. (An honourable member: They were deceived). Chaudhri Chhotu Ram with all his paraphernalia of Ministership was there to remove the suspicion afterwards. When Chaudhri Sahib went to Hoshiarpur and wanted to preach his doctrines against the money-lenders, that is, against the non-agriculturists, the verdict was given in my constituency when the fight was over and the battle remained with me. I say it with pride because I did to the very best of my ability present to them the issues of the Money-lenders Bill of Mr. Maqbul Mahmud which was one of the very burning issues of that day. The fight remained with me, and I challenge my friend Chaudhri Sahib to come with me to a place where neither of us has gone before and let the matter be decided by the vote of that place. I am prepared to accept the challenge. That is the real position. The position is that you must give the correct facts. Of course, you know that in this Council he has the backing of a landlord class which is not representative of the tillers of the soil. The honourable mover of the Bill knows it very well that it is the biggest landlord class which is represented here. Here is a man who owns thousands of acres. Here is Khan Bahadur Mian Muhammad Hayat Qureshi who is a very big landlord, one of the biggest, and I have got the courage and the wisdom and the honesty to say that the Bill is not going to benefit the poor population. The block that is supporting this Bill is a block which represents large landed classes and I say it without any fear of contradiction. It is a section of society which always at the time of its need borrows money, purchases land, but when the time comes for payment it is not prepared to make the payment. It is the section of society which has grown fat on the earnings of the sahukar, which has purchased land after land by taking money, but when the time for payment comes it has no money and being agriculturists its land cannot be attached. We require protection. I appeal to your sense of fairness. Are you going to protect the person who borrows

Rs. 10,000 or Rs. 25,000 and purchases a piece of land ? He purchases three, four or five squares of land and in his hand that land becomes ancestral. (An honourable member : No). Evidently the honourable member has not read the Bill carefully. Under the Punjab Land Alienation Act the creditor cannot get possession of the land even though he may have secured a decree from the courts. Under these circumstances what is he to do ? He will have only to lose his money even after securing a decree at so much cost. Is that a fair proposition, is that an honourable proposition, is it a proposition that any man with decency will give support to ? I put this question to honourable members on the other side. If they have got any decent reply to give I shall be glad of it because it will give me food for consideration. Instead of that if they have got nothing but abuse for the sahukar, that would be no reply at all. I ask, are you going to protect a debtor of this kind who grows fat at the cost of the poor money-lender and when the time comes for repayment pleads one clause or the other of the Land Alienation Act or of this Bill ? What then is the position of a society which gives its sanction to such broad day robbery and loot, because that is what this amounts to ? I ask the honourable mover of this Bill and his party to consider these points very carefully, because they should not give exhibition of what the new reforms are going to be. Their course of action at this time will be proof of what the future constitution (where the reins of Government will be held by these people) is going to be and whether the other communities are going to enjoy their well-earned income. By all means get some measure by which the unscrupulous money-lenders are brought to book. The House has passed not one measure but many measures to circumvent the doings of men of this kind. But it has not been able to circumvent the shylocks, the dishonest persons. Dishonest persons will continue to exist in spite of what this Council may do. But by merely introducing measures of this kind or by putting a premium on dishonesty you are not going to put a premium on honesty.

Now, I shall turn to that part of the Bill which deals with the execution of decrees. One honourable member, I think it was the Sikh member from the Lyallpur Rural constituency (Sardar Sampuran Singh) more than once said, "Why are you crying unnecessarily ? What is new that we are now enacting which is not already on the statute book ?" I do not know whether the honourable member is simple minded or whether it is a sort of veil which he wants to put in the eyes of people. Either he has not read the Bill or he wants to throw dust in the eyes of people. But he must remember that some people can see even if dust is thrown in their eyes. If he really believes that there is nothing new in this Bill why should this measure of codification of the existing law, as he calls it be brought before the Council ? It is said that the law already exists, but we must make it clearer. I submit that the law exists nowhere. Every provision in the Bill is new and revolutionary. I am sure if the Government is sensible it will never agree to this measure. The Government must take note of the fact that this Bill does not deal with dishonest money-lenders but with creditors who have got a decree from the courts. Their accounts are thoroughly scrutinised, their records are carefully examined by the courts under the various laws, such as the Usurious Loans Act, the Relief of Indebtedness Act, the Punjab Regulation of Accounts Act and so on and after spending a lot of money by way of court expenses they get a decree from the court. The present measure says "do not allow such a decree to be executed; do not allow these creditors to enjoy the benefits of their decrees." I appeal to honourable members to see whether such a thing will be tolerated in any civilised country. I can understand the honourable mover of the Bill getting up and saying, "Well, these men are not trustworthy, their deeds and the pages of their account books are dishonestly prepared and not to be relied upon." I can understand him saying that these creditors had undue influence with the debtors and got them put in their signature or thumb-impression on any documents which these creditors placed before them. I can also understand him saying that these creditors got the signatures of the debtors under the influence of drink. I can understand all those things. But after these creditors have gone through all the ordeals of examination in a court of law and obtained a decree from the courts in their favour, is it fair for the Government or even for the Chaudhri Sahib to ask this Council to be a party to a legislation of this nature which says that after undergoing all the troubles, the creditors will not be permitted to enjoy the fruits of their decrees? Take for example, the clause which deals with ancestral property, standing crops and so on. These are two clauses which can be taken up together. These clauses exclude ancestral property, and properly includes immovable property like houses, lands, &c., and movable property like ornaments, utensils and so on.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : I think the House will prefer to go into the details of the clauses when they actually come up for consideration.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit : I have a right to say all these things to show that the present measure does not want to permit the creditor to enjoy the fruits of his decree.

Mr. President : The motion before the House is that the Punjab Debtors' Protection Bill, as reported by the select committee, be taken into consideration. Thus it is the whole Bill that is under discussion and not its individual clauses. The clauses will be discussed after the motion for consideration of the Bill is adopted by the Council. The honourable members are entitled, no doubt, to refer to clauses by way of illustration, when necessary; but at this stage the clauses of the Bill should not be discussed in detail. So, I would request the honourable member not to go beyond the motion under discussion.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit : I shall not go beyond the motion. In fact I will not go into the clauses in detail. I shall take them as a whole and examine how they stand. As a matter of fact several members on the other side referred to the various clauses of the Bill in order to strengthen their arguments and I was also only strengthening my arguments by reference to the clauses. However, my point is this. If this measure is passed into law, you cannot touch a person's land, his house is free from attachment, his standing crops and trees cannot be touched, his ornaments cannot be touched because they are inherited property and his money also cannot be touched because it can be safely concealed. What is the creditor to do under the circumstances? (An honourable member : What about cattle?) Cattle cannot be attached because it is exempted under section 60. This law puts the tiller of the soil, a poor peasant and Nawab Muhammad Hayat Qureshi a rich landlord on the same level in this respect.

Then, the honourable Sikh Member from Lyallpur, Sardar Sampuran Singh, said that ancestral property cannot be touched even according to the existing law. That is not correct. According to the present law ancestral property can be touched whether movable or immovable. Evidently Sardar Sampuran Singh was very simple to say that the present measure only repeats what has been in existence already. Two very important points were placed before the honourable member by my friend Mr. Mukand Lal Furi to which no reply was given. One point referred to the substitution of the words 'next holder' for the word "heir." This is indeed a very revolutionary change in the Bill. The other relates to section 4 of the 1930 Act. These two points clearly prove that the existing law is being changed in a very revolutionary manner. This Bill is not merely re-enacting the existing law or making clear what is obscure. You are introducing revolutionary changes, not for the benefit of the tiller of the soil in whose name you are swearing, whose interests you profess to protect, but you are attempting to protect the interests of those who own large areas of land and other property.

Another point was also touched by the honourable Sikh member from Lyallpur. He asked, so far as the transfer of decrees from sub-judges to collectors is concerned, why should there be a cry over this provision? The collector already deals with these matters even now and if this power of his is now being recognised by this law why should you make such a noise about it? I am very sorry I have to trace up the history of the debates that had taken place here before. If sub-judges and collectors stand on the same footing, why this noise on the other side? Why do they want to take away the powers of the sub-judge and hand them over to the collector? Honourable members who have been members of this Council during the last ten or twelve years will remember that an impression has gone abroad that so far as sub-judges are concerned they belong to those classes who are called creditor classes and the collectors reflect the feelings of those who belong to the debtor classes. That has been said more than once on the floor of this House and since the introduction of the communal principle in services and even the caste principle, this distinction is being maintained and that is the reason why from sub-judges you are taking away those powers and are giving them to collectors. You must remember and this is the very considered opinion given by many collectors, that we should not set up two rival systems, rival courts, the courts of collectors on the one side and the civil courts on the other. That would be a wrong thing to do. There would always be a conflict of judgments and that would be an entirely wrong thing to do; it should not be permitted. After all, are not collectors people who have got heavy work to do? Various kinds of multifarious duties will have to be performed to consider all these things in a judicious manner. It is impossible to do and even if they do, that would be to the neglect of their other important duties. The benefit of the collector's advice is already there. Why then introduce this change into the system? The reply you have made clear to us and that is that you have no confidence in the working of the courts. That is the thing which we should deprecate and we should not encourage, and Government should be the last body to encourage, such a sort of enactment which throws suspicion on one department and creates confidence in another. If that were the case there would be a very large number of people challenging the honesty of the court. It should not be brought about in the Punjab and under any Government. I would therefore request you not to press such a part of the Bill which strikes at the very root of administration of justice. Then it was said, why should a decree-holder not have the fruit of a decree in six years? Why make it 12 years? Now you are trying to cut down the period of limitation. But those people who have anything to do with the execution of decrees know that there are more dishonest judgment-debtors than there are dishonest decree-holders. Land is attached or house is attached. A person gets up and says, this house belongs to my aunt and has nothing to do with the judgment-debtor. The case is tried and after the finding is given, it goes to appeal, then a second appeal and if the decree is for over Rs. 10,000 it goes to the Privy Council. These are the devices resorted to every day in our courts. Supposing the original decree-holder succeeded another man gets up and says, I am a minor and I have now become 21 years of age and I will bring a suit. This sort of thing goes on year after year and not only one has to spend money in getting a decree passed but even in the execution of it he has to go on spending money. That is the reason why, after taking all these things into consideration, the mentality of the judgment-debtors and other things, the period of limitation was fixed at 12 years. It has existed so long and it has been existing in other provinces. Why single out the Punjab for a revolutionary change of this kind? I do ask the honourable members who have spoken in favour of this Bill to take this fact into consideration, whether you are going to do something for the honest creditor or not. Surely you do not mean to say that all the creditors, the Government servants, the pleaders, the lawyers, the widows, the minors, who lent money are all dishonest persons. Are you going to permit them to realise their money or not? Again, even when all these things have failed, even when the judgment-debtor has not succeeded in all cases, the question of attachment comes in and then the trouble commences. They will say there is no proper proclamation; the advertisement is not done; the price of the land is omitted and so on and so forth. Many a judgment of the Allahabad High Court has laid it down that the troubles of a creditor arise not when he is fighting the case, but when he has obtained the decree and you are not putting a premium on this sort of dishonesty because it is very easy to obstruct the execution of the decree for six years. These are the things of which we should take notice and we should not, in our blind zeal to protect the interests of the so called debtors, be a party to a measure which would perpetrate injustice which would lead to extortion and cruelty of the worst kind. After all we must know that nations prosper by justice. Nations do not prosper by injustice. That is the lesson which I would ask Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram to take to his heart. If he wants that there should be prosperity in this land, he must realise this fact that justice and confidence in the Government is the most essential factor for the prosperity of any country or province.

One word in the end I would say with regard to the members who have spoken from these benches, those people who have represented money-lenders, those people who have spoken on behalf of the creditors. The times are out of joint ; they must organise themselves. It is no use blaming the Government time after time. Government has to yield to the clamour of the majority. Be that Government what it may, if not to-day, to-morrow the Government shall have to yield. In 1925 they might resist a certain measure ; but in 1935 they may have to bow before the clamour of the majority. Government cannot always be accused of doing this or doing that. It is up to the honourable members who have abused, counter-abused, the other side, to get up and go out into villages and organise their community in such a manner that it may be able to stand the attacks which are made from time to time. They must remember this that if wise men unite, they can still rule this province. That is an advice which I would give them. They have neglected their duty in the past. Times are out of joint. I have seen that most of the leaders feel at the time of crisis ; they should rise to the occasion and meet these attacks in a manly manner and not by supplicating either the Government or the majority community.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd (Finance Member) : I think it right that I should indicate very briefly the attitude which Government propose to take with regard to this Bill. The principle of the Bill is the protection of debtors and with that principle I think everybody will admit the Government has shown its practical sympathy in asking this House to pass the Relief of Indebtedness Bill. (Hear, hear). There can be no doubt whatever of Government's sympathy with debtors. That sympathy must be qualified by two main considerations : one is fairness to the creditors and the other is that we must try to ensure that nothing is done which is going to dislocate the credit system to such an extent that the debtors themselves will be injured. Subject to these two considerations Government undoubtedly sympathises with the debtor classes of the province. With these remarks I think I may very briefly indicate what our attitude will be to the particular clauses of the Bill. I do not propose to discuss them in any detail whatever. I think the later stage is the correct stage at which detailed discussion should take place and perhaps in passing I might say that I regret that members have spent so much time in discussing in a general way the clauses of the Bill because I fear that their attention may later on be diverted from the details of each clause. The select committee had to work under very great pressure if they were to get this Bill before the House in time to have it considered in the present session unless the session were to be extended unduly. For this reason we worked at very high pressure indeed and I myself would welcome a careful consideration of each clause. I fear that so much energy has been spent on a general discussion of the Bill, with a general and a fairly detailed discussion of its various clauses, that members will be too tired and too bored to give a proper attention to the individual clauses at the proper time. (Hear, hear).

The first important portion of this Bill is the part which proposes to transfer to collectors the execution of decrees when a temporary alienation of land is to be effected. As has been said several times over already, the practice is already practically as the mover of the Bill wishes to make it. I will not go into any details just now ; but the practice being as it is and there being very considerable advantages in having one agency only to deal with details of execution proceedings, the Government are prepared to support this portion of the Bill, provided certain amendments are introduced. (Hear, hear). I do not know whether it is necessary to indicate what those amendments are, but we cannot lend ourselves to any extension of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act, because Government has already undertaken several times neither to extend nor to whittle down the provisions of that Act. As a matter of fact, I think the honourable mover of the Bill understands the conditions on which Government can support this part of the Bill; so I will not enter into any further details.

With regard to the exemption of standing crops from liability to attachment and sale, I am afraid Government must oppose this part of the Bill. We consider that the agriculturist debtor's crops are already sufficiently protected by the Civil Procedure Code and the Punjab Land Alienation Act. With regard to trees the question is a bit different and if a non-official amendment were moved to replace the present clause by one protecting standing fruit trees making them not liable to sale or attachment apart from the land on which they stand, Government would be prepared to give consideration to it. Actually the Government are considering—I will not say more than this—Government are considering the possibility of amending the Punjab Alienation of Land Act so as to ensure that trees are treated in the same way as land. The only other portion of this Bill which the Government find themselves able to support is the restriction on the period of limitation for execution of decrees from 12 to 6 years and they can only support it provided firstly that it has no retrospective effect and secondly it is assured that the amendment applies only to debtors as defined in the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act. The reason for this second stipulation is that we do not wish to do anything that will put the civil law of the province out of joint with that of the neighbouring provinces. Naturally our business men have dealings with those of Bombay, Madras, Calcutta and all over India and we do not want to have a different civil law in our province from that in other provinces. This we can insure by restricting clause 11 to debtors as defined in the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act. We do not think it possible at present at any rate to introduce any system of registration of money-lenders. That appears to us impracticable. If later on, perhaps two or three years hence, it is proved that in spite of the legislation that has already occurred in the matter of affording relief to debtors, the registration of money-lenders is desirable, that is another matter, but at the present moment we are not convinced that it is practicable or desirable to have any system of registration of money-lenders (hear, hear).

Mr. President : Question is—

That the question be now put.

The motion was carried.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram (South-East Rohtak, non-Muhammadan, Rural) : I shall have to make a fairly long speech in reply to the various criticisms to which this Bill has been subjected by the members representing money-lending interests. In the first instance I wish to make it quite clear that there is no question of the interests of small land-holders or tenants suffering either under the present Bill or under the mentality which is responsible for the introduction of this Bill. A good deal has been said by several members that this Bill has been conceived in a spirit of partiality to big landholders. I fail to find a single word, a single sentence in any clause of this Bill which will have either that effect or which is indicative of any desire of that character. Apart from that I wish to declare from the floor of this House that so far as I am concerned, I am always for the small landholder. I am always for the tenant (hear, hear), and I may also make it clear that the members of my party have always shown a spirit of generosity towards small land holders and tenants. In order to convince my friends, if they are at all inclined to be convinced, I might cite the instance of one of the biggest landholders, perhaps the biggest landlord in my party, namely, Khan Bahadur Nawab Jamal Khan. The instance which I wish to quote goes back to 1924. He is a very big landlord and has a very large number of tenants under him, and yet he was the gentleman who fought for the abolition of Jinsi Batai system (hear, hear). Very few members of this House, perhaps, know that he fought for that iniquitous system to be abolished as soon as it could possibly be done. Apart from that, I may also draw the attention of the House to the fact that when the question of broadening the basis of franchise came to be considered, the members of my party were for as large a broadening of that basis as could possibly be undertaken while opposition came ultimately from those who now say that this Bill has been brought for the exclusive benefit of large landholders.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit : It is entirely wrong.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : Everything is in print. I also wish to explode a myth to which expression has been given from time to time not only on the floor of this House but also in the Press. Raja Narendra Nath was pleased to state and his statement was repeated by one or two other members that this House is dominated by the big landholders and that there is hardly anybody in my party who is either in himself a small landholder or is a true representative of the peasant proprietor. That is a myth which I have tried to explode.

Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath : I used the words "tiller of the soil."

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : I am going to explode it again to-day. What does Raja Sahib think of myself? I am a tiller of the soil so far as my family is concerned. With the exception of my person everybody in my family is engaged in tilling the soil.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : Are you a tiller of the soil yourself?

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : I have a mentality of the man who tills the soil. I am for the protection of the rights of those who have suffered under the tyranny of money-lending interests, interests which have been espoused by the Hindu Sabha section of the House. So far as the actual composition of my party is concerned, perhaps the members of this House will be surprised to learn that 7 out of 8 members from the Ambala division are drawn from peasant proprietor families. Only one member could be described as a big landlord, that is, Rao Bahadur Rao Balbir Singh. All the other 7 belong to peasant proprietor families.

Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath : What is a peasant proprietor ?

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : Raja Sahib has served in the Revenue Department for over 30 years, and he ought to know it without my telling him. Let us now take the case of my Sikh friends. There are 11 agriculturists among the Sikhs. Out of these 11, 8 come from peasant proprietor families, only 3 are big landlords. Take the case of the Jullundur division, what does Raja Narendra Nath or his colleagues of the Hindu Sabha Group think of Chaudhri Afzal Haq ? Is he a big landlord ? What does he think of Pir Akbar Ali ? Is he a big landholder ? What does he think of Chaudhri Abdul Rahman Khan ? What does he think of Kanwar Mamraj Singh who belongs to his own party ?

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : All lawyers and parasites like you and me.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : Does he mean to say that not a single member of agriculturist families should resort to any other profession ? Do you want to monopolise every field of activity to yourselves ?

Mr. President : I will request the honourable members not to interrupt the Rao Bahadur.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : We must contradict him when he makes statements like this and calls himself a tiller of the soil.

Mr. President : If the honourable member has a point of order to raise, he may do so, but he should not interrupt the speech of the honourable member who is speaking.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : I can understand these interruptions. My home truths are so unpalatable to that section of the House. I never said that I was a tiller of the soil in my own person. I made it quite clear that though I myself have never touched the plough, I belong to a family every single member of which tills the soil with his own hands. My brother, my uncle and all my nephews are engaged in the actual pursuit of agriculture (hear, hear). You cannot possibly say that because one single member out of a family of 15 resorts to the profession of law, therefore he ceases to represent the true interests of peasant proprietors or actual cultivators of land. As a matter of fact, what really matters is not the actual birth or the actual calling of a member but the mentality of that member. Here is Pandit Nanak Chand who is never tired of calling himself a zamindar. He even claims to be a statutory agriculturist and yet look at his mentality.

Mr. President : The honourable member will please be impersonal.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : He was personal, and I am only replying to him.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit : I was never personal.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : And not to be sarcastic.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : When I begin to pay the honourable member in his own coin he feels perturbed. I was saying that what really matters is the mentality of the member and not his birth or calling.

So far as mentality is concerned, I have made it perfectly clear that every single member occupying the Unionist benches has the mentality of a person who will protect effectively and safeguard whole-heartedly the interests of peasant proprietors and the interests of the actual tillers of the soil. (Hear, hear). I will also draw the attention of the members of this House to a fact which is either not known generally, or which some people do not care to admit. There are only 2,700 big landholders in the province who pay a land revenue of Rs. 500 or more. As a matter of fact, even these 2,700 include those persons who are in receipt of jagir income of Rs. 500 and more. Perhaps the actual number of those who own land assessed to a land revenue of Rs. 500 or more will be about 2,500. Can anybody say with reason, can anybody say with justice that this province is in any way dominated by big landholders, or that there is a reasonable apprehension of the interests of the cultivating classes being ignored in this province? At least no evidence has been given either in this House or outside the House that even those zamindars who own big areas are in any way anything but sympathetic to the actual tillers of the soil.

I also wish to make a slight reference to the growth of money-lenders among zamindars. The members representing money-lending interests in this House have said that it is impossible to kill the shylock. I admit that it is so. What we are trying to do is to diminish the sphere of his undesirable activities, to reduce, if we can, the amount of harm which he can do to innocent and ignorant people. If that attempt fails we shall be sorry, but we shall certainly be able to claim to have done our duty. If a class of money-lenders, whether of a shylockian type or of any other type, arises among zamindars I will be the first person to seek to deal with it just as effectively as I am trying to deal with the present class of money-lenders. As a matter of fact, neither this Bill nor my own mind seeks to make any distinction whatsoever between a money-lender belonging to one class and a money-lender belonging to another class. There is absolutely nothing in this Bill which seeks to confer any protection to any money-lender of whatever class. There is nothing in this Bill which is aimed exclusively against the members of a particular community or class only. Mr. Darling's book, which is the Bible of some members of this House has been referred to again. I repeat the answer which I made to this very question some time ago. Mr. Darling is not really acquainted with the difference that exists between a zamindar money-lender and a non-zamindar money-lender. Fortunately, the zamindar money-lender has not so far learnt the tricks or succumbed to the lure of the malpractices to which other money-lenders have resorted throughout the ages in this country as well as in others. Therefore no real and legitimate help can be drawn from a casual remark, a misguided remark, an ignorant remark, that fell from the lips of Mr. Darling.

Now I will take a few more typical instances of criticism made against the present Bill. The honourable Raja Narendra Nath suggested that I had ignored the opinions of revenue officers of very high experience. A similar reference was also made by Mr. Mukand Lal Puri and the same reference was taken up by Rai Bahadur Lala Sewak Ram. I am not unaware of the officers to whom they have referred. In my opening speech I deliberately refrained from answering the criticism which was offered by those high revenue officers. As a good deal of reliance has been placed upon the opinions expressed by these very busy and overworked officers, it is my painful duty now to turn my attention to that criticism and to show what value could be attached to that criticism. I will first take up the criticism which was made by the Financial Commissioner, Development. I will just take one sentence from his criticism.

"Section 7 will apparently have the effect of reducing temporary alienation to six years.

I challenge him to read clause 7 again and see whether that section leads to that result. The Financial Commissioner received an opinion from an officer of fairly long experience and he acted upon it. I sympathise with him. He is a hard-worked and a very busy officer, and, thus, cannot be expected to give personal attention to every opinion that he expresses on any particular question. (Interruption). Yes, he says, "apparently." That only means he was not in a position to give his close and personal attention to the meaning of this clause, or to the result which this clause would lead to. I claim that nothing whatever of the kind attributed to this clause will happen as a result of this clause being enacted into law. This one instance ought to suffice to show that high officers are, generally speaking, very busy officers, and cannot find time to study things and express well-considered opinions. They are overworked and cannot be expected to give personal and close attention to everything. Therefore the Financial Commissioner had to depend upon the opinion of somebody else. And that opinion in its turn being wrong, his opinion too was bound to be wrong.

Let me now turn to the opinion expressed by the Registrar of Co-operative Societies upon whose opinion the opinion of the Financial Commissioner, Development, was based. He says :

It is not to be supposed that the supporters of this Bill really believe that it will be accepted by the Government and will go through the Council. Their object appears to be twofold, (1) the usual political manoeuvre to place themselves in the position of benefactors of the rural population, thwarted in their objects by the opposition of Government, (2) by keeping this Bill hanging over the heads of the creditors' community for as long as possible to induce them to compound their existing claims on the zamindars on even more lenient terms than they are prepared to do at present.

The first portion of this paragraph imputes a motive which an officer of Mr. Wace's experience and position should not have attributed either to me or to any other member who was interested in this Bill. If a similar motive had been attributed to another by any member of this House in his speech he would have been called to order. The attribution of such a motive is both uncharitable and unparliamentary. Again, I did my level best to have this Bill passed into law as early as possible. I made the request to the Honourable Finance Member that this Bill might, if possible, be passed during the last budget session. But he insisted that the Bill being of a controversial nature ought to be circulated for the purpose of eliciting public opinion. Therefore my second comment on opinion expressed by the Registrar of Co-operative Societies is that his opinion is not only uncharitable but also entirely inaccurate.

Again, he says :

In regard to section 3 of the Bill I would note that the Civil Procedure Code already contains provisions (in sections 68 and 70) empowering Government to make rules to the same effect as is contemplated in the present section.

Here again my answer to the criticism is that the officer was probably too deeply pre-occupied with his own departmental questions to come to a right conclusion. He did not study sections 68 to 71 of the Civil Procedure Code, with sufficient care. If he had paid sufficient care to the substance of those sections he would have learnt that section 68 is in terms confined to cases in which the immoveable property of a judgment debtor could be sold. Now the landed property of a member of a statutory agricultural tribe cannot be sold in execution of decrees and, therefore, so far as the members of agricultural tribes are concerned, they could not possibly have been covered by section 68 of the Civil Procedure Code. Therefore this criticism is entirely wrong. Again, Mr. Wace says :—

“Sub-section (3) of the section, however, introduces new matter making it obligatory to exempt from temporary alienation such portion of the agricultural land belonging to an agriculturist judgment-debtor as is sufficient for maintenance of himself and his family.”

Here, again, the Registrar was not probably aware of Standing Order No. 64. The Financial Commissioners' Standing Order No. 64 lays down that sufficient land should ordinarily be exempted from temporary alienation to provide for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and his family.

Further on, he says :—

“Section 6 further weighs the scales in favour of the debtor, and the effect of section 7 would in practice ultimately be to reduce the twenty years period now prescribed for temporary alienation under the Alienation of Land Act to six years.”

Here, again, he has made a mistake which has led the Financial Commissioner, Development, also into a mistake.

Another opinion was referred to, and that was the opinion of the Commissioner of Multan. He saw neither sense nor justice nor equity in this Bill. And yet he forgot all the time that with the exception of just two matters, the reduction of period of limitation and the registration of money-lenders, there was nothing in this Bill which was not already recognised in practice or in principle either by the High Court or by the Financial Commissioner. What should I say of the opinion of a Commissioner who is unaware of the practice of his own department? Then, again, he said, that in the Multan division not a single deputy commissioner had been able to find himself in support of its provisions. I may inform the House that four of his deputy commissioners substantially support this Bill, one does not express any opinion whatsoever and it was only one who opposed the provisions of the Bill. If the Chair permits me to read extracts from the opinions given by deputy commissioners I can read them to the House, but I think it will be a perfect waste of time. I definitely claim that four of the six deputy commissioners serving under him substantially supported the provisions of the Bill, one did not express an opinion and only one opposed the provisions of the Bill in toto. Now the Commissioner who says that only one deputy commissioner has been able to support this Bill does not deserve to have that weight attached to his opinion which I would naturally attach to the opinion of a Commissioner who takes care to see what his deputy commissioners have said. I have now done with the high revenue officers.

Now I will come to another aspect of the criticism which was levelled against this Bill and against the author of this Bill. Mr. Mukerji suggested that I was imbued with communistic principles and that this Bill reflected communistic tendencies. Mr. Mukand Lal Puri took up the suggestion and said that Mr. Mukerji had put me down as a communist but that he would content himself with describing me as a socialist. Somebody else, I think Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit, suggested that I was a Bolshevik. I am not afraid of words. If the principles of this Bill are communistic then I openly stand for communism. If the principles of this Bill are socialistic then I openly and avowedly stand for socialism. If the principles of the Bill are Bolshevik in their character, then I stand openly and avowedly for Bolshevism. With your permission, Sir, I will ask the members of this House just to consider whether the transfer of the execution of decrees under section 68 of the Civil Procedure Code is either communistic or Bolshevik or socialistic. This provision has existed in the Civil Procedure Code for a number of years. (An honourable member: Why do you insert it in this Bill then?) I have already explained why I want a fresh provision made in this Bill. If the honourable member did not hear or has not sense enough to understand me then I cannot help him.

Mr. President: The honourable member should not be personal.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram: It is a personal question. Am I not entitled to answer a personal question?

Mr. President: The honourable member may answer it without being personal.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram: I was simply replying.

Now the exemption of a portion of land belonging to an agriculturist has been prescribed by Standing Order 64 of the Financial Commissioners. I do not know for what length of time. Is the Financial Commissioner a Bolshevik or a socialist or a communist? If he is, then I err in very good company. Again, is exemption of ancestral property from attachment in execution of a decree relating to a debt incurred by a deceased holder Bolshevik in principle? (An honourable member: Yes). If it is, then 4 Punjab Record of 1913, a ruling given by a Full Bench of our Chief Court set an example which I might follow with justice and reason. If the High Court or the Chief Court which gave that ruling has not been guilty of communistic tendencies, I cannot be held to be guilty of communistic tendencies either. Again, take the exemption of standing trees from sale to which the present provisions of the Bill are restricted. Is that exemption to be taken as an indication of communism? If that is to be taken as an indication of communism, then our High Court was a believer in communism up to 1929, for, according to its rulings prior to 1929 standing fruit trees were regarded as land not subject to sale in execution of a decree.

I have tried by means of this Bill to shift the burden of proof in respect of certain transactions on to the money-lender. So far as unregistered documents are concerned the law, which I propose, held the field for over 50 years. If our Chief Court did not become socialistic or communistic or Bolshevik on account of following that course of law, I do not understand how I can be held guilty of that charge. The period of limitation—has it anything to do with communism or Bolshevism or socialism? Whether the period of limitation is 12 years or ten years or eight years or six years, it has nothing to do with communism or Bolshevism or anything else of that character. When courts have to refuse to enter in applications for execution of decrees after a prescribed limit of time, whether that limit is ten years or twelve or eight or six is immaterial.

Registration of money-lenders. Does that indicate any communism? I claim, not. A law was passed in England as long ago as 1900 under which every money-lender had to get himself registered. Has England gone communistic? I say definitely no, and if England can continue to be non-communistic in spite of having passed a law insisting upon the registration of money-lenders, I cannot see how anybody can call me a communist because I make a suggestion in favour of the registration of money-lenders. As I have already stated if the provisions of this Bill are really tantamount to communism or socialism or Bolshevism, I plead guilty to the charge, and make a confession of my guilt in so far as I believe in the soundness of the principles embodied in this Bill.

Raja Narendra Nath made a reference to section 12 of the Tenancy Act and section 62 of the Land Revenue Act. Section 12 of the Tenancy Act says that rent will be the first charge on the produce of a tenancy, and section 62 of the Land Revenue Act lays down that land revenue will be the first charge on the produce or value of the produce of land assessed to land revenue. I fail to understand the relevancy of these sections to the present Bill. He did not develop his argument and, therefore, I have not been able to understand what exactly he meant. If he meant that if rent was the first charge on the produce of a tenant why a decree should not be the first charge on the produce of land, I would simply refer him to another section of the Tenancy Act. Section 97 says that "a tenant shall not during the continuance of his occupancy be liable to imprisonment on the application of his landlord in execution of a decree for an arrear of rent."

Raja Sahib claimed that this House had done much more for the debtors than was really necessary. One provision which was enacted in the Relief of Indebtedness Act was that which while abolishing imprisonment in general retained imprisonment in certain eventualities. Here is a section under the Tenancy Act which makes exemption from arrest absolute and unqualified. A tenant owing rent will not be sent to jail on the application of a landlord for an arrear of rent. (An honourable member: What has that got to do with the present Bill?) The question of rent being the first charge on the produce of a holding or tenancy has not much to do with the present Debtors' Protection Bill, but if Raja Sahib simply wanted to show that rent being made the first charge on the produce of a tenancy was a favour to the landlord I may be allowed to draw his attention to another section which lays down that for an arrear of rent a tenant cannot be sent to jail which makes the position of a tenant more favourable than that of a debtor.

[R. B. Ch. Chhotu Ram.]

Another line of criticism was that Government had declared more than once that it would be no party to any legislation which sought either to extend or to restrict the scope of the Land Alienation Act. There is nothing in this Bill which has the intention of either extending or restricting the scope of the Land Alienation Act. The honourable members who made a reference to the general assurance given by Government have failed to indicate any evidence in this Bill showing that any extension or any restriction of the Land Alienation Act was either intended or was likely to result. Another criticism that was offered was that if a law is laid down that a sufficient amount of land should be reserved for the maintenance of a judgment-debtor and his family, then absolutely nothing will be left out of which the decree-holder can realise his debts. This can only be in the case of small landholders. And yet, oblivious to the inconsistency of their position, their very friends have been clamouring that the Bill is really intended only for the benefit of big landlords.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : Is not that really so ?

Mr. President : The honourable member will please not interrupt the member in possession of the House.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : As a matter of fact such interruptions are parliamentary in a debate.

Mr. President : The honourable member has absolutely no right to interfere while another member is in possession of the House.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : I am going to bring my remarks to a close. I claim that unless a sufficient amount of land is reserved after the execution of a decree for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and his family the result will be chaos, confusion and disorder. Large sections of the population cannot be deprived of all the means of their livelihood without serious consequences, and if they are, the result will be that they will take to a life of crime and violence which may ultimately lead to a disaster of the first magnitude.

With these observations I bring my remarks to a close.

Mr. President : The question is—

That the Punjab Debtors' Protection Bill as reported by the select committee be taken into consideration.

The motion was carried.

The Council then adjourned till 2 P. M. on Monday, 24th November, 1935.

PUNJAB LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

5TH SESSION OF THE 4TH PUNJAB LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

Monday, 25th November, 1935.

OATH OF OFFICE.

Khan Bahadur Mian Abdul Aziz (Financial Commissioner) was sworn in.

THE PUNJAB DEBTORS' PROTECTION BILL.

Clause 1, Sub-clauses (2) and (3).

Mr. President : The Council will now proceed to consider the Punjab Debtors' Protection Bill clause by clause. The question is—

That sub-clauses (2) and (3) of clause 1 stand part of the Bill.

The motion was carried.

CLAUSE 2.

Mian Nurullah (Lyallpur, Muhammadan, Rural) : I beg to move—

That in clause 2, sub-clause (5) (ii) be omitted.

Now that we have taken this matter seriously in hand, we must try to stop all loopholes by which this Bill or any of its provisions can easily be evaded. To my mind so long as sub-clause (5) (ii) stands it is possible for any group of money-lenders to join hands and form a sort of a company and try to evade the provisions of this measure. Therefore it is necessary that we should delete this sub-clause. In Lyallpur many such fictitious companies exist. It is possible for any group of people to form such companies to get over this measure. Therefore I move the amendment.

Mr. President : Clause under consideration, amendment moved—

That in clause 2, sub-clause (5) (ii) be omitted.

Shaikh Abdul Ghani (West Punjab Towns, Muhammadan, Urban) : The amendment proposed is a very salutary one. If this Bill is to be really operative, then this loophole should be stopped. As has been hinted by the proposer of the amendment, any group of money-lenders or even the members of a joint Hindu family may register themselves into a company or society as contemplated in the Act of 1960 and may carry on the business of money-lending as individuals do at present. That would defeat the aims and objects of this Bill. I, therefore, whole-heartedly support the amendment.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram (South-East Rohtak, non-Muhammadan, Rural) : The object of the amendment is very good. But the question is whether in the absence of this amendment the clause as it stands will lead to the results which have been predicted by the honourable mover of the amendment. The definition of "money-lender" and "loan" and incidentally the present clause have been taken from the Regulation of Accounts Act. When that legislation was before this Council similar predictions were made. It was feared that if this loophole was allowed to remain then the money-lenders would form themselves into companies, get themselves registered under the Registration Act of 1860 and would be able to carry on money-lending on the old undesirable lines. But so far as I can recollect this Registration Act of 1860 is really meant for the registration of charitable societies. It has absolutely nothing to do with the ordinary companies registered under the Indian Companies Act. Therefore I feel that even if this clause is allowed to remain as it is, none of the consequences which are apprehended by the mover of the amendment are likely to arise. I do not, therefore, feel that I should accept the amendment.

Mian Nurullah : In view of the remarks of the honourable member for Rohtak, I beg leave to withdraw the amendment.

The motion was by leave withdrawn.

Mr. President : The question is—

That clause 2 stand part of the Bill.

The motion was carried.

CLAUSE 3.

Mr. President : The question is—

That clause 3 stand part of the Bill.

The motion was carried.

CLAUSE 4.

Mr. A. V. Askwith (Home Secretary) : The amendment which I have to move runs as follows :—

In clause 4 the words "who shall decide the period of alienation ; provided that the period of alienation shall in no case exceed twenty years" be omitted and the comma after the word "Collector" be replaced by a full-stop.

It will be seen that this is actually the first of three amendments which it is intended to move on behalf of Government to this clause 4. The three amendments are inter-related. It will be observed that the wording under clause 4 which this amendment proposes to delete was introduced in the course of the passage of the Bill through the select committee. I take it that the object of the select committee in including these words was to remove any misunderstandings that might have resulted from the first sentence in the clause. It might have been thought that the first words in the clause had the effect of destroying the protection which statutory agriculturists enjoy in regard to temporary alienations. Actually, however, the introduction of these words "Provided that the period of alienation should in no case exceed twenty years" not only saves the existing provisions of the Punjab Land Alienation Act but would have the effect of extending those provisions, so far as temporary alienations are concerned, to the case of non-agriculturists. If the representatives of non-agriculturists in the Council were to make it clear that it is their desire that the provisions of the Alienation of Land Act should be so extended, then it would be another matter; but failing an assurance that they have that desire Government must necessarily oppose the extension of the Land Alienation Act which the inclusion of these words in the clause would involve. I, therefore, move the amendment.

Mr. President : Clause under consideration, amendment moved—

In clause 4 the words " who shall decide the period ; provided that the period of alienation shall in no case exceed twenty years " be omitted and the comma after the words " Collector " be replaced by a full-stop.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram (South-East Rohtak, non-Muhammadan, Rural) : If I have been able to understand the honourable mover of the amendment rightly, his object would seem to be that the period of twenty years, the maximum period of twenty years of alienation, applicable to the case of members of notified agricultural tribes should not be extended to the case of those who do not happen to belong to notified agricultural tribes. If this interpretation of mine in respect of this amendment is correct, then I feel I should oppose it. As I made clear in one of my speeches I have received many letters from non-agriculturist zamindars as they call themselves protesting that there was no reason why the same period of alienation should not be applied in their case as applies in the case of the members of statutory agricultural tribes. After all, they contend, they are agriculturists, that they depend for their livelihood on the produce of agricultural land and that they have no other means of livelihood open to them, that in many cases they have no other profession of even secondary importance to depend upon. Therefore they contend, and I think reasonably, that being agriculturists, though not statutory agriculturists, they should have the same rights and privileges when their land is being alienated as are enjoyed by the members of statutory agriculturist tribes. I think a period of twenty years is long enough in the case of both statutory and non-statutory agriculturists. So long as they are agriculturists by profession and depend chiefly or exclusively upon the income from land they should enjoy the same privilege as is at present enjoyed by statutory agriculturists. I, therefore, oppose the amendment.

Shaikh Abdul Ghani (West Punjab Towns, Muhammadan, Urban) : If this is to be an extraordinary measure devised to meet the exigencies of the time, which has to meet the depression that is now prevailing in the province, I think we should be rather magnanimous and not too narrow-minded as this amendment indicates. After all, people who are living upon land, who are the backbone of the country, be they agriculturists declared as such by the Government or not, they are equally hard-pressed because they cannot make enough money for their produce when they take it to the markets. They are as much indebted and, therefore, as much entitled to get relief from the authorities as the statutory agriculturists. I see no justification why an exception should be made in favour of those only who are declared to be statutory agriculturists. There are large classes of people who have for generations been cultivating land and living upon land in the villages. They are as much agriculturists as anybody else in the province. Unfortunately probably by some oversight or some strange accident they have not been included among statutory agriculturists. (An honourable member : Then include such people among agricultural tribes). I fail to see any justification for the differential treatment proposed. I am submitting that these people are entitled to the relief if any relief is contemplated by this House. Moreover we find that there are kamins residing in the villages and they have a right also to land and they possess land. They are very hard pressed and their economic condition is bad, if not worse than those of statutory agriculturists. I see no reason why Government should be so mindful of the interests of the statutory agriculturists alone to the prejudice of those who are not so declared. I, therefore, on the strength of these remarks oppose the amendment proposed by the Government.

Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath (Punjab Landholders, General): This amendment refers to that part of the Bill which has to come into force at once. I have already said that I am not in favour of any part of this Bill. But I think that so far as the amendment proposed by the Government is concerned, it is a reasonable one. The money-lenders advanced to non-agriculturists in the hope that they will not in any way be hampered by the Land Alienation Act in realising the decree. But now if you apply the provisions of the Land Alienation Act to a person to whom money was advanced by a creditor when he did not have the slightest apprehension of the application of that Act, it is unjust to the creditor. I do not mean to say that the other provisions of the Bill are free from this criticism. This criticism of mine applies to the rest of the Bill also. But so far as the amendment proposed by the Government goes, I think it is a very just one and as long as the distinction between the statutory agriculturists and non-statutory agriculturists is there, there is no reason for ignoring that distinction for the purpose of this clause.

Khan Bahadur Malik Zaman Mehdi Khan (Sheikhupura, Muhammadan, Rural): It is not understood on what ground the amendment is proposed by the Government. Probably it is assumed by Government that non-agriculturists do not owe any debts. The name of the present Bill is the Punjab Debtors' Protection Bill. Probably Government assumes, as I have said already, that the non-agriculturists are free from all kinds of debt and generally such non-agriculturists, leaving apart a few solitary instances, own very small patches of land and it is absolutely necessary that some protection should be afforded to them because their means of subsistence or livelihood are the land. Moreover on the floor of this House it has been generally said that members of the Unionist Party generally introduce class measures. We do not want to make any distinction between the agriculturists and non-agriculturists in the matter of land. There seems to be no reason why some sort of distinction should be made between the two classes of land-owners, whether they belong to agricultural tribes or not. Therefore it seems to be absolutely necessary that the same measure should apply to both classes of land-owners. I, therefore, oppose the Government amendment.

Kanwar Mamraj Singh Chohan (Ambala-cum-Simla, non-Muhammadan, Rural): I wish to support the amendment moved by Government. The section as modified by the select committee says, " notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any other enactment for the time being in force". It means, notwithstanding anything contained in the Alienation of Land Act, the rest of the section would be applied. Now the land of an agriculturist is mortgaged for a period less than 20 years. Then the proceedings go to the collector under this section for permission to alienate it again. Now that you have already excluded the provisions of the Land Alienation Act, the land of an agriculturist which could ordinarily be alienated only for 20 years in the aggregate can now be alienated for a further period of 20 years under this section. I should congratulate the Government on trying to exclude these words and this will be for the benefit of those agriculturist debtors who are unfortunately so poor that they cannot prosecute their cases so carefully and so vigilantly and so ably as others. In any case when you have a section which legalises temporary alienation for more than 20 years, then it is the decree-holder who will take advantage of it and not the judgment-debtor. I think I have made it clear to the Leader of the Unionist Party. Under this section as it stands, as reported by the select committee, alienations of land for a period more than 20 years can in the aggregate be made, whereas under the existing law it cannot exceed 20 years. But the fear of the Government which appears from the next amendment of theirs is not so much well founded. Ordinarily when the land of a non-agriculturist judgment-debtor is to be alienated, then the decree-holder catches hold of the judgment-debtor and does not ask the court to grant temporary alienation but would ask the court to sell it permanently. I, therefore, support this amendment which has been moved by the Government because if this amendment is not carried, there is a loophole in the section in that under the section as it stands alienations for more than 20 years can take place which are not ordinarily permitted under the Alienation of Land Act.

As regards the other amendment of the Government to which I have alluded, I think Government has overdone its case. They are over-anxious to help the agriculturist and to protect the non-agriculturist and so it wants to introduce so many words by their subsequent amendment. I think if the collector is allowed to proceed according to the Land Alienation Act he cannot grant alienation for more than 20 years. I think this amendment is very sound and should be accepted.

Khan Sahib Chaudhri Riasat Ali (Gujranwala, Muhammadan, Rural): The first thing which I want to submit in this connection is one which has already been enunciated by the Leader of the Party, that we do not want to incur the odium that we are carrying this as a class measure. As my honourable colleague, Khan Bahadur Zaman Mehdi Khan, has also said, the title of the Bill as it stands, is the Debtors' Protection Bill and not statutory Agriculturists Protection Bill or other agriculturists Protection Bill. The relief which is sought to be given is to be given to debtors as a class and not to one class of people or other. It was argued even on the occasion of the Bill which preceded this, i.e., the Indebtedness Relief Bill that we were passing a class measure. Even at that time we said that we did not want to pass a class measure and the same argument is there even now. We want to give relief to every debtor, be he a carpenter, a Khatri, a rural man or a townsman or anybody. It is because I do not want this to be a class measure that I oppose this amendment.

[K. S. Ch. Bhasat Ali.]

The other thing is that this matter is more or less a matter of principle which has already been accepted. I would remind the House of the time when the Government itself had to amend the Land Alienation Act and an amending Bill was brought forward by the Honourable Sir Sikander Hyat-Khan in which the principle was involved. It was then passed that no alienation under the Act should exceed in any case more than 20 years. This is admitted that there have been rulings according to which there are alienations which exceed even 40 years and I know a case in Lyallpur in which alienation exceeded 50 years. So, as a matter of principle even the Government felt its necessity and brought in an amending Bill limiting the period to 20 years. Those people who depend on land, whether they are statutory agriculturists or not, must be protected equally. They should stand on the same footing. As soon as the possession of land or ownership of land even to the extent of one marla steps in, the pecuniary position of a Jat or a non-Jat is the same. The circumstances are absolutely the same of a man who is a statutory agriculturist as well as of the other. This is not a matter of accident. Now as I have said before, I have known people in every village, in every district, who are land-owners, big or small, non-statutory agriculturists, who are very keenly watching the proceedings and the various stages through which this Bill is passing. There is a keen demand from these people that they should be included and that in any sort of legislation that is passed their rights also should be protected. The pecuniary position of the people, whether they are agriculturists or non-agriculturists, is the same when they depend on land. The principle is that we have to save those people who depend mainly on land for their subsistence. As has been put by Kanwar Mamraj Singh Chohan, the next section, section 5 provides, "having regard to his other resources" and so on, in the matter of exemption of land from temporary alienation.

If the suggested amendment is carried, then this means that only those people will be covered by this amendment who depend only on land, because those who have other resources will be excluded by the next section. Therefore it is very essential that all those people who are debtors as a class should be included. Another thing, which I put at that time also, is, where is the logic that those people who do not happen to be agriculturists under the statute should not be deserving of our sympathy as much as the agriculturist sections of the people? Of course there might be people whose pecuniary circumstances might be such that they might stand on a different footing and in a great degree in need of our help. So we should not deny them this help by accepting the proposal of the Government and confining this section as proposed by the Government to the statutory agriculturists alone and up to a term of not more than 20 years. With these words I oppose the amendment.

Sardar Arjan Singh (Hoshiarpur and Kangra, Sikh, Rural): It is funny that such an amendment should come from the Government and our friends on the right side of the Government should support the Government in a matter of this nature. I have very often heard from those members proclaiming from house tops that the kamins and non-agriculturists living in the countryside have absolutely no representation and that the representatives of the zamindars are not protecting the rights of those people who happen to be non-agriculturists and who happen to live in the countryside. This amendment is the acid test of the sincerity of the Government as well as the representatives who from time to time have been twitting us with inconsistency when they tell us that the zamindar members are always against the interests of the poor people living in the countryside. We must make our position very clear. We consider these people living in the countryside and who depend mainly on agricultural avocations of one kind or another as a part of ourselves and we are as much solicitous of their interests as we are solicitous about the interests of the statutory agriculturists (hear, hear). A charge should not be laid at our doors that when we speak in the name of zamindars we only care for the interests of the statutory agriculturists. We on our side are prepared to extend the protection that is sought to be given to the indebted classes to these classes also who though not members of the statutory agriculturist tribes are entirely dependent upon agriculture. If this protection is not accepted then it would not be open to these members who are supporting this amendment of the Government to-day to tell us late in the day that we have been rushing through this legislation irrespective of the interests of people who are indebted and who are living in the countryside. On the other side I would ask my friends on this side not to lay us open to the charge as is said in the Punjabi proverb مان نالو هجلى پيها کوٹلى. If these people say that they are very mindful of the interests of those people, we have given our best consideration, we have made our offer to them, and if they do not accept it, we should be content with it and with having made an announcement of our policy and of our principles that we are prepared to help these people, but the Government does not give them that protection and those members who are supporting the Government do not give them that protection. Very often as soon as a measure of this nature is brought, very trenchant and very carping criticism is made against the members of the agricultural tribes and it is said that a class measure is being rushed through by the majority party in the Council. With these words I oppose the amendment of the Government.

Mian Nurullah (Lyallpur South, Muhammadan, Rural) : While supporting the arguments advanced by the honourable member from Hoshiarpur, I would like to point out that these amendments, if carried, would take away the privilege that already exists and is enjoyed by members of statutory agricultural tribes in the districts in which land is situated. For example, a Maud Brahman is an agriculturist in Jhelum district and not an agriculturist in Lyallpur. He will lose the privilege that he already enjoys in that district. Similarly if the Honourable Revenue Member were here I would have asked him if his tribe would not suffer if this amendment is carried. A Khattar who owns land in Lyallpur would certainly lose the privilege and his land can be sold and alienated in Lyallpur. In Lyallpur there are many clans who are not agriculturists. Similarly an Arain of Lyallpur owning land in Jhelum or Attock would lose that privilege because he is not an agriculturist in those districts. That is a very serious objection which Government is ignoring. Therefore, I oppose the amendment.

Khan Bahadur Mian Mushtaq Ahmad Gurmani (Nominated, non-official) : I do not propose to make a long speech. I wish to clear just one point. I greatly appreciate the noble idea underlying the speeches made by the Honourable the Leader and the members of the Unionist Party opposing the Government. Their intention is to extend the benefit of this clause to the non-agriculturist debtors also in as much as it will restrict the period of temporary alienation of their land in satisfaction of a civil court decree to twenty years. But there seems to be a misapprehension in their minds about this question. The clause as it originally stands in the Bill extends the scope of the Alienation of Land Act and creates an anomalous position. There is no restriction provided in the law for a non-agriculturist owner to alienate his land temporarily or permanently but by the proposed clause we are restricting the powers of civil courts to order a temporary alienation of land belonging to non-agriculturists for more than twenty years while no restriction will lie on the civil courts to order a sale of the said land. The result of adopting the original clause would be that in future the civil courts will be more inclined to order a sale of a non-agriculturist's land in satisfaction of a decree than to alienate temporarily. It would, therefore, not be in the interests of the non-agriculturists to restrict the period of temporary alienation of their land. Rather we shall be doing a harm to them in making this provision which I am sure is not the intention of the sponsor of this Bill. My second point is that the non-agriculturist land owners are generally business men or traders and do not entirely depend on the income from their lands. It would, therefore, be most undesirable to restrict their credit by imposing this restriction, at a time when it is most needed. I hope in view of these facts the Honourable Mover of the Bill will accept the Government amendment. With these words I support the amendment before the House.

Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan (Jullundur, Muhammadan, Rural) (Urdu): I have stood up to oppose the amendment moved by the Government to clause 4, and I request them to withdraw it. I do not like to see two rates of the same commodity prevailing in the same market. The Government should not treat two sections of their subjects in different ways. Time and again my friends on those benches have complained that zamindars always bring forward measures for the benefit of zamindars and they do not pay any attention to the interests of the non-agriculturist population of the province. Here was a clause in this Bill which stood for the common good of all, agriculturists and non-agriculturists alike, but my honourable friends are opposing that very clause by supporting the amendment proposed by the Government. The class to which the Government propose to deny the benefit of clause 4 are poorer than the zamindars and sahuikars. But it is very helpful to these people. It includes carpenters, blacksmiths, washermen and cobblers and all those people who perform very important duties for the people in the countryside. They depend entirely on zamindars; if zamindars have good harvest they get sufficient to eat; otherwise not. Therefore, the Government should treat them on the same footing as the zamindars in the matter of alienating their lands. This class of people deserve the help of the Government in the same way as any other class as they also are loyal subjects of the King. We all know that when the Government has to cope with the spread of an epidemic in a town it does not make any distinction between this class and that class. It thinks that every class equally stands in need of help and attends to the needs of every class irrespective of its status in society. In the present case also they should not make a distinction. Let clause 4 be applied to all and sundry as is intended by the honourable mover of the Bill. In the law as it stands there are already many limitations in vogue. For instance, a time-limit of six or ten years is fixed for the execution of a decree. Then, certain debts become time-barred if application for their recovery is not made in time. So the Government, by agreeing to fix twenty years as a limit in the present case, will not be setting up a new precedent. In several other cases time-limits have been fixed already. Then, the poor non-agriculturists deserve the concession of a time limit for another reason too. These people have come by their lands with great difficulty. Zamindars have already sufficient lands in their possession. So the necessity of protecting the lands of these non-agriculturists is still greater and even more justified. If these people are not protected the zamindars will be put to great inconvenience because these people are a great asset to him. They assist him in every walk of life. He simply cannot do without the help of his carpenters, washermen, blacksmiths, cobblers and other menials. So, by protecting these people you will be indirectly protecting the zamindar. You should in all fairness and justice fix a time limit after which the land of a non-agriculturist should be released from burden. Even a person convicted of murder has the chance of coming out of prison after fourteen years, that is, there is a limit to his sufferings. But you propose by this amendment to let the poor non-agriculturist borrower suffer for an indefinite number of years during which time his land will be in the possession of his creditors. Even the time limit of 20 years is excessive. I should have liked to fix it at eight or ten years. Because as we all know in twenty years a baby grows up to be a full-fledged young man capable of producing other babies (laughter). I will again request the Government not to press their amendment. They should treat all their subjects equitably and equally. After all people consider them their mai bap. Let them know that like all good parents the Government make no distinction between this child and that child. Otherwise they will be failing in their duty as mai bap of the people. I have great apprehensions that if people see that the Government are making invidious distinctions in favour of one section of its subjects as against the other, they will resent this attitude. And then there will be risings against the Government. The astute gentlemen at the helm of affairs in this Government should try to avert such a calamity. If the Government do not desist from pressing their amendment and it is carried a stigma will be left on its fair name. With these words I once more request the Government to let a time limit be fixed after which a non-agriculturist may hope to regain his land.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd (Finance Member): The last speaker has urged that it is the duty of Government to protect the poorest of its subjects and for that reason the Government should withdraw this amendment. The reason why Government have proposed this amendment is that the clause as it stands operates to extend the provisions of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act to land which belongs to persons who are not members of notified agricultural tribes. The Government have always taken up the position that the principles and the application of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act are not to be extended or whittled down without the sanction.

of the parties concerned. This is one very good reason for proposing the amendment and as the parties concerned do not desire that the limit of 20 years be applied to temporary alienations of their land we are bound to press this amendment. The Leader of the Unionist Party has told us that he has received several representations from owners of land who are not members of notified agricultural tribes asking that the benefits of this clause or perhaps of the Bill as a whole be extended to them. The Government is a constitutional Government and it approves the constitutional position that the views of the public are correctly represented by their natural representatives in this House. The natural representatives of the class who do not belong to notified agricultural tribes are the party sitting on my right and I think we must accept their attitude towards this amendment as the authoritative attitude of non-agriculturists. I should also make it clear,—I think I tried to make it clear in my previous speech but I wish to repeat it—that the support of Government to this part of the Bill was conditional on the passing of this with one or two other amendments, certainly on the passing of this particular amendment, and Government's attitude towards this portion of the Bill may be affected by the fate of this amendment.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit (Hoshiarpur, non-Muhammadan, Rural): The honourable member, Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram and his party have tried to explain to the House that this amendment of theirs is a real protection to the landholder, whether he belongs to agricultural or non-agricultural tribes. I submit that it is not so. If the honourable member, Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram, is really anxious to protect a member of a non-agricultural tribe who holds land, this clause should be worded in a different manner altogether. Kindly read the clause as it stands. It runs:—

“Notwithstanding anything contained in any other enactment for the time being in force, whenever a Civil Court orders that land be attached and alienated temporarily in the execution of a decree for the payment of money the proceedings of such attachment and alienation shall be transferred to the Collector, who shall decide the period of alienation; provided that the period of alienation shall in no case exceed twenty years.”

The question is this and I would like to make it clear by taking an illustration. Let us take a money-lender who obtains a decree for Rs. 500 against, say, a member of a non-agricultural tribe who holds land. Under the law a decree can be passed for the recovery of Rs. 500. The board while executing the money decree orders the land to be sold. What happens then under this clause? It is only when the civil court orders that the land be attached and alienated temporarily that the clause comes into operation. But there is no bar against the court ordering the sale of the land of the non-agriculturists landholders. Where then is the boasted protection that under this clause you say you have given to the non-agriculturists landholders? If the civil court passes a decree and orders the sale, not a temporary alienation as stated here but the sale of the land, there is no protection. The clause put in by Government stands entirely on the same footing. Undoubtedly the idea of the Government is that this clause may be made more clear. But so far as the honourable member for Rohtak, Chaudhri Chhotu Ram, and his party are concerned, they are not giving any protection to the non-agriculturists landholder. They are entirely wrong in saying that by enacting a clause of this kind they are protecting the poor non-agriculturist.

The civil court is not going to say when the law exists that the land should not be sold. That is the proposition which I wish Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram to take into consideration. Do not try to throw dust in the eyes of the people by saying that you are going to protect them. I would therefore respectfully submit that if Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram is really anxious to give some sort of protection to the non-agriculturist landholder he should frame the clause in a different manner.

Khan Bahadur Nawab Muhammad Hayat Qureshi (Shahpur West, Muhammadan, Rural) (Urdu): I had no intention to take part in this debate but for the remarks made by the honourable member who has preceded me. He has complained that this clause does not give protection to landlords who do not belong to the agricultural tribes. That is true, but that is no fault of ours. It was the duty of the party to which the honourable member belongs and of the leader of his party to have brought forward an amendment seeking to give protection to such landlords. I may assure him that if his party or the leader of his party had brought forward such an amendment, we would have gladly agreed to it. We do not want it to be said that we are here to safeguard the interests of statutory agriculturists alone. We are prepared to protect the interests of all landlords irrespective of the fact whether they belong to the statutory agricultural tribes or not. But when the honourable member and his party do not want such protection to be given to landlords not belonging to statutory agriculturists, we cannot help it. However, I shall respectfully request the leader of my party to agree to the amendment proposed by the Government.

Mr. J. D. Anderson (Legal Remembrancer): I should like to emphasise one point which has been brought out only in part. The courts of this province are, in spite of the doubt with which I think some members of this House regard them, primarily courts of justice. Their job is to do justice between the parties before them. A man gets a decree against a judgment-debtor who is not a member of a notified agricultural tribe. The judgment-debtor has incurred his debt while his land gave him unlimited security, security for a term of years to which there is no limit at all. Once a judgment-debtor has got that decree he can execute it either by having the land sold or by having a temporary alienation made for a term of years. If you are going to limit the term of years you are compelling the court in so far as it is a court of justice to order the sale of that land. This amendment is, if real justice is to be done, absolutely necessary. Otherwise you are extending the principles of the Land Alienation Act in one small respect only to people who do not want it and should feel with justice that it is going to be to their disadvantage.

Mr. President : Question is—

In clause 4 the words "who shall decide the period of alienation; provided that the period of alienation shall in no case exceed twenty years" be omitted and the comma after the word "collector" be replaced by a full-stop.

The motion was carried.

Mr. A. V. Askwith : I move—

In clause 4 the following be added as sub-clause (2):—

"(2) On the proceedings being transferred to him by the civil court the Collector shall decide the period of alienation, which shall not exceed twenty years in the case of land owned by a member of a statutory agricultural tribe, determined to be such by the local Government in exercise of the powers conferred by section 4 of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act, 1900.<sup>23</sup>

[Mr. A. V. Askwith.]

The motion was carried.

Mr. President : The question is—

That clause 4 as amended stand part of the Bill.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri (Punjab Industries) : If any particular matter is to be decided judicially and on settled principles of law and is not to be dependent in future on the mere discretion of an officer, it is a matter of indifference as far as merits of a decision are concerned, whether that is decided by the civil courts or by the revenue courts. If the proposal to transfer the execution proceedings from the civil courts to the collector proceeds from a distrust of the civil courts, and a hope that the collector would lean towards the debtors, I feel sure that this partiality is not likely to be displayed once it is made a statutory obligation as is now proposed, that the collector is to act judicially.

Khan Sahib Chaudhri Riasat Ali : I rise to a point of order. Whether the collector should act judicially or not is a question to be discussed under clause 6. Clause 4 only lays down that the proceedings should be transferred to the collector. The honourable member is discussing the question of mistrust of civil courts and of placing full confidence in the collector. I would submit that his remarks are premature and the question is not under discussion so far as clause 4 is concerned.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : I was submitting that it was really a matter of indifference, if these officers have to decide correctly, according to their conscience and according to law, whether Messrs. Mitchell and Marshall decide it as commissioners or whether Messrs. Martin and Din Muhammad decide it as district judges. Therefore the question whether the proceedings in execution of a decree of a civil court should be transferred to a revenue officer or revenue court is a question which should be examined on its merits quite apart from the question whether it is going to help the debtor or creditor. The question is whether this change is desirable from an administrative point of view, whether it is an advance in the right direction to transfer judicial work from civil courts to executive officers, and whether on a priori grounds it is desirable that decrees passed by courts should be sent to courts of different jurisdiction for execution and whether this change can be at all defended on any inherent grounds or in the light of experience.

What is the present practice? The present practice is that proposals are invited for leases from the collector in this matter and they are considered by the court which is executing the decree. In a vast majority of cases they are accepted. I state on data obtained from reliable statistics that in 93 per cent. cases civil courts have accepted the suggestions made by the collectors in this respect. But in some cases where the collector's proposals happened to be incorrect they were modified as they should have been by the civil courts in the light of further investigation conducted by them. The decisions of the civil courts are subject to appeal and if any civil court has arbitrarily rejected the proposal of the collector, it is set right in appeal. This procedure of inviting the opinion of the collector with respect to temporary alienations of agricultural land is by no means a novel procedure but is in consonance with the practice of civil courts in all matters in which any expert assistance is necessary. Whenever any civil court wants advice on any technical matter, it obtains it by the appointment of a commissioner; if the matter relates to taking accounts, a person well versed in accounts is appointed as a commissioner to go into accounts and make a report and where a matter relates to mesne profits, then a person who can do that work efficiently is asked to report; if the mesne profits of buildings are in question then an engineer, may be the Chief Engineer, is appointed; if the question is finding out the mesne profits of land, then some land revenue officer is asked to investigate and report; if it is a matter of demarcation of boundaries then an officer who is connected with survey is appointed. After these reports are received, the courts in the light of any further material which may be brought on record adjudicate on these matters. They either accept the reports in their entirety or with modifications found necessary in the light of further enquiry. In most cases they are accepted. Therefore the present practice in the matter of temporary alienations of agricultural land is nothing novel; it is the same which is adopted by the civil courts in all matters of a similar nature. The civil court continues seized of the matter and the experts only act as ministerial officers.

The present proposal however is in certain contingencies to transfer the matter in its entirety to the collector, providing for appeals to the commissioners and reviews to Financial Commissioners and oust entirely the jurisdiction of civil courts which passed the decree and which are naturally interested in seeing that their decrees are not nullified. This proposal is open to very serious objections. This would in the first instance throw too much burden on the collectors who are already overworked. Almost every collector has pointed that out. Again the work will not be well done because this is not their main work but additional work thrown on them, the primary responsibility of the work being on civil courts. Several collectors have emphasized this aspect, a fact which is in accordance with human experience. Again, this is likely to be highly inconvenient to the litigants. The civil courts are stationary while the collectors are usually on tour. For appeal, the litigants will have to go to commissioners far away from their districts while the district judges sit at the head-quarters of their own district, within easy access of the litigants. Further this proposal proceeds from an unnecessary and unwarrantable distrust of civil courts and its acceptance implies a slur upon that administration, a proceeding to which Government ought not to be a party. Again, the present proposal is open to a serious objection as a matter of principle in as much as this amounts to transfer from the judiciary of judicial work to the executive, and this is therefore a retrograde step. Gradually the deputy commissioners, although technically invested with criminal powers have been relieved of their criminal work by the appointment of additional district magistrates. They are also being gradually relieved of revenue work by delegation and it will be a retrograde step if the work of civil courts is transferred to officers whose primary work is not judicial but executive. I have long been of opinion that it would lead to considerable economy and efficiency, if the work which is at present being done by the revenue courts in this province were taken away from the revenue courts and transferred to the sub-judges. In this matter I am not at all referring to the work which the revenue cadre perform as revenue officers, that is, work like the appointments, etc., of lambardars, zaildars and mutation which is of a semi executive character and which should be continued to be performed by them, but the work which they do as a revenue court should no longer be done by them but should be transferred to sub-judges and district judges from the courts of collectors of all grades and commissioners. This is the direction in which the reform of the judicial system of the province ought to take place. The work will be done better, more cheaply, more expeditiously, to the advantage and convenience of litigants and at considerable saving of cost to the administration. This is a matter which we considered in the Retrenchment Committee.

Mr. President : Reformation of the judiciary in the province is not under discussion.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : Sir, I am submitting that the transfer from judicial courts of the work of a judicial nature to officers whose main work is executive is a retrograde step and the entire movement for reform should be for the transfer of whatever judicial work is being done by the executive officers.

Mr. President : That matter is not before the House. What the section aims at is, that certain proceedings which are dealt with by the civil courts should be transferred to collectors. Its converse is not before us.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : I submit therefore that the effect of this proposal will be to transfer from the judiciary work which properly belongs to them to the executive officer and it is a retrograde step. The collector and the commissioner have enough work of superintendence and co-ordination if they are not further burdened with this judicial work of other courts. Again, what is the result of the present proposal? It is to create two jurisdictions in one matter and thus to lead to conflict and confusion of jurisdictions. Supposing an execution is pending before a sub-judge and the sub-judge decides to have temporary alienation. Or again, take the case where the insolvency proceedings are pending before a district judge and a receiver has been appointed in whom the entire property vests. The district judge in insolvency cases or the sub-judge in execution proceedings decides to make a temporary alienation of the land. The proceedings will, under the present proposal, be transferred to the court of collector who will summon parties. After the parties have been served before the collectors, the parties will be given opportunity to produce evidence. The witnesses, including the patwari and other subordinate revenue officers will be summoned and examined by both the parties and the collector will decide this matter "judicially", like an ordinary suit. After this matter has been decided by the collector it will be taken to the appellate court and all the parties will have to go to the commissioner. While these proceedings continue before the collector and the commissioner, and in some cases up to the Financial Commissioner execution proceedings relating to the same decree continue simultaneously with respect to other property in the court.

of sub-judge or the district judge. How very anomalous that the parties should be carrying on execution proceedings relating to the same decree at one and the same time in two courts of independent jurisdiction. If an order against a party is passed by the sub-judge, against that order the parties must run to the district judge. If an order is passed by the collector, the aggrieved party is directed for appeal to the commissioner. Therefore in one and the same matter which is the execution of a simple money-decree you provide by this new legislation one series of appeals and revisions to the revenue courts up to the Financial Commissioner and another series of appeals and revisions to the civil court up to the High Court. I ask in all honesty, for what reason and to what end? If you legislate as you propose to do, if you are laying down the principles on which the collector is to act and if he is to act judicially, what gain do you get by transferring the case from the court of the district judge to that of the collector? It is certainly convenient to the parties to have that matter decided in a civil court. The district judge sits at the head-quarters while the collector tours about; it is highly inconvenient for a litigant and especially a debtor litigant in impoverished circumstances to run up to Julundur from Kangra or from Mianwali to Rawalpindi instead of having his appeal decided in his own district. It is to the interest of the debtor to have one appeal to one court where this matter will be decided along with other matters than to have two appeals. The proposal therefore obviously and necessarily involves more litigation and expense. On no ground of convenience, on no ground of simplification of procedure, on no ground whatever, can you justify this transfer to the collector. What is the reason, then for this transfer except distrust of the judicial officers? It has not been suggested and it would be entirely incorrect if any one were to suggest that civil courts are not conversant with revenue law. Every sub-judge undergoes a period of training in revenue law and passes an examination but if some people think that a longer period of training is necessary that can be arranged, or if they think that some persons more conversant with revenue law should act as sub-judges, a few officers of the Provincial Civil Service from the revenue line could be appointed as sub-judges or district judges if necessary. I earnestly ask the sponsors of this transfer to tell the house what ground of principle, what ground of convenience, what ground of improvement in procedure or anything else do they expect from this transfer? Therefore I am definitely opposed to this proposal as a retrograde proposal. I most respectfully submit that we need have no mistrust of the civil courts inasmuch as every court whether that of collector or of sub-judge will have to act judicially. If there is no a priori ground for transfer, let us see if the experience of those gentlemen who have been, as collectors, advising in this matter, points to any different conclusion. Let us see what opinion has been expressed by these experienced officers about the proposed transfer, in the light of their long experience of this matter.

In the first instance, I start with the opinion of the revenue officer. At top of the tree is the learned Financial Commissioner who in agreement with the Registrar of Co-operative Societies is opposed to the transfer and does not approve of it. Of the five commissioners three commissioners only sent opinions on the Bill. All are definitely opposed to this transfer. I read out to you the other day the very clear and illuminating opinion of the Commissioner of Multan. He is opposed to it. I will now place before you the opinion of the Commissioner of Rawalpindi. He says—

[R. B. Mr. Mukand Lal Puri.]

“I would try to avoid throwing more work on the already harassed collector in the way suggested by clause 3.”

The Commissioner of Jullundur is very explicit on this point. He says—

“I doubt the advisability of a system whereby there will be two independent bodies, the civil court and the collector, exercising jurisdiction in the same matter. It will moreover be in the power of the collector to nullify a decree of the civil court, as execution will now vest in the collector. As the collector is to act judicially both parties will have the right to be represented by counsel and this will certainly lead to delay and expense. A debtor can at present call evidence before the civil court as to his means and the amount of land in his possession, and he can do no more before the collector. It is not obvious what advantage he will gain from this new Act, unless it is assumed that all civil courts are prejudiced against the zamindar in favour of the money-lender.”

It is not merely on account of the increase of work which would necessarily be thrown upon the collector or the commissioner that they are opposed to the proposal. They give administrative and other reasons for opposing the matter.

Let us see what the collectors say. Unlike Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram, when I place before this House the opinions of the collectors I take the responsibility of having scrutinised them myself carefully and I wish to state that the analysis which I am presenting before you is absolutely correct so far as my efforts can ensure that accuracy.

Mr. President : The honourable member should avoid repetition.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : I will try to avoid repetition as far as it is possible. Twenty-eight collectors including an additional district magistrate and a magistrate of the first class have expressed opinions on clause 4, which was the number of the clause in the original Bill. Six of them do not express any opinion at all in respect to this matter. Out of the remaining 22, only four have expressed an opinion in favour of the change. One is the Deputy Commissioner, Jhang, who merely states that he agrees with the opinion of his public prosecutor and with respect to which the Commissioner, Multan, observes that the argument of the Deputy Commissioner, Jhang, has only to be read to be rejected. The second is the Deputy Commissioner, Ferozepore, whose opinion on the whole Bill is expressed in one sentence, which is that “sections 8 to 9 will go to help the debtor.” There is absolutely no discussion, or criticism of any of the provisions. The third is the Deputy Commissioner of Rohtak who although opposed to all the other provisions of the Bill, does not see any objection to this. The Deputy Commissioner of Rawalpindi is also in favour of transfer. All the remaining 18 deputy commissioners, and two additional collectors have criticised adversely the proposed transfer and have pointed out that the proposed change is administratively unsound, unnecessary and uncalled for. They have also said that this would lead to conflict of jurisdiction and inconvenience to litigants. I have collected extracts from the opinions of these 18 collectors, but as you have prohibited me from reading them out, I cannot do so, but if you had permitted me to do so you would have noticed how very emphatic and outspoken, is their opposition to this proposal. Of the permanent judges of the High Court with the exception of one, no judge has expressed an opinion in favour of the proposed change. The opinion of the temporary judges is divided on this point. The one judge who is in its favour says in half a line that he is in favour of it if it would lead to simplicity of procedure. Would this lead to simplicity of procedure to have matters arising out of the same litigation carried on in two courts of independent jurisdictions at one and the same time?

Mr. President : The honourable member has said so more than once.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : I am merely emphasising my point. It is very necessary to point out to the Government who ultimately are responsible for good administration and sane and just laws, whether any case has been made out for this change. In my opinion, no case has been made out for this change. Every argument points to this : Here is a continuance of a practice against which no sound reason has been adduced. Here is the practice which has existed for a considerable time. Before changing the established practice on a purely sentimental ground a very strong case should be made out for it.

Mr. President : This point also has already been advanced by the honourable member.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : I am merely emphasising that argument.

Mr. President : I cannot allow repetition of argument for the sake of emphasis.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : I submit that the Government should take this House into its confidence and state the reasons which have actuated it at this stage to accept the proposal made by a private member of the House and which is open to the objections which I have ventured to submit to the House and which is also against the advice given to it by its best experts like the Financial Commissioner, Commissioners and others. If Government is in possession of any other advice beyond that which is given in the opinions which have been circulated to us it must place such advice before us. The Government should not adopt an attitude of dumb indifference. With these words I oppose this proposal which is neither supported by principle nor by experience nor by any visible line of policy.

Shaikh Abdul Ghani (West Punjab Towns, Muhammadan, Urban) : I have been trying to find out if there was any justification for the very strong appeal that has been made by the other side, but I have not been able to find any. My learned friend, Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, began by saying that perhaps my party which is sponsoring this Bill had some mistrust in civil courts. I shall show presently that that is not the case. So far as this clause is concerned we have got no fears if the cases go to civil courts. This clause is not based on any suspicions or misgivings in regard to civil courts. We take our stand upon convenience, upon efficiency and upon accuracy. These are the three considerations that are goading us on to put this proposal before the House. I say efficiency because we know that in matters of this sort it is only the revenue officers who have got all the documents in their possession, who can very speedily and very efficiently come to a right and accurate estimate of the produce that is to be computed for the money decree that has to be satisfied. We all know that in every tahsil there are lalkitab and other documents giving the yearly outturn per acre. We also know that in the different ilaqas with different qualities of soil and different grades of production, the revenue office is replete with the requisite information. All authenticated information in regard to these particulars is at the command of the revenue officers who are represented by the collector. Therefore they are in a much better position to verify these matters than the civil courts at the headquarters. With forty cases and more to be disposed of in a day and one hundred execution petitions to be dealt with the civil court cannot do justice to these proceedings. My learned friend who is a lawyer and has had sufficient experience of the working of civil courts fully realises the force of this. He must know that it is almost impossible for any civil court to go into all those complicated cases of computation and calculation while it is very easy for the revenue officers who have all those documents in their possession which are necessary for the purpose and who can go to the spot and take evidence and examine the nature of the soil and of the crops during their tours. I do not therefore see any harm if all this is done by the revenue court. The object of bringing this proposal before the House is simply to get at accuracy, efficiency and nothing else. Why should we mistrust the civil courts? When we can trust them in respect of civil suits involving thousands and lakhs of rupees, I do not think that in this respect alone we should have any misgivings about these proceedings.

It is all very well to quote the opinions of the collectors and commissioners to whom this Bill was circulated for expressing opinions. It is only natural for all collectors to be averse to this change, for, after all they have got a lot of work and this would add to that. It is, therefore, only in the normal course of things that they should be averse to any additional burden on their shoulders. There is another reason also why they should be averse to this proposal. Their disposal of the execution petitions can be appealed against to the commissioners and it is possible that the commissioners when disposing of the appeals may pass adverse remarks on the decisions of the revenue officers which may be detrimental to their interests. That is why these collectors do not approve of the proposal for the change.

Certain other arguments were advanced by the other side which are not of a convincing nature. It was said that it was more convenient for litigants to resort to civil courts which were stationary at headquarters than to be running after the collectors who will be always on tour. Rather the argument must be in favour of the proposed change. Because the revenue officers while on tour in that part of the ilaqa where the land is situated can examine it and also the records connected with it and would be in the best position to make calculations this is much more preferable. I do not think this would be injurious in any way to the interests of anybody. Generally the civil courts are over-worked and further they have to ask the revenue officers for reports and they have ultimately to depend upon the reports of revenue officers. As the matter at present is ultimately for the civil courts to decide, the revenue officers do not feel a sense of responsibility in preparing their reports in view of the fact that the civil courts are not bound to accept the reports of the revenue officers. It is in order to fix responsibility on the revenue officers that this change is proposed. By this change the collectors will feel greater sense of responsibility in the matter of accuracy of their reports. They will know that their decisions are appealable and will therefore be more careful in preparing the report. From every point of view the proposal is, in my opinion, a very salutary one and should therefore be agreed to. I will only urge once again that it is not because of any mistrust in the civil courts that this change is proposed to be made but because it is considered that the change is conducive to greater accuracy and efficiency.

Chaudhri Asadullah Khan (Sialkot, Muhammadan, Rural): The honourable member for Industries, Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri started by saying that it was a matter of indifference whether the civil courts decided this matter or the collectors decided it. That would show the real point of view of the honourable member on this point and the rest of his speech, in my opinion, is merely playing to the gallery. If he sincerely thinks that it is a matter of indifference whether the civil courts decided it or whether the collectors decided it, why should he worry about the transfer of jurisdiction in this matter to the collector's court? Then he says that the collectors are already over-worked.

Mr. President: The insinuation that in advancing certain arguments the honourable Mr. Mukand Lal Puri was playing to the gallery ascribes a motive and, therefore, should be withdrawn.

Chaudhri Asadullah Khan: I did not mean to offend anybody and I withdraw what I said if it has in any way displeased the honourable member. What I wanted to say was that the first part of his argument was really contradictory of the rest of his argument. The second part of his argument was that the collectors being over-worked already should not be entrusted with this additional work. There again in his very next argument he contradicted himself and he said that most of the criminal work now entrusted to the collectors is being done by additional officers appointed for this work as also revenue work by revenue officers who have taken off a lot of work from the shoulders of the collectors. So that in his first sentence he says that they are over-worked and in his second sentence he says that they are not overworked. Therefore his argument has no weight at all. He further says that this Bill is merely based on the whims of a party. I would say the opposition to this clause is based on the whims of a party, because if the thing is a matter of indifference, what else is it except the whim of a party to oppose this clause which says exactly the same thing as the honourable member says, a matter of indifference as to whether this court or the other court decides the case. Then he quoted the opinion of revenue officers. I would say that these officers being themselves interested parties because additional work is being given to them would naturally resent it and therefore their opinion would not amount to anything. But the opinions of those who are in favour, I am sure some of them have given opinions in favour of this clause—really count because in spite of the fact that these officers are being given additional work they still welcome it judging the importance of this work and on account of the real simplicity of procedure. Then he quoted the opinion of an Honourable Judge of the Honourable High Court who held that if the change would lead to simplicity of procedure he would welcome it. The Honourable Judge had the clause before him and therefore his saying that if this would lead to simplicity of procedure he welcomed it shows that in his heart of hearts he did feel that it would lead to simplicity of procedure; otherwise it was simple for him to have said that it would not lead to simplicity of procedure and therefore this clause was unnecessary. Then the honourable member said that this measure was based merely on sentimental reasons. I beg to differ from him even in that respect. It is not based on sentimental reasons. But it is based on practice which is already being observed and judged by us. What now happens is exactly the same as what will happen under this Bill when it becomes an Act. (Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath: Why ask for a change?) That is exactly what I am saying. This is no change. This is only giving judicial sanction to a practice which already prevails. (Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath: What is the necessity for it?) Therefore if what is already being done is palatable to those who are opposing this clause, why should they now say that it should not have legislative approval. This shows that it is not those who are favouring this clause who have a mistrust of the civil courts but it is those who are opposing this clause who have mistrust of the collectors. The reason why this clause is being introduced is not because there is any mistrust of civil courts but because the collectors are better conversant with matters of land. (Interruption). I do not say anything about the collectors' ability in deciding the case, what I am now submitting is that the collectors know about matters relating to land more than the civil courts. Therefore I would say that there is nothing in this clause which can be said to have been based on sentimental reasons or whims of a party. It is rather based on practical convention which is now being given judicial shape and I, therefore, say that the clause is a very important one and I support it.

Sardar Arjan Singh (Hoshiarpur and Kangra, Sikh, Rural): It would only be an exhibition of morbid mentality if anybody were to cast aspersions on one class of officers or another. To say that because judges are recruited from a certain class they are biased in favour of a certain class is as bad as to suggest that because collectors or revenue officers are recruited from another class they are inclined or have leanings to this class.

Mr. President: Did any one make such a suggestion?

Sardar Arjan Singh: Exactly; arguments were based on that.

Mr. President: Not, so far as I can recollect.

Sardar Arjan Singh: I think my friend said that there is an apprehension in the minds of those who are supporting this that these judicial officers have a bias (An honourable member: Distrust). Distrust or bias—I am using a milder word 'bias.' Therefore I say we should not cast any aspersions. As a matter of fact I think my friend suggested that as soon as collectors commenced to act judicially there would absolutely be no complaint and that they would not be showing any favour to any class. As a matter of fact he suggested that collectors had so far been acting in a haphazard manner or in a slipshod manner and he admitted that when responsibility is cast upon the collector by this statute, he would work judicially and evidence would be adduced and there is a provision for appeals against the order of the collector who will therefore apply his mind more clearly to the work before him. My friend has himself suggested that the work would now be done in a much better way and in a much more efficient way and that the procedure that is going to be adopted would certainly be a distinct improvement upon the procedure that is now in vogue. I, therefore, fail to understand why he used the word revolutionary in respect to the change. As has been explained the procedure is already there. The collectors are already as a matter of fact called upon by the civil courts to help them in deciding these matters. To say therefore that any revolutionary change is being introduced is certainly against facts. Therefore I think there has been some undue delay in the disposal of these cases on account of the dual control that is in existence. The judicial officers have to make a reference to the collectors. The collectors give their opinion and sometimes their opinion is accepted and sometimes it is not. Therefore there has been undue delay in this procedure and in order to do away with that procedure this clause has been suggested. I, therefore, support it.

Khan Sahib Chaudhri Riasat Ali (Gujranwala, Muhammadan, Rural): The difficulty about this clause is that the honourable member who has opposed clause 4 has forgotten that no rule so far has been framed under section 68 of the Civil Procedure Code. Had there been any rules, there would not have been the least anxiety to bring forward this clause. The object of this clause is the same as the object of that section as given in section 68. It is in one sentence and is as follows:—

The object of these provisions is well-known. In different parts of India the effect of sales in execution of decree was to transfer landed estates from the old families to modern speculators. The strong opinion was entertained by certain members of the Government of India that these results of the administration of civil justice were .....inexpedient and it was suggested that some procedure might be devised by which the chief executive officer of the district would be enabled to liquidate the debts of encumbered land-holders without the immediate sale of their estates and so to preserve the old landed gentry of the country.

I do not want to add a single sentence for the justification of the inclusion of this clause in this Bill. This alone will do. Now, Mr. Puri should also remember, being one of the best lawyers of the province, that sections 71 and 72 give the same powers which the proposed clause gives. I do not want to repeat the arguments, but I would only like to say that the word is now "may" and we want the word "shall" instead of "may." As I said the other day in another connection the word "may" has already run sufficiently its track and unless it is replaced by the word "shall" the results which we want to achieve cannot be achieved. He should also remember that under section 72 according to the rules framed by the local Government in No. 1 (d), dated 1st January 1909 the same provisions do exist. According to rule 18 of the High Court Rules and Orders, Part M, it is still there that even in those cases in which the land of an agriculturist cannot be permanently alienated or sold, the civil court might transfer its files for its temporary alienation to the collector. Even there as enunciated in rule 18 Part M of High Court Rules and Orders, the power still rests with the civil courts. But there is the discretion which we want to avoid. The principle is recognised even in both cases, in cases where the land belongs to a statutory agriculturist as well as in cases where the land does not belong to a statutory agriculturist. In both cases the civil court has the discretion to transfer the proceedings to a collector when ordering the attachment and temporary alienation of land.

[K. S. Ch. Riasat Ali.]

During the course of his argument the honourable member referred to the matter of appeals and I will refer him to the rule framed under 1-D of 1st January 1909. If under Section 72 of the Code of Civil Procedure 1908 the court is authorised to provide for the satisfaction of a decree by temporary alienation or management of land or of a share in land then any order passed by a gazetted subordinate of the collector in exercise of the authority conferred by the Court under this section shall be appealable to the collector and any order passed by the collector in exercise of such authority shall be appealable to the commissioner as an order appealable under section 13 of the Land Revenue Act. This action is provided by rule 1 as framed. When once the file is transferred to the court of the collector an appeal shall lie to the revenue authority and not to the district judge. That matter is not a new one.

Mr. President : That is not under discussion.

Khan Sahib Chaudhri Riasat Ali : The question of transfer is under discussion and the honourable member gave arguments which I have replied to. It has been said that the collector will be over-burdened. This was felt in the select committee and we decided that those powers should be delegated to some other revenue officer of the district. It was, therefore, that we adopted the definition of the word "collector" as given in this chapter. That was the only reason why we wanted to relieve him of the extra burden and why we adopted this definition as given in the Land Revenue Act. In this connection I will only quote a well-known persian verse :—

ہر کسے را کار سے ساندید

(Every body is meant for a particular job). If civil court is meant as a machine to pass decrees, the collector is certainly meant to—

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : To nullify them.

Khan Sahib Chaudhri Riasat Ali : To act as a ministerial officer. As I am not to repeat the argument advanced by others, I will read out the opinions straight away as given by certain officers. Justice Abdul Rashid says—

The provisions of section 3 of the Bill are also of a very salutary character. At present when temporary alienation of agricultural land has to be resorted to in the execution of a decree, the execution proceedings are partly carried out by the civil court and partly by the Collector.

Mr. President : The honourable member is now repeating his own arguments as well as the arguments of other members.

Khan Sahib Chaudhri Riasat Ali : The next sentence is not a repetition. That is a new thing and the honourable members could not have understood the reference unless I had repeated the whole—

If all these proceedings are transferred to the Collector, it would result in the execution proceedings being expedited.

This is the only sentence which I wanted to read. One other sentence is from the opinion of Mr. Justice Skemp :—

I approve of clauses 3 and 4 on the whole. Somewhat doubtfully of 3, but would welcome it experimentally as a possible improvement on the present dyarchie em.

Similar is the opinion of Mr. Justice Munroe, i. e., the simplification of procedure which is the subject of section 3 is very desirable. There is a larger bulk of opinions than those quoted by the honourable member which goes to show that this is the most salutary provision and the most desirable one under the circumstances. One sentence about conveyance and the suggestion that people will be asked to go to more distant places following the collector on tour and it will not be a convenient arrangement. While making this statement my honourable friends had only in view the interests of the decree-holders who mainly belong to cities and towns. As you know in a majority of cases judgment-debtors belong to rural areas and it will suit their convenience more if their cases are taken up in distant parts near their residences. In these days of financial stringency they cannot afford to pay for railway and motor fares to go to headquarters from their homes. With these words I support clause 4.

Khan Bahadur Mian Mushtaq Ahmad Gurmani (Nominated, non-official): My honourable friend, the member for Industries was not correct in saying that the clause under discussion is based on the whims of the Unionist Party. As a matter of fact, the honourable mover of the Bill has translated into practice the decision of this Honourable House by including this clause in his Bill. On the 17th March, 1933, I brought a cut motion to urge upon the Government the necessity of amending the existing law in order that the execution of civil court decrees involving temporary alienation of agricultural land be transferred to collector. The cut motion was passed by this Council without a division. The existing system is most objectionable and very defective. I do not intend to repeat the arguments which I advanced on the previous occasion, in favour of the proposed change but I would like to quote a few examples which will illustrate the defects of the present system and the hardship and injustice that it entails on the land owning judgment-debtors. In one case in Muzaffargarh district a decree of Rs. 83 was passed against an agricultural judgment-debtor, Rs. 9 were added to it as costs. The decree holder applied to the civil court for the temporary alienation of the judgment-debtor's land in satisfaction of the decree. The civil court sent the file to the collector for assessment of the annual net income of the judgment-debtor's land and for advising the period of temporary alienation which would satisfy the decree. The collector assessed the annual income of judgment-debtors' land at Rs. 131 and suggested the temporary alienation of his land for one year. The decree-holder refused to take the land on lease and requested the civil court to auction the lease. The civil court ordered the auction of the lease and the decree-holder got permission to bid in the auction. The results of this auction were astounding. The land was leased to the decree-holder for twenty years, the maximum time permissible under the law instead of one year as suggested by the collector. This case needs no comment. I leave it to the honourable members to judge for themselves the desirability or otherwise of the present system.

The Honourable Doctor Sir Gokul Chand Narang: What were the names of the parties?

Khan Bahadur Mian Mushtaq Ahmad Gurmani: I regret I have not brought this information with me here but I can supply it to the Honourable Minister later if he so desires.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : What court was it, and what was the name of the Judge ?

Khan Bahadur Mian Mushtaq Ahmad Gurmani : Court of the Sub-Judge at Leiah. I consider it undesirable to mention the name of the judge though I remember it but I can assure the Honourable Minister that he would be disappointed to know the name. If he insists I can tell him this much that the sub-judge was a co-religionist of his and a non-agriculturist.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : What were the names of the parties ?

Khan Bahadur Mian Mushtaq Ahmad Gurmani : I have already answered this question, but I can inform the Honourable Minister that the decree-holder was a non-agriculturist money-lender and the judgment-debtor was an agriculturist Muslim. I can, however, send all the detailed information along with the numbers of cases to the Honourable Minister if he is interested in the matter. Before I proceed further I make bold to say that I take full responsibility for the accuracy of my statements. In another case the amount of decree was Rs. 272, the collector assessed the annual income of the judgment-debtors' land at Rs. 41-6-6 per annum and recommended a temporary alienation for seven years but the lease was auctioned and the land was alienated for eighteen years. In another case the amount of the decree was Rs. 428, the collector suggested the judgment-debtor's land to be leased for three years assessing its income at Rs. 148 per annum but it was leased by the civil court for twelve years. I can give scores of such examples, but I do not wish to detain the House. I can, however, say without fear of contradiction that in 75 per cent. of cases the opinion of the collector is ignored by the civil courts. Sometime ago the High Court gave a ruling to the effect that the collectors were only acting, in this respect, as ministerial officers of the civil courts and that the civil courts were not bound to accept their advice in determining the period of temporary alienation in satisfaction of a decree. This ruling gave a latitude to the civil courts and their discretion has almost always been used in favour of the decree-holder. The civil courts have no means to assess the income of the land as has been pointed out by other speakers while the collector is in possession of all the revenue records and other material which is necessary for the purpose. His opinion is not arbitrary but is based on revenue records. The accuracy of the collector's assessment can only be challenged if the reliability of the revenue records is not believed. Such belief will no doubt shake the foundations of the entire revenue administration of the Government. It is desirable that the collector who is in a better position to assess the income of the land should be entrusted with the work of execution of decrees involving temporary alienation of land. It is wrong to say that the work of the collector would be increased by the proposed change ; it will as a matter of fact greatly reduce the duplication of work. The existing practice is that the civil courts send the files to the collector for assessing the period of temporary alienation, on receiving his opinion the decree-holder generally refuses to accept the collector's view and the civil courts send the file back to the collector for auctioning the lease. The decree-holder's mere refusal to accept the collector's proposal is considered a sufficient ground to reject it. The clause under discussion only aims at amending a wrong procedure which is open to grave abuse and serious mischief ; the proposed change provides for even justice between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor. A provision is made for appeals against the orders of the collectors to the commissioner. It is also provided that both these officers will act judicially in deciding these cases. My friends who are opposing this clause should have no misapprehension against these responsible officers.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : We have none.

Khan Bahadur Mian Mushtaq Ahmad Gurmani : I am glad to hear this and I hope you will withdraw your opposition to the clause. I support the motion before the House.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram (South-East Rohtak, non-Muhammadan, Rural) : I think the effect of the provision has been misunderstood by Mr. Mukand Lal Puri. The position is this. Either the collector's opinion is generally accepted by the civil courts or it is generally not accepted by the civil courts. If it is generally accepted by the civil courts, then it means that, generally speaking, the opinion of the collector is sound and if generally speaking the opinion of the collector is found to be sound by civil courts, there is no reason why Mr. Mukand Lal Puri should feel anxious about the execution of decrees being transferred to collectors. If his experience is that the opinions of the collectors are generally rejected then, I think, there is every reason to transfer execution of decrees to the collector. And the reason is this. The collector knows much better what the yield of the land is. It will be more convenient for these decrees to be dealt with finally on the revenue side than on the civil side. It has been suggested that the work of collectors will increase very much. So far as statutory agriculturists are concerned, execution of decrees in respect of agricultural land is even now transferred to the collector, though it is transferred to him only as a ministerial officer of the civil court. The only difference which the present provision makes is that instead of acting in the capacity of a ministerial officer, the collector will be acting judicially. But because the provision is specifically restricted to the case of statutory agricultural tribes and does not extend to the case of those who are not statutory agriculturists there will be no increase so far as the number of cases is concerned.

We have to judge what amount of increase in work will ensue by the mere fact that the collector will be acting judicially instead of ministerially. My own impression is that the work will not increase very much because the collector will have before him the testimony of revenue records which probably the parties will not care to contradict in nine cases out of ten. Again, if there is increase of work on the revenue side there will be a corresponding decrease in the work of civil courts. And if it becomes necessary to strengthen the revenue staff it will become easier to make a curtailment in the cadre of civil courts. Therefore neither for fear of increase of expenditure nor for fear of increase of staff should we be deterred from the course suggested by this clause.

There is one more thing to which I may draw the attention of the House. There will be greater despatch of work than there is now. At present a reference is first made to the collector. He makes an enquiry through his subordinates and when he receives their reports he sends up the reports with his own opinion to the civil court. The civil court has to examine these reports and hear the parties about them over again. If the work is to be decided finally on the revenue side then the collector will be able to dispose of the case at once in his own court. This will expedite the course of justice which is a point greatly in favour of the present provision. Again responsibility, practically final responsibility being cast on the collector, he will do the work with greater attention and greater care than he does now. Now he thinks that he is acting only as a ministerial officer and therefore probably he does not pay the same attention to the proceedings in his office as he would if he were made to act judicially. The added sense of responsibility for the final decision will be before his mind's eye and the decisions will be more just, fairer, better-considered and more expeditious than they are now. With these words I support the clause as it stands.

Mr. President : The question is—

That clause 4 as amended stand part of the Bill.

The motion was carried.

Clause 5.

Mr. A. V. Askwith (Home Secretary): The amendment I have to move is in the following terms:—

In clause 5 the words "to other land owned and possessed by" be omitted and in their place, the words "to the other resources of" be inserted.

I do not think that any long speech is necessary explaining or justifying this amendment. The simplest way of justifying it is to consider a simple and common type of case—the case of an agriculturist owning a very small holding, perhaps five acres only, who may be deriving a considerable income, perhaps of several hundreds of rupees a month, from another source. If the clause were to stand as in the original Bill, it would mean that this man's land would be entirely protected from alienation in execution of a decree. I suggest that there is no necessity for giving protection to a debtor of this kind, who is in possession of an adequate income from another source. I beg to move the amendment.

Mr. President : Clause under consideration amendment moved—

In clause 5 the words "to other land owned and possessed by" be omitted and in their place, the words "to the other resources of" be inserted.

The next amendment is in pari materia with this. So, it will be discussed with it, though it will be put to vote separately. It proposes that "in clause 5 the words 'to other land owned and possessed by' be omitted and in their place, the words 'to other sources of personal income of' be inserted."

Khan Bahadur Malik Zaman Mehdi Khan (Sheikhupura, Muhammadan, Rural): The members of the Government benches are fully aware that the majority of landowners in this province are very petty landowners holding very small patches of land. And it is in the interests of those persons that the other resources are omitted or are not added. Anybody who is acquainted with the general condition of the agricultural classes in this province will agree with me that with the exception of a few big landholders, all the petty zamindars have no other resources. As the proverb says—

Kiya nangi nahaygi aur kiya nachoregi.

Generally if one wants to take a bath he has to have a cloth for covering himself or herself. After he or she has done the bathing, he or she squeezes the cloth. But if the person has got nothing, what will he cover himself with or squeeze? In order to bring home the truth of this statement that the ordinary zamindars have got no other resources I would like to read from a certain pamphlet because it expresses the condition of zamindars in this province in better words than I can express. This pamphlet is called "Social Order" and the issue is dated the 10th November 1935. It is printed and published by S. Ghulam Asghar at the City Press, Allahabad and the editor is Mr. B. S. Gilani. The writer of this article is Mr. C. P. K. Fazal, M.A. This is how the passage reads—

His poverty (speaking of the small zamindar) his illiteracy, his crass indifference to reform and progress, his inert acquiescence in his present lot, his age-long addiction to superstitious and pernicious customs—

Mr. President : The honourable member is not relevant to the amendment before the House.

Khan Bahadur Malik Zaman Mehdi Khan : I am giving the reason why I oppose the amendment. The reason I was giving was that there were no other resources.

Mr. President : We are not concerned with the question whether there are any other resources.

Khan Bahadur Malik Zaman Mehdi Khan : I am going to prove that there are no other resources. If there are none where is the good of having a clause like this? I shall now turn to the holdings owned by an average zamindar. What I refer to now is based on the Board of Economic Enquiry's report. The Board's enquiry is held in different villages of the Punjab and that board itself is a non-official body under the patronage of Government. The enquiry relates to farm accounts. These accounts deal with the expenses of the farmer so far as they relate to cultivation and are often worked out on scientific lines, for example account is taken of interest, depreciation on the implements and plough cattle. The accounts are kept for over six or seven years. The tables at the beginning of the report give five years' summaries of gross income, expenditure and net income.

Mr. President : What is the honourable member driving at?

Khan Bahadur Malik Zaman Mehdi Khan : At the conclusion that these zamindars have got very small holdings and they have got no other income at all.

Mr. President : The honourable member is not relevant.

Khan Bahadur Malik Zaman Mehdi Khan : I will not say anything at all then, as I am not allowed to develop my argument.

Shaikh Abdul Ghani (West Punjab Towns, Muhammadan, Urban) : I think the clause as it stands does require an amendment because otherwise it would work very hard and I think it would not be very just to retain it in the Bill. For instance, a zamindar is drawing Rs. 3,000 as his personal salary and he has got only 200 bighas of land and he owes Rs. 20,000 as debt. Then his debtor is left only to proceed against him to the extent of the income of his land and his salary would remain untouched. That is very unjust and I think it was far from the mind of the proposer of this Bill to enact such an iniquity. So I would support the amendment in a way but my difficulty is that the wording of the amendment is not very happy "the other resources of the judgment debtor." This is ambiguous. If we were in a position to insert "personal" somewhere, I think that would be all right. Supposing a debtor has four sons and four of his sons are residing together and they make an income from different means, and it is not clear whether they are joint or separate, and supposing they are proceeded against for their father's debts. In that case it would be very hard on the father if all the income of the various sons were pooled together and all the four sons held responsible as owning so much income and it might work hard. The intention of the Government is quite clear. They want to bring in all the personal income of the man derived from any source. If that is the object and I think that should be the object, then it is for the learned proposer of the amendment to make it a bit clear by inserting the word "personal" so that the meaning might be quite clear to the courts.

Khan Sahib Chaudhri Riasat Ali (Gujranwala, Muhammadan, Rural): I only want to lay before you another aspect of the question. The honourable member who has preceded me has taken one extreme case and I want to take the other extreme. I am not imagining the case of a man who is getting Rs. 200, or Rs. 500 or Rs. 3,000 or Rs. 5,000 a month and who does not depend in the real sense of the word on income from land. I do not say as my friend has stated that there is any necessity of making any provision in his case, but take the other extreme case. There are cases in which peasant proprietors or those who are dependent mostly on agricultural produce have their cattle. They use that cattle for ploughing and when they are not required for that purpose they are used for conveyance or cartage or some other purpose and they will be included in this case. It will be argued that this man's income is so much from the fare which he gets for carting goods of people from one place to another by means of his plough cattle. Then it will be argued that this man depends to some extent or mainly on the income from "other resources". The danger if we take into consideration these words is that they might not exclude even those incomes which are very negligible as the income from sale of butter or milk. My fear is that if we take this extreme view on the one hand as compared with the view taken in regard to those who are drawing fat salaries the amendment must be opposed. If somehow or other something might be done to make the provision that these hard cases will not come within the purview of this amendment, in that case I do not think I will have a very serious objection to this amendment.

As to the principle of the amendment I need not quote from the Land Administration Manual, paragraph 255, where this principle is already accepted and it is provided that some land should be reserved for the man when he is thrown out of his holding or when he is deprived of the possession of land. The wording there is "enough should be excluded" and the misfortune is that this word "enough" has not been defined so far. As to the principle I submit that this is admitted and if some provision is made for the extreme cases which I have pointed out, I do not think then I will oppose the amendment, but as it is I am afraid I must oppose it.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri (Punjab Industries): A reference has been made to paragraph 255 of the Land Administration Manual as embodying the existing practice on the subject. I think it is necessary to place before the House precisely what that paragraph contains. That paragraph says :

Where the judgment-debtor is deprived of the cultivating occupancy of the transferred land enough should be excluded from the transfer to furnish at least a bare subsistence for himself and his family.

In all systems of law, debts take precedence over rights of maintenance of debtor and his family and even if there is an obligation to maintain a minor son or wife, that obligation is a personal one, but as far as the property of a debtor is concerned, payment of debts takes precedence over right of maintenance. This principle has equally been recognised by the Government in issuing their instructions to the revenue officer to keep sufficient land for maintenance, of their families "Where the judgment-debtor is deprived of the cultivating occupancy of the transferred land." The obligation of a person is to maintain his family by his personal exertions, and out of tenant's share of produce and not out of landlord's share of produce, and the direction to reserve some land is given in cases where tenant is also being deprived from earning his living as a tenant. No obligation to maintenance of family is recognised at present out of property, i.e., out of landlord's share. In this respect, the policy of Government has been to assure to the actual cultivator of the soil, maintenance for himself and his family up till the next harvest and a creditor or even the government if it wishes to attach the standing crops, can only attach them, subject to sufficient being left for subsistence of cultivator and his family up till the next harvest. But with respect to the landlord's share the Government has not so far taken up the attitude that the entire landlord's share is not available either for the Government or for the creditor or that a maintenance has to be provided out of it. This is exactly what is stated in paragraph 255 of the Land Administration Manual. If the collector at any time is going to make a lease of land the effect of which is to deprive the judgment-debtor of the actual cultivating rights it is then only that a direction is given to make some provision for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and his family. In the case of lease or temporary alienations which we are now considering, the important point to note is that it is always the capitalist's share, it is always the landlord's share which is being sold and not the tenants' share and out of that I submit there is absolutely no right of maintenance. The amendment proposed by the Government in this instance when it wants to substitute the word "resources of the judgment-debtor" in place of "other land owned by him," is I take it, calculated to bring the statute in harmony with present practice and to insist upon the collectors to take into consideration other income of judgment-debtors, derived from their labour, from the tenant's share and from all other sources. A debtor may be a retired military or other officer of Government in receipt of substantial pension, or may have received a substantial amount as provident fund. The House will agree that in considering any claim for subsistence, the collector should not and cannot possibly ignore possible income of judgment-debtor from such obvious sources. If a debtor referred to by the previous speaker is making an income of say Rs. 100 or even fifty or thirty rupees per mensem by cartage and transport, that is a circumstance to be taken into consideration in determining what land if any, is to be left to him for the maintenance of himself and his family. Or if a man is making some income by following his ancestral occupation of cultivation, whether he is a man cultivating 15 acres of non-occupancy land or 20 acres of occupancy land—a thing which is usually done and can be ascertained by a reference to the land revenue records,—then that fact will be taken into account. So, I most respectfully submit that the object of Government in adding these words is really to bring as far as it can, the present legislation in line with the existing practice, at any rate, so I have understood the object of this amendment to be. The addition of the word 'personal' would create unnecessary complications in a matter which otherwise is simple. Resources or sources of income can be ascertained very easily. If you introduce an additional word 'personal' that will have to be interpreted. Is 'personal' to be confined only to the income which may be obtained by the exertions of the judgment-debtor or insolvent, or is it to include also the income of his dependents for whom subsistence is claimed. It would be monstrous if the clause is calculated as it appears to do, to exclude even the income of those dependents by labour or salary, for whom claim for maintenance is advanced by the judgment-debtor. Supposing the members of the family are earning more than what is necessary for their maintenance. Is the income of such members, to be excluded by the addition of the word 'personal'. This could not be the intention but this may be the possible effect of using these words. Therefore do not make confusion worse compounded by adding any such words. In my opinion the word 'personal' is unnecessary and uncalled for and should not be added.

Pir Akbar Ali (Ferozepore, Muhammadan, Rural) (Urdu): I oppose the amendment moved by Government and request the House to retain the words adopted by the select committee. The amendment under consideration is most indefinite and vague. The words "other sources of personal income" may include income by unfair means such as theft. It may also include income derived by cart driving or keeping camels to be used on hire. If this amendment is adopted the future generations will accuse us of having passed an indefinite provision. Ordinarily the civil courts favour the plaintiff. I do not say that these courts are prejudiced in favour of creditors but what I mean to say is that it would be very easy for the creditor to create doubt the benefit of which is usually given to him. If this amendment is accepted it would create hardships for the zamindar rather than give protection to him. I therefore submit that the amendment should be rejected in favour of the original words "other land owned and possessed by" in the Bill.

Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan (Jullundur, Muhammadan, Rural) (Urdu): If the amendment of Government now under consideration is carried, it will defeat the object of the Bill. As a matter of fact civil courts as they are now constituted, are favourably inclined towards the creditors. They take a very lenient view of the case put forward by the creditor. Under the present circumstances it is very easy for him to adduce false evidence in order to prove that the debtor has got other sources of income as well, for instance he is grazing cattle or his sons are employed on lucrative posts or he is himself a cattle dealer. The creditor being a wealthy person will be in a position to prove one of these things. The other day I referred to one Nabia Gujar about whom it was proved in court that he also used to earn something out of cattle grazing and personal labour. Ninety-nine per cent. of the presiding judges of the civil courts and their staff belong to non-agriculturist classes of the province, and as such they help the sahkars a great deal. If this amendment is accepted, I am sure, it will defeat the real object of the Bill and not an inch of agricultural land in the province will be safe. Besides the zamindar is already very busy with his usual work and cannot afford to attend to any other subsidiary business. I therefore strongly oppose the amendment of the Government.

Mr. J. D. Anderson (Legal Remembrancer): I want to say only one or two words in connection with the amendments under consideration. I think there is general agreement in the House that an amendment of some kind is necessary. We have got two formulas before us, one is in that of the amendment proposed by Government, namely 'resources' and the other is 'personal income.' I think that the House in deciding which of these two formulas is the better or perhaps less undesirable should look at them from the point of view of the collector. The proceedings have now gone from the civil courts to the collector and the collector will, I think, be a man of commonsense with a good deal of sympathy towards the ordinary zamindar. Otherwise I do not see much point in making the change. As I see it the question is this, which formula is going to help the collector more. I admit that the word resource is a very wide term. The alternatives are either to use a very wide term which the collector will interpret in accordance with commonsense or to lay down a very long and elaborate formula which he will find it very difficult to interpret. If I may say so, my criticism of the words 'personal income' is that they fall between these two stools, these two alternatives. They are neither wide nor of sufficient detail really to be a guide for the collector. Speaking for myself I would much prefer as a collector to work with the word 'resources' rather than with the word 'personal income.'

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram (South-East Rohtak, non-Muhammadan, Rural): The reason why I am opposed to the amendment moved by Government is that the civil law, as it stands is overwhelmingly pro-creditor. I do not know the reasons why the law has this character. But the fact is that the law, as it stands, does favour the creditor very definitely and very distinctly. I will just draw the attention of the House to a couple of very instructive instances in this connection. There is a provision in the Civil Procedure Code that any adjustments which take place between the judgment-debtor and the creditor outside the court must be certified within ninety days in the court itself. If this adjustment or payment out of court is not certified to the court within ninety days, then, if the decree-holder comes to the court and makes an application for execution in respect of the whole amount due under the decree without taking account of the amount paid outside the court, no plea of payment will be allowed. This provision is obviously unjust and unfair. After all any payments that might have been made by the judgment-debtor outside the court ought, whether certified or not, to be taken into account if the decree-holder comes with a fresh application for execution in respect of the whole amount due to him under the decree. If I remember correctly the purport of this provision is that the decree-holder shall certify such payments or adjustments within ninety days. The obligation is, thus, cast upon the decree-holder and yet, if the decree-holder fails to discharge this obligation and makes a fresh application for execution for the whole amount, the judgment-debtor suffers the penalty for this failure, that is, he cannot put forward the plea that he had already made certain payments outside the court. That is an instance which shows that the civil law as it stands is pro-creditor and anti-debtor. That mistake has now been rectified so far as the Punjab is concerned by the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act. I will take another instance. Suppose a decree-holder makes an application for execution. He takes out a warrant and attaches property which does not belong to the judgment-debtor but belongs to somebody else. Cattle and houses are frequently attached which do not belong to the judgment-debtor but to some relation or friend of the judgment-debtor. The object generally is to bring as much pressure to bear on the judgment-debtor as possible so that his friends and relations may be equally interested in seeing the decretal amount paid. Now obviously the burden of proof should be upon the decree-holder to show that the property which he asserts to be that of the judgment-debtor does really belong to the judgment-debtor. But what happens is that the burden of proof is placed upon the person who files objections to the attachment of the property. Justice and common sense demand that the burden of proof should be upon the decree-holder to show that the property out of which he seeks to realise the amount due to him belongs to the judgment-debtor. Yet, as the law stands, the third party has to prove that the property which has been attached belongs to him and not to the judgment-debtor. These two instances ought to convince the House that the civil law is overwhelmingly pro-creditor. I may be allowed to quote another instance which will show to what absurd lengths this partiality for the creditor is carried. I remember a case in which agricultural land was attached. The land actually stood in the name of the son; and yet the courts, instead of proceeding on the usual presumption that the land belongs to the person in whose name it stands in the revenue records, proceeded to attach the land and made it over in mushtajri to the decree-holder. I think this third instance ought to convince any fair-minded person that the civil law is glaringly partial to the creditor class.

Under the circumstances it is absolutely essential that the law should be made as clear, unambiguous, and unequivocal as possible. It is with this object that we are opposing the amendment. The amendment as it stands says that a certain amount of land may be reserved for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and his family, but in doing so, regard shall be had to the "other resources" of the judgment-debtor. Now the expression "other resources" is very vague, indefinite and ambiguous. It may be interpreted by any court to mean almost anything. I want to know definitely what the position of Government is. Does the Government intend that the law should be allowed to remain in a nebulous condition placing the courts as well as the parties in the grip of uncertainty with regard to the real object and meaning of the clause as it stands at present? What is the connotation of the word 'resources'? We earnestly request the Government to make it perfectly clear whether they want the decree to be executed only against the judgment-debtor or also against the members of his family? Unless the words 'personal income' are allowed to replace the words 'other resources' it will be open to the court to say that the judgment-debtor has four sons, two of whom are serving in the army and can support the father and, therefore, no portion of his land should be reserved for the maintenance of himself and his family. If the present wording is allowed to stand the court can say that the salaries drawn by the sons must be included in the resources of the judgment-debtor. Does the Government intend that any income which is not personal income of the judgment-debtor should also be taken into account as an item of the resources of the judgment-debtor? If so, then does it or does it not mean that the Government is helping the creditor to have his decree executed not only against the judgment-debtor but also against his friends and relations? That is the crucial point and I earnestly request the Government to make the position quite clear to us. Does the Government want to help the creditor to an extent which will make a personal decree executable against friends and relations also of the judgment-debtor? We on our part want to make it quite clear that the resources which are not personal to the judgment-debtor will not in this indirect manner, be made available for the satisfaction of a decree, and that land, necessary for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and those of the members of his family dependent on him, will be reserved out of the total holding owned by him without taking such resources into account. Of course it is open to the Government to make the provision read as they propose to do under this amendment. But that amendment will necessarily and inevitably lead to ambiguity and wherever an ambiguity exists the court can interpret it in any way it likes. (Interruption). It does not matter whether it is courts or collectors. After all collectors also are human beings. The civil law being overwhelmingly pro-creditor the collectors may be inclined to interpret it in favour of the creditor and not the judgment-debtor. Let us hear what the Government has to say on this subject. Does the Government want the decree to be a personal liability of the judgment-debtor alone or does the Government want the decree to become a liability payable by every member who belongs to the family of the judgment-debtor, whether son, brother, nephew or wife?

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : When it is stated "other resources of the judgment debtor," what does it mean?

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : Why do you not make it clear? I want to place the law beyond all ambiguity. If "other resources" means only personal income, then why do you not adopt our amendment? But if you want to include under this expression anything over and above personal income, then please say it in so many words. Let us not play with words. The implication of the Government's amendment, as I have already submitted, may be either personal sources of income alone or even sources which are not personal to the judgment-debtor. As a matter of fact, Mr. Mukand

[R. B. Ch. Chhotu Ram.]

Lal Puri definitely stated in his speech that if a man had two sons serving as constables there was no reason why the income from salary drawn by those two sons should not be taken into account.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : May I say, Sir—of course I am not concerned to defend Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, but I am concerned to explain why I do not make an unnecessary speech. As I heard and understood Mr. Puri, he said that if a man had two sons earning something for themselves it would be unnecessary for the collector to exempt a portion of land in their interest.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : I can understand if Mr. Mukand Lal Puri only says that so far as those two sons are concerned, it cannot be urged and it should not be urged that the responsibility for their maintenance also is upon the father. That I can understand. But if the income of these two sons is to be taken into account when judging the extent or amount of the resources open to the judgment-debtor then I have a right to say that that income should be excluded, and Government ought to help in making the law clear and unambiguous in this behalf. If the Government does not make it clear, then difficulties of interpretation are bound to arise, and, as I have already submitted, according to the ordinary law of nature the weaker has to go to the wall, and the interpretation will, almost invariably, be in favour of the creditor and against the debtor.

I will also say a few words with regard to certain remarks made by Mr. Mukand Lal Puri. If I remember correctly what he said was that the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and his family cannot be allowed to take precedence of debts. I may draw the attention of Mr. Mukand Lal Puri as also of other members of the House that even in respect of the arrears of land revenue the maintenance of the defaulter and his family is to be provided for before the property belonging to the defaulter is attached. (Interruption) I may be allowed to read out, in this connection, the relevant portion of section 70 of the Land Revenue Act. It deals with the recovery of arrears of land revenue.

The distress and sale shall be conducted as nearly as may be in accordance with the law for the time being in force for the attachment and sale of moveable property under the decree of revenue court constituted under the Punjab Tenancy Act, 1887;

Provided that in addition to the particulars exempted by that law from liability to sale so much of the produce of the land of the defaulter as the collector thinks necessary for seed grain and for the subsistence until the harvest next following of the defaulter and his family and of any cattle exempted by that law shall be exempted from sale under this section.

Are we to attach greater sanctity to a debt than to an arrear of land revenue? Even when the question of the recovery of an arrear of land revenue comes up for consideration before the revenue officers they have to exempt sufficient amount of agricultural produce for the maintenance of the defaulter, his family and even his cattle. Under the present amendment which is to be moved by one of the members of my party we do not seek to secure anything more than the maintenance of the judgment-debtor himself and his family. We have excluded any provision for the cattle which are necessary for the pursuit of his ordinary profession, that is, which are necessary for the purposes of cultivation. Therefore, I beg to submit that if, even in the proceedings for the recovery of an arrear of land revenue, sufficient provision for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and his family has to be made, there is no reason why a similar provision should not be made when we are dealing with an ordinary debt due under an ordinary decree. I may also draw the attention of the members of the House to Standing Order 64 of the Financial Commissioner. That standing order definitely lays down that when land has to be alienated temporarily in execution of a decree sufficient amount of land should be reserved for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and his family. Even the form prescribed by the High Court has a column requiring the officer who makes an estimate of the income from land to state whether there are other means of income open to the judgment-debtor. It is in pursuance of this wish of the High Court indicated in this column that we propose to move an amendment that the presence or absence of other means of personal income available to the judgment-debtor for his own maintenance and the maintenance of those who are dependent on him, may be taken into account when deciding the question of reserving or not reserving any portion of the judgment-debtor's holding which is to be farmed out in execution of a decree. Mr. Mukand Lal Puri also urged that if a man owned only five acres in proprietary right and was also in possession of a larger area of an occupancy holding and a still larger area of a non-occupancy holding, there was no reason why the land comprised in the occupancy holding and the land comprised in his non-occupancy holding should not be taken into account. Here is a lawyer who must have put in over 20 years of practice. He suggests seriously on the floor of this House that even the land comprised in a non-occupancy holding should be taken into account. A man's occupancy holding can reasonably be taken into account while deciding the amount of land to be reserved from temporary alienation, but the land which he cultivates only on the sufferance of another owner and from which he can be ejected at any time should certainly not be taken into account. He may have 50 bighas this year; he may have not even an inch of that land for cultivation next year. So I beg to submit that if eminent lawyers of the standing of Mr. Mukand Lal Puri can make a mistake of that sort, why not collectors, why not inexperienced subordinate judges? Mr. Puri's mistake furnishes me with another argument which I can address to official benches with a request that they should not leave the law in a nebulous condition. Let the law be made definite and clear on this point, so that the officers who have to administer it may not feel any difficulty about the right interpretation of that law.

One argument that was put forward by Mr. Anderson was that now
 5 P.M. that the execution of civil decrees in respect of temporary alienation of land is going to be transferred to the revenue side, there is no reason to think that the collector will not be sympathetic towards the cultivating classes. He was of the opinion that the collector is very likely to be considerably sympathetic towards the cultivators. I will not suggest that the collector will be either pro-creditor or pro-cultivator, but, as I suggested just now, when lawyers of considerable experience can betray themselves into an error of the type into which Mr. Mukand Lal Puri betrayed himself, collectors may be expected to be more liable to make mistakes. They are not infallible. While the remedy is still in the hands of the legislature of making the law clear and definite, why should it leave it in a condition in which officers may find it difficult to interpret it correctly?

Under these circumstances I must oppose the amendment which has been moved on behalf of Government. I will certainly and strongly support the amendment which stands in the name of Pir Akbar Ali. The members of my party are definitely opposed to going beyond the sources of income which are personal to the judgment debtor (cheers).

Mr. President : Question is—

That in clause 3, the words "to other land owned and possessed by" be omitted.

The Council divided.

(After votes were taken, there arose a doubt as to how Chaudhri Nathwa Singh voted),

Mr. President : May I ask the honourable member Chaudhri Nathwa Singh, whether he voted for Ayes or Noes ?

Chaudhri Nathwa Singh : Government ke sath diya.

Mr. President : Then the honourable member voted for the Ayes. The result of the division is as follows :—Ayes, 38, Noes, 37.

PUNJAB LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

5TH SESSION OF THE 4TH PUNJAB LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

Tuesday, 26th November, 1935.

STARRED QUESTION AND ANSWER.

ROYALTY FROM PATHANKOT BAJRI AND STONE COMPANY.

*5179. Khwaja Muhammad Eusoof : Will the Honourable Revenue Member be pleased to state—

- (a) whether the Punjab Government enforced with effect from 1st February, 1934, the Punjab Minor Minerals Rules under notification No. 4945-R., dated the 23rd December, 1933 ;
- (b) whether it is a fact that the said rules were extended to the whole of the Punjab and under these rules the Government levied royalty on all minerals such as stone, bajri, sand, kankar, etc. ;
- (c) whether it is a fact that no royalty under the said rules is being realized from the Pathankot Bajri and Stone Company ;
- (d) whether Government is aware that the said company has sold about 20 lakh cubic feet of bajri and stone-metal last year ;
- (e) the reason for such a big concern like the said company having escaped the imposition of royalty ;
- (f) whether it is a fact that there are small quarries at Sarna and Jakolari railway stations near Pathankot and the Government is realizing royalty from them under the said rules ;
- (g) what Government proposes to do in the matter ?

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : I regret that the answer to this question is not yet ready.

THE PUNJAB DEBTORS' PROTECTION BILL.

Clause 5.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram (South-East Rohtak, non-Muhammadan, Rural) : I beg to move—

That in place of clause 5 as it stands at present the following shall be substituted :—

"Such portion of the judgment-debtor's land shall be exempted from temporary alienation as in the opinion of the Collector, having regard to the judgment-debtor's income from all sources, except such as is dependent on the will of another person, is sufficient to provide for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and the members of his family who are dependent on him."

As the members of the House will be able to recollect the exact form in which the clause stands at present is practically meaningless and therefore everybody was naturally anxious as to what should be done. I am glad to say that Government has been able to come to an agreement on a fresh clause being substituted for the clause as it stands at present. The wording may not be ideally perfect; it may not even be strictly legal phraseology. Still under the circumstances what could have been done has been done. We have been able to make certain concessions to secure the agreement of Government and Government has kindly made certain concessions to meet our views and feelings in the matter. The changes that the present amendment proposes to make are mainly two. One is that instead of making an allowance for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and his family, the clause as now worded purports to say that provision should be made for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and those members of his family who are actually dependent on him. Now everybody will admit that this is perfectly reasonable. The courts or the collector cannot be expected to reserve land even for the maintenance of those who are in receipt of independent income sufficient to maintain them. On the other hand Government has kindly consented to the proposal that instead of "resources" which was indefinite and vague we should have the words "sources of income not dependent on the will of another person." That will meet the objection which we had to the wording suggested in the Government amendment. If the judgment-debtor's sons or brothers or nephews or cousins are in service then as the income from the salaries of those persons will not be taken into account when making a reservation of land for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and his dependents, I think we ought to feel satisfied about it. The brother or nephew or son may be in receipt of a salary of Rs. 400 or Rs. 500 a month, but it is entirely dependent on his will whether he would or would not make any allowance for his father. He may retain the whole of his salary to himself or he may give something out of his salary to his father who is the judgment-debtor; but as such doles as may come from the son or nephew or brother will be dependent upon the sweet will of these relations, those doles will not be taken into account when making a reservation for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and his family. I have ventured on behalf of the zamindar members of the House to agree to this amendment. I hope they will kindly agree to this amendment being substituted for the clause as it stands at present.

Mr. President: Clause under consideration, amendment moved—

That in place of clause 5 as it stands at present the following shall be substituted:—

"Such portion of the judgment debtor's land shall be exempted from temporary alienation as in the opinion of the Collector, having regard to the judgement-debtor's income from all sources, except such as is dependent on the will of another person, is sufficient to provide for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and the members of his family who are dependent on him."

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri (Punjab Industries): One of the chief considerations urged by the Government and which Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram also conceded as correct, was that the income of the judgment-debtor and of those persons for whom subsistence was being claimed should be taken into consideration, while deciding the question of maintenance. All income which a person derives from service is dependent upon the will of the employer. If the employer chooses to continue to employ a servant, he continues to get the salary. Thus the income of a employee from salary is dependent upon the will of another, that is, his employer. Thus the income which a person gets, as a chaprasi, a bearer, a khansama or a driver of a bullock cart or a driver of a motor car—it is well-known that a large number of the members of the statutory agricultural tribes are motor car drivers—is dependent upon the will of his employer, although capacity to earn that income is always there. Would the collector, for instance, be able to take into consideration in determining his subsistence the amount which such a judgment-debtor is getting from his private employer be he an individual or a company? I am sure that this is not the intention of the mover. He does not wish to exclude any personal income which a person is able to earn by his labour and yet the addition of the words “not dependent upon the will of another” seems to lend itself to that interpretation. This, I submit is the danger in thrusting amendments before the House of which no notice has been given and which are proposed in this careless fashion. I put it to my learned friend, would not his amendment exclude the collector from taking into consideration the salary which a member of an agricultural tribe is deriving as a servant of another individual, that income of his being entirely dependent—as is the income from all private service—upon the will of the employer? That certainly is not the intention of the Government, if the Government may be presumed to be sticking still to the intentions expressed yesterday, nor I am sure, is it the intention of Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram to exclude the salary from private service of the judgment-debtor himself which, of course, would appear not to be excluded if this amendment were accepted.

Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath (Punjab landholders, General) : In the first place, as has been pointed out, I object to such an important amendment as this being thrust upon us with such a short notice. Secondly, I draw the attention of the House to the fact that the amendment as worded does not carry out the intention of the honourable mover as he announced it in his speech. Now, as the amendment stands, “except such as are dependent upon the will of another person,” indeed a wording like that will always encourage collusion between the judgment-debtor and his near relation. Supposing the judgment-debtor is a land owner, owning a small area of land and has a son who is an extra assistant commissioner. The natural course in the ordinary circumstances is that the court ought to presume that the son is able to support the father, but in collusion with him he alleges that the son does not give him a pie out of his income of 3 to 4 hundreds. That is the thing which this amendment encourages. I have the experience of some persons who are very avaricious and greedy and who come to me for monetary help, while I know that their sons hold high appointments. I ask them, why do you not seek the help of your son or brother who is drawing 3 to 4 hundred rupees a month? I therefore strongly oppose this amendment.

Shaikh Abdul Ghani (West Punjab Towns, Muhammadan, Urban) : It is a pity that an astute lawyer of the standing of Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri should come forward with an objection of this sort on the floor of this House and seriously urge it. He says that the object is to exclude service pay because it depends upon the will of another person. Nothing could be more removed from the truth. A man is entitled to his salary as a matter of right. Who can hold it back? Does it depend on the sweet will of the employer to pay him or not? Why are the civil courts there? You are simply confusing the thing. The fact is that the employer's volition has nothing to do, a man can be sued for the salary and a claim can be made against him in a court and a decree can be obtained. I am sorry that a palpable thing of this sort is not understood. (Interruption).

Mr. President : A member is not to be interrupted in his speech. If a question is to be asked it should be asked through the chair.

Shaikh Abdul Ghani : What I was submitting was that it is an absolute fallacy to state that a man's wages which are due are dependent on the will of the employer therefore that should be excluded. I do not think that a collector would be led away by such absurd theories of law. Another point urged by the party opposite was, supposing a man has a son who is working as an extra assistant commissioner and the father has not got a very great source of income. The son can shelter the father because his income is not to be included. That is the object of the motion and that is why we are moving it. We want that such income of the debtor should be excluded and only the personal income of the debtor should be set apart for the creditor. If the object of honourable members on that side of the House is that incomes of the members of families should be included even if only one of them is indebted, they are labouring under a very grave misapprehension.

Khan Sahib Chaudhri Riasat Ali (Gujranwala, Muhammadan, Rural) : I do not think I need repeat the arguments already advanced on the floor of this House, but there is one point to which reference has been made by Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri and which has not been replied to. He has laid a good deal of stress on the fact that amendments are thrust upon them without due notice. To this my reply is that it is their own fault. They have brought us to this position, otherwise there would have been no necessity of moving amendments with such short notice. Certain words were omitted on account of voting and when the question of replacing those words came, we could not carry any motion because of the voting of these gentlemen. The Government brought forward an amendment which failed and so did the amendment of Pir Akbar Ali. That is the reason why we have to move such amendments at such a short notice. They should be indebted to the mover of the Bill that he has filled up the gap and avoided an unnecessary and unnatural position by proposing an alternative clause for the present clause 5 which was rendered meaningless yesterday. As to the other point which the honourable member stated as to the pay of a private employee being taken into account, my answer is this : why should we take into consideration the pay of that person who cannot draw his pay whenever he likes, who can be out of service any moment? With these words I support the amendment.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit (Hoshiarpur, non-Muhammadan, Rural) : I sympathise with the honourable mover Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram and his supporters on their efforts to meet the difficult position which has been created. Unfortunately ideas have not been properly translated into language. The wording of the amendment is capable of many interpretations. These words which have been used "except such as is dependent on the will of another person" do not convey the full meaning of the mover. The rule of the law which we must remember is this that the speeches of the councillors and the framers of the law are not taken into consideration by the judges. They have to take the law as it stands. Now one interpretation which seems to be placed on this proposition is this that dependent means dependent voluntarily and involuntarily both. That is undoubtedly a real difficulty. You cannot possibly say that if I employ a person and he draws a salary that person is not dependent on my will as to whether he should be retained or not. The contention that has been put forward on the other side is that as a matter of right he would be entitled to the payment of Rs. 800, his salary, and therefore this consideration should not be taken into account. This interpretation will land the court into a very great difficulty as to how to interpret the words dependent on the will of another person. The words of an enactment should be such that they should not be capable of double meaning. They should be absolutely clear and these words are not clear. Therefore whatever is in the mind of Chaudhri Chhotu Ram should be made clear and whatever is in the mind of Government should also be made clear. There is no dispute with regard to the willingness of this side of the House to do what is intended to be done. What I am saying is this that this clause is undoubtedly of such double significance that every day the courts of law would be landed into difficulties and the object which the mover of the Bill and the Government has got in view is bound to fail on account of this double interpretation. We find that whenever a question of this kind, execution of decree, comes up, everybody will try to be dependent on the person against whom a decree is executed, grandfather, father, grand-uncles and all sorts of people would be brought in. How is the court going to investigate into this question of persons who are dependent upon him? How are these words going to be explained and interpreted by courts of law? The real thing is that confusion has been made worse confounded and instead of clarity and lucidity which ought to be one of the merits of a legislative enactment there has been introduced such phrases about which people will always be fighting. I would therefore respectfully ask the Legal Rememberancer and Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram, if they were sitting together and framing these clauses, that they would redraft it in such a way that the meaning is properly expressed.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : It has been contended by Mr. Mukand Lal Puri and Pandit Nanak Chand that the wording is not clear and it does not exactly convey the idea which was in my mind or in the mind of my colleagues. I think the language is quite clear and that is exactly the reason why it pinches the members on the opposite benches. They are always for ambiguities and uncertainties, so that all sorts of interpretations of the law may be open to them. I submit that the thing is absolutely clear now. Only those members of the family would be provided for by the reservation of land as are dependent upon the judgment-debtor. If the honourable members prefer the word family, they may have it. I personally think that the single word family is more vague and indefinite than the words "those members of his family who are dependent upon the judgment-debtor." The word family has been used in a statute of the legislature. I quoted the relevant section of that statute in this House. If the word family can be properly and accurately interpreted by courts or collectors, I see no reason why courts or collectors should fail to interpret correctly the words "those members of the family who are dependent on a judgment-debtor." The second important phrase is "the sources of income not dependent on the will of another person". This expression is said to be vague and indefinite. I think Mr. Puri suggested that the salary of a person, say, a motor car driver, may be dependent on the will of an employer. That is wrong. A motor car driver is in receipt of his salary for services rendered. The salary here is a matter of an agreement or a matter of contract, verbal or written; it is certainly not a matter which depends on the sweet will of the employer. The employer may be able to dispense with his services, but so long as he is in service, there is no question of a mere will in the matter of payment. If a person is not actually in service, then the question of his emoluments being taken into account in making allowance for the reservation of land does not arise. If there is anybody in the family who is actually employed and is in receipt of a salary, his salary will be taken into account to decide whether that member can be said to be dependent on the judgment-debtor or not. Of course, what we really wish to avoid is the fact to which expression was given by Raja Narendra Nath. He said that the judgment-debtor's son may be an extra assistant commissioner in receipt of 6 or 7 hundred rupees a month as his salary. Why in that case, he contended, should any land be reserved for the judgment-debtor? That is exactly what we want to avoid. The decree is against one particular individual and not against the whole family. The decree may be against A who may have a dozen or half a dozen members in his family. That decree should be executable only against A, and not against anybody else in the family. If the salaries of the members of the judgment-debtor's family are to be taken into account in deciding whether any land should or should not be reserved, then it is making that decree executable against everybody belonging to the family. That is the trouble which we wish to avoid. The language of the present amendment avoids that. Therefore it is acceptable to us, and it should also be acceptable to anybody who has a fair mind to bring to bear upon it.

Mr. President : As objection has been taken to the amending clause being moved without sufficient notice, I propose to put it to the House whether it should be allowed or not. I shall treat it as a new clause. The question is—

That this clause proposed to be substituted for clause 5 be taken into consideration.

The motion was carried.

Mr. President : The question is—

For clause 5, the following shall be substituted :—

- "5. Such portion of the judgment-debtor's land shall be exempted from temporary alienation as in the opinion of the Collector, having regard to the judgment-debtor's income from all sources, except such as is dependent on the will of another person, is sufficient to provide for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and the members of his family who are dependent on him.

The motion was carried.

Clause 6.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram (South-East Rohtak, non-Muhammadan, Rural): I move—

At the end of clause 6, after the words "shall be final", the following sentence be added:—

"The Commissioner when hearing appeals under this section shall be deemed to be acting judicially."

This is a necessary corollary of the judicial character of the collector when dealing with questions of temporary alienation of agricultural land. Having invested the collector with a judicial character we cannot withhold that character from the commissioner. If the collector is to act judicially in the disposal of cases in which temporary alienation of land is concerned, there is no reason why the commissioner should not act in the same capacity when dealing with appeals which come before him for disposal. I do not think this is an amendment which will be opposed by anybody in the House.

Mr. President: Clause under consideration, amendment moved---

At the end of clause 6, after the words "shall be final," the following sentence be added:—

"The Commissioner when hearing appeals under this section shall be deemed to be acting judicially."

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit: I have an amendment to clause 6. May I move it?

Mr. President: No. The honourable member's amendment may be discussed along with this amendment, but it will be voted upon separately.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit: I want to move my amendment and speak on it.

Mr. President: The honourable member may discuss his amendment without moving it. When several amendments raise different aspects of the same question, all of them may be discussed on one of them being moved. When the remaining amendments are called they will not be discussed, but voted upon, if desired.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit: Very well. I would like to say this that the word "judicially" is not very clear. In order to make its meaning clear some such words as these should be added, namely, "shall act in accordance with the provisions of the law applicable to the court from which the proceedings were transferred to him." It is not I think the object of the clause that there should be no right of audience, nor that there should be no right given to the parties concerned to appear and be heard in a judicial manner, lead evidence if necessary as is done before a sub-judge. The words I have suggested are taken from section 141 of the Land Revenue Act and they explain the word "judicially" in very clear language. No doubt remains that the collector shall be acting in the same manner as a sub-judge would have acted had the case remained with him. All that is sought by the Government and by the supporters of the Bill is that the rights enjoyed by the party before the sub-judge should be transferred to the collector and that the rights should not be curtailed in any way. That, I take it, is the object of putting in the word "judicially." The words I would like to be substituted would make the whole thing clear and would go nowhere beyond that. This is a penal provision of law and there should be no doubt as to its meaning. I trust that the honourable member Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram will accept these words instead of the words in his amendment.

Shaikh Abdul Ghani (West Punjab Towns, Muhammadans, Urban) : I rise to oppose the amendment and my reason is one of expediency. You can very well imagine what volume of work you would be throwing on the collector who is already overworked being entrusted with multifarious duties. In an ordinary civil court if a matter of this sort were to arise, the issues would be struck and a date would be fixed, a kacchi date as they call it, the parties would put in their list of witnesses, summons would issue and the whole procedure in the ordinary civil court would have to be gone into before the commissioner, according to the amendment which has been moved. It is not at all convenient for a collector, who is overworked, to be engaged in doing things that are done in a civil court proper. The object of the honourable mover of the Bill, I imagine, was that the whole procedure should be expedited. You would be putting a clog on the proceedings in the collector's court by saying in so many words that he should follow the procedure laid down in the Civil Procedure Code. We all know that that procedure is very technical and very dilatory. My submission is that the clause as originally proposed to the effect that everything should be judicial is quite sufficient. We should leave it to the discretion of the collector as to what particular procedure so far as justice requires he wants to adopt in a particular case. We should not tie his hands and force him to adopt the technical procedure which gives right of appeal and appeal from interlocutory order and all that, with all its hindrances, all its encumbrances and all its dilatoriness.

Mr. President : The question is—

That the following words be added at the end of clause 6 :—

'The Commissioner when hearing appeals under this section shall be deemed to be acting judicially.'

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit (Hoshiarpur, non-Muhammadan, Rural): I beg to move—

That for clause 6, the following be substituted :—

'The Collector when acting under sections 4 and 5 shall be deemed to be acting judicially and shall act in accordance with the provisions of law applicable to the court from which the proceedings were transferred to him and any party aggrieved by an order under section 4 or 5 shall have a right of appeal to the Commissioner who when hearing appeals under this section shall be deemed to be acting judicially and shall act in accordance with the provisions of law applicable to a civil court of appeal.'

Mr. President: I propose first to put the question whether clause 6, as it stands, be omitted. If that question is carried then I will put the question that the new clause should take its place.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit: Sir, I would suggest that the amendment be put first.

Mr. President: But the Parliamentary practice is otherwise.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd: If we observe the Parliamentary practice, we run a grave risk of having the original clause omitted and the other not passed.

Mr. President: I have no objection to follow the procedure suggested by the Leader of the House, if the whole House agrees.

That clauses 7 and 8 stand part of the Bill.

Clause 9.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram (South-East Rohtak, non-Muhammadan, Rural): I beg to move—

That in clause 9 for the words "anything to the contrary contained in any other enactment for the time being in force," the words "any custom to the contrary" be substituted.

The object of this amendment is to secure that the custom which had been in force in this province for generations should be allowed to stand as it was. During the last few years erroneous interpretations have been placed upon custom with the result that ancestral land which used to be immune from attachment in the execution of a decree passed against a previous holder became liable to be attached. A special custom was set up by the decree-holder, that special custom was held to have been proved and the courts naturally allowed ancestral property also to be attached in the execution of decree for the payment of debts incurred by the previous holder of that property. My object is that the old custom should be allowed to govern these cases. Ancestral property has been immune from attachment for a very long time. The growth of special custom is of recent origin, and is the result of an erroneous interpretation of custom. The judgment-debtor, generally speaking, is a poor man. He is unable to engage a capable lawyer who will be a match for the lawyer engaged by the decree-holder. The decree-holder can incur any amount of expenditure in order to gain his point. He can produce a number of witnesses to support the special custom set up by him. He can also obtain copies from here and there which will seem to support his claim. Therefore the courts which are bound to decide cases on the material on the file give a finding that a special custom has been proved. No special custom really exists. But the poverty and ignorance of the judgment-debtor results in a special custom being proved to the satisfaction of the courts. We know as a matter of fact that with regard to ancestral property custom was one and universal throughout the province. Ancestral property is not supposed to be inherited by the son from the father. A very eminent judge and jurist, Sir Meredyth Plowden, expounded the theory which we all know as the agnatic theory. After an exhaustive examination of the custom which prevailed in the various tracts of the province he came to the conclusion that agricultural tribes in this province are strict followers of the agnatic theory, one characteristic of which is that ancestral property is regarded as not being inherited by the son from the father but from the common ancestor. One main incident of ancestral property was that the holder for the time being was not regarded as an absolute owner. His position was midway between the position of a widow and the position of an absolute owner. There were definite and well recognized restrictions on his power of disposal of property. He could not have alienated ancestral land which happened to be held by him for the time being except for valid necessity. This restriction on the power of the holder's disposal of ancestral property was incidental to and a direct result of the agnatic theory. The special custom which is sometimes pleaded in courts and found by them in favour of the decree-holder goes right against the grain of the agnatic theory. Therefore if a man belongs to a tribe which is usually governed by custom in matters of succession it must be conceded that any ancestral property which is to pass to his heirs shall be immune from attachment in the execution of a decree passed for the debts incurred by him in his personal capacity. Unless the debts incurred by a person are specifically charged upon the ancestral property they cannot be realized from that property. If any creditor wants to realize the amount of money lent by him to another person from the property of that person, then he should take precaution to charge that amount upon the property from which he wants to realize the money. If he fails to take that precaution then he cannot later on be allowed to seek the alienation of the property held by his debtor. If a person who owns property is not free to dispose of that property as he likes during his lifetime, it will be unfair and unjust to allow that property to be alienated after his death for the debt which he incurred during his lifetime. Therefore my amendment ought to appeal to every member of this House as a reasonable amendment. It does not seek to do anything which was not already being done in this province. What I seek to secure by means of this amendment is to bring the practice of courts in the future into line with the undoubted custom of the province. These devices of setting up special customs are really attempts to whittle down the custom as it has existed for generations. It will be only fair and equitable that members of agricultural tribes or of other tribes which are governed in matters of succession by custom should be secured in the rights which they have enjoyed so far.

I may in this connection, draw the attention of the House to 4 Punjab Record of 1913. It is a Full Bench ruling of the Chief Court in which it has been distinctly and unambiguously recognized that ancestral property in the hands of a reversioner or next holder is not liable to attachment in the execution of a decree for debt incurred by the previous holder. With your permission I will just read the heading of that ruling—

"Held that where a male proprietor, governed by customary rules, has contracted a just debt and dies leaving ancestral landed property, such property is not liable in the hands of the next holder in respect of such debt, unless the debt had been expressly charged on the property.

"Held consequently, that a person who has obtained a simple money decree for such a debt against the debtor himself or his representatives, has no right to execute it against the ancestral land, once in the debtor's possession, which has passed into the hands of the next holder under customary law."

The words used in this ruling leave no room for doubt that debts not specifically charged upon ancestral property cannot be recovered by the attachment of that property when that property has once passed into the hands of the next holder. It is immaterial whether the debts were actually due from the original borrower. It is entirely immaterial whether those debts were just debts and were incurred for necessity. All that is needed to exempt ancestral property from attachment is that those debts should not have been specifically charged upon that property. So long as the lender fails to take the precaution of having the amount lent by him charged upon the property, he cannot be allowed to recover those debts from the alienation of that property if it is ancestral. If the property from which a decree-holder seeks to recover the amount due under a decree is not ancestral, then that property will be liable to attachment and temporary alienation in the case of a statutory agriculturist and liable to permanent alienation in the case of a man who is an agriculturist but does not belong to a statutory agricultural tribe. Such being the case, I hope the House will consider the amendment which I have moved as a perfectly reasonable one and will extend its support to it.

Mr. President : Question is—

That in clause 9, for the words "anything to the contrary contained in any other enactment for the time being in force" the words "any custom to the contrary" be substituted.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram (South-East Rohtak, Non-Muhammadan, Rural) : I move—

That in clause 9, line 7, between the words "attachment" and "in" the words "or sale" be inserted.

No speech is necessary.

Mr. President : Clause under consideration, amendment moved—

That in clause 9, line 7, between the words "attachment" and "in" the words "or sale" be inserted.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri (Punjab Industries) : The object of this amendment appears to be to make utterly ridiculous, what originally is on the face of it absurd and when I use that language I mean it, and in this respect, I am only reiterating the opinion of those who are much abler than myself and who can claim much greater experience. What is the object of Rao Bahadur Chhotu Ram's amendment? The addition of the word "sale" appears to be designed or at any rate to have the effect of wiping out after his death all the mortgages of ancestral land which a member of an agricultural tribe may have effected during his lifetime. Punjab Record 4 of 1913, which is no longer the law and which is wrongly assumed by the mover and his friends to embody even the rule of customary law, on this point, as it has been superseded by a fuller bench ruling Punjab Record 17 of 1919, does not apply to mortgaged property. Punjab Record 4 of 1919 lays down clearly that the land of a person governed by customary law is not liable to attachment in the hands of the next holder if it has not been charged or mortgaged by him during his lifetime. So that, if the last holder has himself created a charge on it, that is not affected, or touched even according to Punjab Record 4 of 1913. The addition of the words "or sale," unless intended to apply to mortgages, is ridiculous and redundant, because sale must be preceded by attachment. The object of adding the words "or sale" could only be to include cases for which attachment is not necessary and where a decree-holder may proceed to sell without attachment, for example, in case of mortgage decrees.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : May I put a question to the speaker through you, Sir? Can a mortgage not be attached?

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : If there is a mortgage decree it is not necessary to attach the property over again, because in a mortgage decree the court orders the sale of the property and a fresh attachment is not necessary. But in the case of simple money decree where there is no mortgage, property has first to be attached and then brought up for sale. Therefore the object of this amendment, if there is any intelligible object at all, can only be to include within its purview the mortgage transactions.

Pir Akbar Ali : No, absolutely not.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : Even without these words, the mortgage transactions were not excluded, but the addition of these words could only be intended to emphasise that mortgages were also not exempt. Otherwise the addition of these words; is, I repeat, meaningless and redundant.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : One word by way of reply. The object and the language of the clause are quite clear. What is intended is to prevent the attachment and sale of ancestral property in the execution of a decree for a debt incurred by a previous holder. A simple money-decree is the only object which is intended to be covered by this language and nothing more.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : May I ask the honourable member a question ? I am really seeking light. Might I ask, what is the use of adding the words " or sale " ?

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : Because in certain cases sale proceedings may be adopted without attaching the land in question.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : How can it happen ?

Shaikh Abdul Ghani : What is there to prevent a court proceeding all at once against the property and putting it up to auction ? Is there anything in the Civil Procedure Code to debar this ? Any court might have resort to it. The result would be that there would be a very serious flaw in the clause as it now stands and it is very necessary that these words " or sale " be added.

Mr. President : The question asked was whether the honourable members who are supporting the amendment can point out any law under which a sale can take place without attachment proceedings. If there is any law, the honourable member may point out.

Mr. Labh Singh : Provisions of the Civil Procedure Code also apply to the revenue courts.

Mr. President : Very well, I will put the amendment to the vote of the House. The question is—

" That in clause 9, line 7, between the words " attachment " and " in " the words, " or sale " be inserted."

The motion was lost.

Shaikh Abdul Ghani : May I now point out the provisions of the law ? At least the House should know that the amendment proposed by the leader of my party was not frivolous.

" By attachment and sale or by sale without attachment of any property."

That is the way of proceeding against the property. This is section 61 of the Civil Procedure Code. They all laughed and made me the laughing stock when I said that this could be done. This is a serious mistake made in misapprehension of the law.

Mr. President : Question is—

That clause 9 as amended stand part of the Bill.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd (Finance Member) : I ought to explain the attitude of the Government with regard to this clause. Government would have been prepared to consider a clause which had the effect of preventing parties from pleading a special custom contrary to the general customary law on the subject provided that it did this and no more and provided that creditors who had lent money on the basis of the existing customary law as laid down by the courts were given reasonable opportunities to recover their money before this new law came into force. But to achieve this object is very difficult. What is proposed in the original Bill would require further examination of the customary law and would require consultation with the Honourable Judges of the High Court. For this purpose we have not had time, we tried actually to bring into shape an amendment to this clause which would achieve the object of the mover. Up till now we have failed to do so although very considerable work has been put into the attempt. If there had been more time, Government would have been prepared to consider any reasonable amendment of this clause put forward by the honourable mover. As things are, we must oppose this.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri (Punjab Industries) : The clause as it stands amended by this Council exempts ancestral property in the hands of the Punjabis from the payment of the debts of the person from whom they got that property. The first point to note is that as enacted it is not confined to persons following customary law. It extends to every one. It extends to Hindus and Sikhs who follow Hindu law, Muhammadans who follow Muhammadan law, Christians, Budhists, Jews, Europeans and Anglo-Indians who are governed by Indian Succession Act or their personal laws. Secondly, it is not confined to "land" only. It extends to property of all kinds, whether it is movable or immovable, whether amongst movables it consists of mares, horses and bullocks, motor cars or money, jewellery, furniture or utensils and amongst immovables whether it consists of houses or land or vacant sites or factories including both proprietary and mortgagee rights. It extends to everything. Therefore this section is as far removed from Punjab Record 4 of 1913, as the two poles. The clause as it stands now, after having been thoroughly considered in the select committee with the ability and intelligence available to the majority of the select committee and after having been improved in the Council, by the talented majority led by Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram has attained the present form, in which to describe it by any other word than 'absurd,' would not be doing justice to it. Would it be possible for any person in the Punjab, after this is enacted to carry on any lending or borrowing, when the payment is made contingent upon the continuance of the life of the borrower? Again, this disability is being created with retrospective effect, and all credits given, amounting in some cases to lakhs and even millions are jeopardised, because if they happen to die, the debt can not be recovered from their property in the hands of their sons. Again, this clause is no respecter of persons or institutions. Neither banks nor companies are excluded and some of the big joint stock banks may at once bid good-bye to a large portion of their debts, if this clause is enforced. This is what the Council has enacted. Let us, however, understand what Punjab Record 4 of 1913 is. Punjab Record 4 of 1913 is, as I have said, confined to land only and does not at all apply to property of any other kind. Now, if the word "property" were substituted in place of "land" in the rule enunciated in Punjab Record 4 of 1913, as has been done in this clause, would you believe that my property, my house at Lahore would be exempt from attachment for debts?

[ R. B. Mr. Mukand Lal Puri. ]

It may surprise my honourable and learned friends, who call us urban-minded, who call us people engaged in money-lending transactions, that people sitting on these benches have perhaps more connection with land and its cultivation and rural areas than some of those who claim to be their protagonists. My family members have been owners of land, owners, I do not wish to guess, of far larger areas of land which is no doubt true but owners for much longer time also extending over centuries than most of those who now claim to be the real agriculturists. And it would surprise Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram if he were told that in the matter of inheritance I am governed by custom and so are the other members of my caste governed by custom because we form a village community. In fact at the present day our caste people are owners of the whole village, holding land on ancestral shares and everyone else who resides in that village is a non-proprietor or a kamin. The effect of substitution of the word "property" for "land" would be to exempt my house at Lahore from liability to discharge my debts after my death, even if the section had been confined, as it is not, to persons governed by customary law. I do not wish to be dishonest. No one should be permitted to enact laws for me or with respect to my property which are based on such rank dishonesty. Apart from this, who would care to lend me money, if my property, the entire property which I own, is thus exempted from liability for payment of my debts? Would not my credit be reduced to zero? I do not wish that Chaudhri Chhotu Ram should drag me down to his level. A statutory agriculturist may choose, under the misguided advice of his so-called friends, to reduce his credit to a vanishing point and to be content to be a hewer of wood and drawer of water. The trader and the industrialist has no such desire. This certainly was not contemplated by those who laid the rule in Punjab Record 4 of 1913 and certainly it does not appear to be the intention of the Government. Again, the present section does not exempt ancestral property even if the borrower has mortgaged it, or created a charge upon it himself. Punjab Record 4 of 1913 distinctly lays down that if the owner has created a charge upon it that charge will not be obliterated by his death. The clause as framed, however, does not exempt even mortgagee rights. Therefore the present clause even if it were confined to persons following customary law only, extends beyond measure the effect of Punjab Record 4 of 1913. Let us, however, consider if there are any sound reasons which are impelling this Council or for the matter of that the Government to make the rule laid down in Punjab Record 4 of 1913 of universal application, with respect to persons who are governed by custom. What are the grounds which have induced the Government to legislate on a matter which is entirely a matter governed by rules of custom in this province. Have they made enquiries which lead them to think that the rule laid down in Punjab Record 4 of 1913 is the correct rule and should be applied to the whole of Punjab, irrespective of tribe or locality? If there is one thing certain about custom, it is that it varies from tribe to tribe and from locality to locality. Have any judges, or settlement officers individually or collectively expressed such an opinion? Have any representations been made to Government based on the evidence of ritaj-i'am or wajib-ul-arzes or other documents recording custom, or has any material in any form come to the knowledge of the Government that there was such a general and universal rule of custom in the Punjab and that rule of custom was in consonance with Punjab Record 4 of 1913? Or is it simply because it favours the debtors, that it should be resuscitated and enforced? The rules of custom in this province are not to be found in any statute and are not of universal or general application, but as I have already said, custom varies from tribe to tribe, from district to district, even from tahsil to tahsil, and even in the same tahsil, different tribes follow different customs. In Punjab Record 4 of 1913, three judges laid down the rule enunciated above. Within five years the rule laid down in Punjab Record 4 of 1913 was restated. It was, if I may say so, abrogated by a Full Bench of the High Court consisting of five judges and that judgment is reported as Punjab Record No. 17 of 1919 F. B. The Bench was specially constituted to consider whether the rule in Punjab Record 4 of 1913 was a rule of universal application or whether it was like other customary rules confined to the tribe and locality and dependent upon the ascertainment of the local custom which is the only correct method of determining what the custom in a particular locality is. And the judges who gave that opinion are some of the most eminent judges who have adorned the High Court Bench. They were :—The Honourable Sir Henry Rattigan, Kt., Chief Justice,—he was the Chief Justice in those days—the Honourable Mr. Justice Chevis, the Honourable Mr. Justice Scott-Smith, the Honourable Mr. Justice leRossignol and the Honourable Mr. Justice Broadway. And they laid down in 1919 that the decision given in 1913 was correct but they pointed out that in that very judgment the learned judges had distinctly laid down that it did not prevent a party from showing that a different custom existed in any particular tribe or locality. Two separate judgments were written, one by the Honourable Mr. Justice Chevis with which three other judges concurred and another by the Honourable Mr. Justice leRossignol who while he agreed with the other judges, wrote a separate judgment to the effect that Punjab Record 4 of 1913 could not be based on any universal custom and that such an unjust rule, opposed to laws of all civilised countries could never be the custom of the Punjab, as the Punjab custom is usually just, and that rule in Punjab Record 4 of 1913 had been enunciated deductively without any enquiry into real custom, but as it had been in force for a few years, on the principle of stare decisis, he would not like to vary it, although he was of opinion that if an enquiry into custom were made, the rule discovered would be that contrary to the one enunciated in Punjab Record 4 of 1913. He did not choose to give a different answer to that given by his other four colleagues, whose main judgment was written by the Honourable Mr. Justice Chevis. He observed :—

“The nature of the holding of a male proprietor governed by custom has often been discussed, and I do not think it necessary to enter into a fresh discussion. For the reasons already given in 4 Punjab Records 1913, I would hold that the decision given in that judgment is a correct exposition of the general rule. But it is always open to a litigant to plead special custom, and I would hold that the above ruling does not cover and (as the concluding paragraph of Punjab Record 4 of 1913 shows) does not purport to cover cases in which the creditor can prove that by special custom the person in possession of ancestral property which it is sought to attach is the legal representative of the deceased debtor and that the property is deemed to be the property of the said debtor.”

Thus these five English judges—I do not wish to read from the judgment of the Honourable Mr. Justice leRossignol who thought that the Punjab Record 4 of 1913 which was contrary to the rule of law prevalent in any civilised community in the world could not be the custom of this province, but agreed with the other judges in thinking that since this rule had continued to exist for five years it should be allowed to exist—but all the judges held that it had always been and should be open to a party to prove that this custom did not exist in a particular community or locality. This judgment was pronounced as long ago as 1919 even before the Morley Minto reforms. For sixteen years the rule of custom which has held the field, which has been recognized as the law of the land is not Punjab Record 4 of 1913 but the judgment in Punjab Record 17 of 1919 F. B. given unanimously by five of the most illustrious judges who adorned the High Court Bench. How can you, under the pretence of putting on the Statute Book an existing rule or practice, attempt to enforce Punjab Record 4 of 1913 and ignore Punjab Record 17 of 1919? Who has told the Punjab Government that Punjab Record 17 of 1919 is wrong? Nobody has ever suggested or can suggest that it is in any way unjust, unfair, or inequitable. Therefore the argument that so far as this section tries to enact the rule laid down in Punjab Record 4 of 1913 it is only an attempt to codify an existing rule, is entirely wrong inasmuch as the existing practice is that embodied in Punjab Record 17 of 1919, which is different from the rule of Punjab Record 4 of 1913. Therefore the existing practice is against making this rule universal or even extending its scope. Again it is well known that in no other system of law is an heir entitled to get the assets of a person unless he undertakes the liability to pay his debts. Under Hindu Law it is the pious obligation of a son to pay his father's and grandfather's debts. That pious obligation is confined to the assets which he receives from his father. It is well known that according to Hindu Law a Hindu son who takes the assets, and does not pay the debts is doomed to perdition. What is the Muslim law? The Muslim law, as every lawyer, nay even, a lay member of the House conversant with shara, would bear me out is exactly the same, that is, on the death of a Muslim, only one thing takes precedence over his debts, that is, expenses which may be incurred for his funeral. After that come the debts, and after debts have been satisfied come the legacies and then come the heirs. I need not quote references from Mulla's Muhammadan Law or Wilson or Amir Ali's treatise on Muslim law. They are all here for any one to see. In fact it is a textbook proposition which is known to every student of Muslim Law. Thus under both Hindu and Muhammadan law no one is allowed to take the assets of a person unless he takes the liability for debts, and that is the English law as well, and that is, if I may quote the words of the Honourable Mr. Justice leRossignol in Punjab Record 17 of 1919, "the law of all the countries in the civilised world." The question therefore arises, is the custom of this province different? I repeat that there is no general customary law of this province and no one can deny, that custom varies from district to district and from tribe to tribe. If among some tribes daughters are preferred to collaterals with respect to self-acquired property in others collaterals of a certain degree take preference. And the determination of the custom depends upon the entry in the riwaj-i-am.

Pir Akbar Ali : On a point of order. Is the honourable member in order in discussing succession to self-acquired property when we are considering succession to ancestral property?

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri: It is a point of disorder and not a point of order. I was merely giving a simple illustration which must be familiar to all honourable members and which, I thought, even my learned friend, the Pir Sahib, would understand. Let me give a simpler illustration. Does he not know that with respect to ancestral property also custom among the Arains for instance, differs from the custom among the Jats or Rajputs, the custom which exists among the Jats of Gujranwala district may be and is different from the custom which prevails among the Jats of Amritsar and other districts?

Pir Akbar Ali: Again, Sir, is the honourable member, who is in possession of the House, in order in referring to a point of order raised by another honourable member as a point of disorder? Does it lie within his rights to say so?

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri: I take the fullest responsibility for pointing out that obvious fact. I wish to point out that if the Government are desirous of carrying out any general reform with respect to custom, to find out and to enact some universal rules of custom, they ought to take up the subject of codification of entire custom in all seriousness, because on almost every point governed by the rule of custom, the custom varies. The codification of custom may or may not be necessary or desirable, but a naked attempt, to evade payment of just debts should not be disguised as an attempt to codify an existing practice or a rule of custom. Hindus and Muslims in this province are governed by their personal laws, unless they are shown to be governed by some custom. If no custom is found to exist, they are governed by their personal law which, both in the case of Hindu and Muhammadan law, insists upon the heir paying the debts of the deceased out of his assets. Custom, which in some respects closely follows personal law, recognizes the same rule in some districts and tribes. Take for instance the agricultural tribes of Kangra district. The Riwaj-i-am of the Hindus who are governed by customary law in that district lays down that no one can take the assets of his father unless he pays his debts. It is definitely so recorded in their Riwaj-i-am, which is a code of tribal custom of the district. Cases have arisen amongst the Hindus of agricultural tribes of the Kangra district following customary law as to whether in the matter of payment of debts they are governed by the rule laid down by Punjab Record 4 of 1913, and the judges, after enquiry, have come to the conclusion that they are not. In 1934 Lahore 707 (All India Reporter), the Honourable Mr. Justice Abdul Rashid held that "according to the Riwaj-i-am of the Kangra district sons are bound to discharge the debts of their father even though it may involve attachment or sale of ancestral property". It is important to note that at the time of the last settlement, when the Riwaj-i-Am was being revised, these people were told by the settlement officer of the existence of the rule laid down in Punjab Record 4 of 1913, and they were asked whether they would like to be governed by their old custom or by Punjab Record 4 of 1913, and they asserted that a son is entitled to the assets of the father only if he undertakes the responsibility for the payment of his liabilities. The Honourable Judge of the High Court has particularly noted this fact in his judgment. With respect to these honest people, what right has Chaudhri Chhotu Ram to say that in future these people shall be dishonest; or that their custom is different from the custom recorded in their Riwaj-i-Am, that their custom is different from the custom which governs them now or that their custom is different from what it is judicially ascertained to be, or that it is different from the rule of Hindus—a faith which they profess? But unfortunately for this province, in a particular tahsil of the Rohtak district to which the mover of the Bill belongs, I mean the Sonepat tahsil, a similar adjudication in the matter of custom has been made and it has been held that sons take assets subject to payment of liabilities, but since in that part of the country the payment of debts is no longer considered honourable under the new philosophy preached by Chaudhri Chhotu Ram, an attempt is being here made to remove this liability from his kinsmen of Rohtak district. But it is not only in the tahsil of Sonepat, it is not only in the Kangra district, but in Jhang, Jullundur, and Gurdaspur, similar customs have been judicially ascertained to exist; and I ask what reason or justification is there for the Government or for Chaudhri Chhotu Ram to say that these people are not governed by the custom which is in consonance with their personal law, and which is in consonance with equity and justice, and which enquiry has shown to prevail amongst them?

Let me put before you another point of view. I think it will particularly appeal to my friend Nawab Muhammad Hayat Qureshi. In this Council Muslims have several times asserted that Muslims should be governed by Muslim law and have gone to the length of stating that the Muslims custom should be abrogated by Muslim law. I remember the pious enthusiasm of my friend Pir Akbar Ali on this point and of others also in several debates. That was the issue, you will remember, Sir, at the discussion which took place on the Kalra Impartible Estate Bill. I heard dissertations from Pir Akbar Ali and others who said that they were opposed to it because it created a kind of estate which was repugnant to the principles of Islam and that they did not want any extension of the principle of custom. Here is a custom judicially ascertained among the Sayads of Jhang district that debts take precedence of rights of heir, a custom found by courts to exist and which is also in consonance with Islamic law. Do the Muslim members wish that a rule should be enunciated by this Council with respect to the Sayads of Jhang, the descendants of prophet, a rule different from the rule which has been found to exist amongst them from of old and which is different from the rule which applies to all Muslims? I am not merely at this stage talking of the extension of this rule to persons who are governed by Muslim law, but I am confining my remarks to the persons who are governed ordinarily by customary law. A person who is ordinarily governed by customary law in certain matters may and does follow Muhammadan law in certain other respects. Ordinarily personal law is superseded by custom in certain matters only, and in other respects personal law is followed. I say this rule of Muhammadan law regarding debts is not abrogated by custom amongst the Sayads of Jhang district, and with respect to them the courts have found that they follow the more just, more fair and more equitable and sensible rule of Muslim law. With a view to evade payment of debts, Chaudhri Chhotu Ram, behind the back of the true Muslims of the Jhang district, wants to legislate for them that in the matter of their debts this rule of the Muslims which is also recognised by their custom will be abrogated because some person from Rohtak wants it. Therefore, I respectfully submit that no case has been at all made out except the desire not to pay debts, except a desire to nullify just decrees passed by courts for changing the rules of customary law of this province. The indebtedness legislation has been designed in other provinces and was originally initiated by the Government with a view to alleviate cases of distress, but it was never intended that it should help the propertied classes to evade the payment of their debts. Therefore, I submit that before the customary law of this province is allowed to be interfered with piecemeal, a case should be made out for the change on the merits. What are the reasons for thus interfering with custom in this matter? The Punjab Legislative Council has not so far legislated on any rule of substantive customary law.

For the last sixteen years the rule prevalent has been the rule enunciated at the time of Sir Henry Rattigan with the assistance of his four colleagues. What is the reason for changing the law? The Honourable Mr. Justice Dalip Singh, in his opinion, points out that if it is a matter of principle and not of policy, he is strongly opposed to this section. There is no principle underlying this section except a desire to escape a just liability; and as for policy; the only policy actuating the opposite benches is "to wipe out the entire existing debt". But I should like the Government before it commits itself to any change of this type to enunciate its policy which has induced it to give even a qualified support to this clause, unless it be in sympathy with the policy of expropriation of the mover of the Bill. I am not in sympathy with this policy and am strongly opposed to it, and I believe that every true well-wisher of the province, who looks far ahead and not to the immediate present, would not encourage a legislation of this type. I respectfully submit that there is absolutely no justification for this clause, which is neither based on the existing custom nor on the existing case law nor has any foundation in either of the personal laws which are prevalent in this province amongst the Hindus, Muhammadans or Christians, nor is it justified on any grounds of equity, justice or common sense.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : I will be very brief in my reply. Mr. Mukand Lal Puri has suggested that if this clause is carried, then nobody will be able to borrow even a small sum of Rs. 500.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : May I add one word with your permission? I have not stated that the next holder includes the widow and the daughter too.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : Barring the period of the last fifteen or sixteen years at the utmost, the universal law of the land was that ancestral property in the case of a subsequent holder was not available for the liquidation of a previous holder's debt, and yet people were able to borrow Rs. 500, Rs. 5,000 and even Rs. 50,000. Therefore, if this provision brings the law into line with what it was, say, fifteen years ago, no cataclysmic results as predicted by my friend will ensue.

Another point to which attention was drawn by Mr. Puri was that 4 Punjab Record of 1913 only related to land, while the present provision covers the case of not only agricultural land but also other classes of property. It is a well understood principle that a court can only take cognizance of matters which are before it. The actual case which was before the court related to land and, therefore, they could not possibly have said anything about non-landed property. However my friend is, I am sure, well aware of the general custom of the province as embodied in the Rattigan's Digest that ancestral property is immune from attachment in the execution of a decree against a previous holder. The theory, as I pointed out in my opening speech, is that ancestral property is not inherited by a subsequent holder from his father but from the common ancestor. Therefore the objection raised by Mr. Puri that 4 Punjab Record of 1913 related only to land and therefore this provision also should have been confined only to land, does not possess any weight.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : Does the agnatic theory apply to your gold watch? (laughter).

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : If it is ancestral property, it does.

My friend also put forward an objection that under no system of law was a subsequent holder absolved from paying his father's debt. He made a reference to the Hindu law saying that it was the pious duty of every Hindu son to discharge the debts of his father. He also made a reference to the Muslim law that unless the debts of a deceased person were discharged, he was not likely to go to heaven. (An honourable member : No.). Anyway, he said that it was the duty of the successors of a deceased Muslim to pay off the debts of the deceased. Fortunately or unfortunately we are being governed by a system of civil law which is neither Hindu nor Muhammadan law. When we appealed to the benches opposite that they should accept the Hindu law on damdupat, they refused to accept it. (An honourable member : We accepted it.) No, you did not. Therefore my friends on the other side cannot be allowed to take advantage of solitary injunctions of Hindu law on one point and isolated injunctions of Muslims law on another point. If they want to have the Hindu law, let them have it as a whole. If they want the Muslim law, let them have it as a whole. (Interruption). These interruptions, I submit, are most undignified. I never interrupted when the members on the other side were speaking. We are being governed by a system of civil law which is neither Hindu law nor Muslim law. For better or for worse we are being governed by a system of customary law and may allow ourselves to continue to be governed by that law. In matters of inheritance, succession, adoption, etc., we are governed by custom which has the force of civil law. So far as immunity from attachment of ancestral property in the circumstances to which this provision relates is concerned, custom was universal throughout the Punjab before this theory of special custom came into existence. In this connection I may draw the attention of honourable members to an incident which happened in the days of Maharaja Ranjit Singh. A map of India was placed before him. Certain patches of it were coloured red. "What is this?" asked the Maharaja. The attendant by his side replied that the red patches indicated British territory. The Maharaja said quietly, "In a little time the whole map will be "red. The moral which I wish the House to draw from this incident is that if this special custom is allowed to grow, then the universal custom will disappear and special custom will take the place of the well-recognised custom in each district of the province for the reasons which I gave in my opening speech today. With these words I resume my seat.

Mr. President : The question is—

That clause 2 as amended stand part of the bill.

Clause 10.

Mr. President : Clause 10.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri (Punjab Industries): Sir, clause 10 provides :

Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any other enactment for the time being in force :—

- (1) Standing crops other than cotton and sugarcane shall not be liable to attachment or sale in the execution of a decree ;
- (2) Standing trees shall not be liable to sale in execution of a decree or an order of a court.

Now, this is the last and final touch on the whole scheme of legislation calculated to wipe out debts in their entirety which is embodied in this Bill. After having made all the property of a judgment debtor, which is of a tangible character immune from attachment or sale, the attempt here is to make immune from sale that small portion of property which was so far immune and which could be attached and which could not be easily concealed. Land cannot be sold under the Land Alienation Act. Lease of agricultural land for 20 years has been given the go-by under the guise of making a provision of subsistence for the judgment-debtor and his family, which in ordinary cases would be enough to exhaust all his land. Houses are already exempted under section 60 and its amendment by Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act, and the moveable property, as everyone is aware, whether in the shape of cash or other articles, is in the best of cases never available for the creditor, is proverbially elusive, as it is so easily concealed. The only incentive to prevent such concealment was the provision for attachment of person. By the abolition of arrest against members of statutory agricultural tribes, moveable property has already been placed beyond the reach of the creditor. The last clause exempted ancestral property, but even if that clause were not there, the circle of protection against the debtor of statutory agricultural tribes was well nigh complete. Of his moveable property, the standing crops and trees, again, subject to certain exemptions, were the only two things which were capable of attachment. Now, with respect to standing crops I have already read out to the House, when opposing the consideration of the report, what the effect of section 60 of the Civil Procedure Code read with section 70, proviso, of the Land Revenue Act is. I placed before you a quotation from the Rules and Orders of the High Court which is also reproduced in the Financial Commissioners' circular as to what the effect of those provisions is, that in the case of persons who are agriculturists so much of their standing crop as is necessary for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and his family, and for the seed grain and for the subsistence of their cattle till the next harvest, is already immune from attachment or sale. When that is already immune, what else does the learned proposer want to exempt, except to demonstrate, if I may repeat what I said the other day, his complete victory? It was with respect to these provisions that the Registrar of Co-operative Societies pointed out that if this exemption is added to the already existing and other proposed exemptions, this reduces the security of the judgment-debtor to a vanishing point, an opinion which was endorsed by Honourable the Financial Commissioner. The same opinion was expressed by a Muslim Economist of the Hailey College. For the mere sake of keeping appearances Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram should not have proposed this clause. But he is in no mood to listen to any ideas of fairness, and that shows the real intentions of the legislation.

Another matter to which attention ought to be drawn is this. When the Land Alienation Act was passed, the question arose as to what property is exempt from attachment or sale, and considerable controversy arose in courts as to what was land and what was not land, and as long ago as 1905—the Land Alienation Act you remember was first passed in the year 1900—in the Punjab Record 14 of 1905, Sir William Clarke, the Chief Judge, held that a proprietor's share of standing crops is not land within the definition of section 2 of the Punjab Land Alienation Act, 1900, and can therefore be sold in execution of a decree. Again, it has been held by the Chief Court as well as by the High Court, Honourable Mr. Justice Scot Smith held in 5 Lahore, 385, sitting with Honourable Justice Forde, that the trees growing on agricultural land are not land within the meaning of section 2 of that act. Apart altogether from the merits of the proposal, apart altogether from its injustice, this is, I assert, another attempt—whether the Government will see or will see it not,—of extending the scope of the Land Alienation Act to the benefit of the debtor. It is not as if these decisions had been given recently. As long ago as 1905, thirty years ago, the question was raised whether standing crops should be immune from attachment or should not be immune under the Land Alienation Act, and the courts decided that they were not exempt from attachment. Similarly with respect to trees. Now if Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram wishes to ask this House to pass a legislation which does away with the effect of this interpretation of the Punjab Land Alienation Act, with a view to benefiting the debtor and to the detriment of the creditor, is he not asking this House and the Government to extend the provisions of the Land Alienation Act by nullifying the interpretation placed upon it by courts, and which has held the field unchallenged ever since the Land Alienation Act was passed? Is he not circumventing the Government, and compelling it to go back on its oft-declared policy to which the Finance Member even expressed adherence in the course of the debate that it will not extend or curtail the scope of the Land Alienation Act so far as it relates to the relations between the creditor and the debtor? It is immaterial what reason is given for this amendment, whether it is economic or frankly a proposal to extend the principles of the Land Alienation Act, if the effect is to displace the existing practice and override the decisions of the courts. The incontrovertible fact is that if this section is enacted, the present practice, based on interpretations of the provisions of the Land Alienation Act by the highest court, will be changed to the detriment of the creditor. This is, again, another instance where the Government is being made to accept propositions and principles contrary to its declared policy. With respect to standing crops, the reason given by the other side for exempting them from attachment is that attachment will diminish the value of crops as the caretaker or the sapurdar is not likely to look after the crops properly, and therefore the crops will deteriorate in value. That is a wrong statement of fact and has neither any apriori ground nor experience to support this bald assertion. The decree holder is anxious to realise his money and the person who has got an eye on realisation of money, is he likely to allow the property to deteriorate? He will look after it more carefully than the judgment-debtor. Therefore that argument is absolutely fallacious. If that argument were true, then why confine it to cotton only? It was stated the other day by Mr. Bhagat Ram, the honourable member from Jullundur, that potatoes and half a dozen other crops could be named which are of such a character that they are less liable to deterioration than the two crops proposed to be exempted. If the two particular crops are exempted, the debtor agriculturists will not cultivate these two crops, and thus in their case, it will again result in total exemption of their crops. I must refer to another aspect also, i.e., that some landlords are also opposed to it. If standing crops are exempted, how is the landlord to realise his rent in cash from the tenants? The tenantry of this province generally do not possess any other property except the standing crops, and the landlord, whose rent is in arrears, has no other means of realising his rent except by attachment of the standing crops. I strongly oppose the clause.

Chaudhri Muhammad Abdul Rahman Khan (Jullundur, Muhammadan, Rural) (Urdu): Under the existing law the standing crops are liable to attachment in execution of a decree provided some sufficient allowance is made for the judgment-debtor's family. But it has been provided in this Bill that all crops other than cotton and sugarcane shall not be liable to attachment in execution of a decree. I do not see any reason why an exception in case of cotton and sugarcane is being made. Both these crops are very important. The zamindar pays land revenue out of the proceeds of the sugarcane crop. He gets merely his due for the labour he spends on this crop. The cotton crop is barely sufficient for his personal use. He grows only so much cotton as is necessary for preparing his wearing apparels. Besides, after rahi, rains set in and spoil standing crops whether attached or otherwise. I therefore submit that all crops including even cotton and sugarcane, whether standing or harvested, should not be liable to attachment in execution. With these words I support the clause under consideration.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd (Finance Member): I must make the Government's position with regard to this clause quite clear. The Government must oppose the clause in toto. With regard to attachment of standing crops, the law, I think, is fairly well-known to most members of the House. There is nothing whatever to compel the courts to put standing crops in charge of a sapurdar and, subject to such conditions as may be imposed by the court either in the order of attachment or in a subsequent order, the judgment-debtor may tend, cut, gather and store the produce and do any other act necessary for maturing and preserving the crop. This is order 21 rule 45 sub-rule (2). So that normally one would expect—and so far as my experience goes, it is the normal procedure—that the owner of the crop must remain in charge. I think it is quite unnecessary for the preservation of the crop to provide that it shall be free from attachment. In addition to that the list of property belonging to an agriculturist judgment-debtor, which is already free from attachment under the law, is a very long one indeed. His necessary wearing apparel, cooking vessels, bed and bedding, personal ornaments, which are required by religion to be worn by females, are not liable to attachment; and implements of husbandry, cattle and seed grains such as are sufficient to enable him to earn his livelihood and such other agricultural produce or class of agricultural produce as the collector may think necessary for the subsistence, until the next harvest following, of the judgment-debtor, his family; and cattle are also exempt, and so on. It therefore seems unnecessary to exempt standing crops also. But with regard to trees, I understand that the proposed amendment of the law has been caused by that judgment of the High Court in 1935 to which reference has already been made. With regard to that it would seem fair that trees standing on land which is protected under the Alienation of Land Act from sale should receive the same degree of protection as the land itself. One member of this House has already received permission to introduce a Bill to amend the Punjab Alienation of Land Act so as to ensure that trees go with the land in cases where the land is protected. Whether the Bill will achieve that object or not remains to be seen, but that Bill is likely to come before the House. The Government is itself even considering the propriety of introducing a short measure of their own dealing with that matter with reference to the recent full bench ruling of the Lahore High Court in A. I. R. 1935 Lahore, page 202. The legislation would take the form of a Bill amending the Punjab Alienation of Land Act 1900. In the meantime pending completion of the examination which Government are at present making, they must oppose the proposals in this clause of the Bill which is before the House, as in certain types of cases these proposals would be likely to produce unexpected and anomalous results (hear, hear).

Shrimati Lekhwati Jain (North-East Towns, non-Muhammadan, Urban) (Urdu): I rise to oppose the clause now under consideration for I consider it to be detrimental even to the interests of the zamindars themselves. It has been provided in this clause that standing trees and standing crops other than cotton and sugarcane shall not be liable to attachment for sale in execution of a decree. This means that cotton and sugarcane will be liable to attachment in execution of a decree. These are two important crops; and, if this clause is accepted, I am sure it will change the mentality of the zamindars, and they will probably cease sowing these crops altogether. There is another point also to which I should like to draw the attention of the House. Supposing a landlord does not give his tenant his dues. How is the latter, if he brings a suit against the landlord, going to benefit by this clause? He will not be able to have his decree executed against his landlord. In short my submission is that such a clause should not be incorporated in the Bill. To say the truth in this House is very difficult, for all honourable members do not like it.

Mr. President : The honourable member will please withdraw that remark. She should not cast an aspersion on the House.

Shrimati Lekhwati Jain : I withdraw it. I am sorry. What I meant to say was that all the honourable members on the opposite benches opposed this clause and also said that I wanted to suck the blood of poor zamindars and that I had no sympathy with them. Often Bills and resolutions moved in this House are rejected by the opposite benches by such arguments as that they are against the Hindu Dharm or the Muslim faith and that their religion is in danger on account of these. But even after pointing out all the harm that will be done if this clause is accepted and enforced no protest has been raised against it. According to this clause the sahu-kars cannot attach the land, houses, cattle and other property of the zamindars in satisfaction of their decrees. I ask the honourable Chaudhri Sahib to tell us how the sahu-kars will be able to satisfy their decrees. With these words I oppose the motion under consideration.

Kanwar Mamraj Singh Chohan (Ambala-oam-Simla, non-Muham-madan, Rural) (Urdu) : I have stood up to say a few words in support of this clause. I am a zamindar and myself get all the work connected with agriculture done. I am not like many other zamindars who depend upon tenants for tilling their land and getting from them their laghan. I till the land with my own hands and invest my labour, time and capital in it. I know and realise the difficulties which confront the zamindars. Really the honourable Chaudhri Sahib deserves all praise and congratulations for moving this clause. This clause, which has been so vehemently opposed by these benches, not only protect the small holders from the sahu-kars but it also affords protection to them from the big landlords. The big landlords are often more dangerous to the interests of the small holders than the sahu-kars. Big landlords have power, influence and sometimes also hooligans attached to them. They with the help of all these instruments of coercion can prove more detrimental to the agriculturists. This clause aims at protecting the crops and trees belonging to the zamindars from attachment. Those honourable members who think that by this clause the judgment-debtors will be able to sell their standing crops to some other persons are wrong. They only put a wrong construction on the meaning of the clause. This argument might be right in their opinion but so far as I am concerned it is absolutely wrong. When a creditor gets the information that the judgment-debtor is about to sell his crops he at once proceeds to a civil court and obtains an injunction order under section 29 prohibiting the judgment-debtor from selling his crops. Under section 29 an injunction order can be issued to a judgment-debtor not to remove his crops whether standing or cut from the fields. After a crop has been cut it has to be kept in the fields at least for a month before it is thrashed and the grain separated from chaf. As regards cotton and sugarcane they cannot be allowed to be protected so long as they are standing. I approached Chaudhri Sahib and told him that these two crops should be excepted for otherwise they will remain a cause of continuous litigation and quarrel between the creditors and debtors. He agreed to my proposal and made them an exception. The remaining crops which cannot be attached according to this clause are protected for the time they remain standing but as soon as they have been cut and made marketable they become liable to be attached in execution of a decree. As such no one should have any objection against the acceptance of this clause. The next part of this clause is with regard to standing trees. The principle underlying this part of the clause is also the same as the one underlying its first part. A fully grown up tree can sell for a greater amount than a tree which is yet tender. A shisham tree of 20 years of age can be sold for Rs. 50 and in some cases for Rs. 100, but a young shisham tree will not fetch more than Rs. 2 or Rs. 3. Sometimes standing trees of tender age are cut down to satisfy a decree. Under this clause it would become impossible for the creditor to do so. Then, if a zamindar cuts down a tree with the intention of selling it, the creditor on getting the information will be in a position to get it attached. As such this clause is on the whole not in any way detrimental to the interests of the creditors. The real purpose of this clause is to save the crops from being wasted. Sometimes the sahuikars get an injunction order issued to the judgment-debtors not to remove the standing crops. The judgment-debtors in obedience to the order of the court let the crops remain standing in the fields and do not cut it, and the sahuikars also do not try to get them attached and cut. In this way the crops are allowed to remain in the field for a much longer time than is usual and the grains drop down in the fields causing loss to the judgment-debtor as well as the decree-holder. In order to save the crops from such losses this clause has been incorporated in the body of this Bill. The zamindars will be afforded protection from useless litigation which is already a cause of great trouble to them. If the zamindars are protected from useless botheration and expensive litigation it would be of great help to them. With these words I support the clause under consideration.

Lala Bhagat Ram (Jullundur-cum-Ludhiana, non-Muhammadan, Rural) (Urdu): I have also got some land and I till it with my own hand and I know all that is practised by the zamindars with regard to their crops. I am aware that often the zamindars sell their standing crops. Potatoes, red chillies, sweet potatoes, arvi, etc., are such crops which are sold even while they are standing in the fields. All kinds of vegetables are also sold while they are in the fields. In this clause cotton and sugarcane are the two standing crops which can be attached. As regards cotton, if it is allowed to stand in the field for a longer time than necessary then the cotton pods fall down and cause a good deal of loss to the zamindars. In the present case when the creditors have the power of getting cotton crop attached the loss will be theirs if they allowed it to remain in the field for a longer time than necessary. In this clause those crops which ought to have been made liable to attachment have been made an exception and those crops which ought not to have been made liable to attachment have been made liable to attachment. Only those crops have been protected from attachment which could have been of use to the creditors while those crops which could cause loss to the decree-holders have been exempted from the liability of attachment.

As regards the standing trees an honourable member said that they have been exempted from the liability of attachment because often they are attached and cut while still young causing too much loss to the judgment-debtor. In part (2) of the clause nowhere has it been said that the trees which are fully grown may be attached and sold. The honourable member had said that a tree of 20 years of age fetches more price than a young tree. This meant that he was suggesting that grown up trees may be made liable for sale but in the clause itself there is nowhere stated that fully grown up trees will be liable for sale. As such it appears that the purpose underlying this clause is quite different from that of the honourable member. To me the clause appears to be absolutely meaningless.

This legislation is a sample of the unjust and severe laws that will be imposed upon us by the majority community, which is going to govern this province under the new constitution. An honourable member of this House was saying in the lobby that it was the tradition of his forefathers not to pay back the loan which they incurred from anybody.

My honourable friend Rai Bahadur Mukand Lal Puri has very lucidly pointed out in his speech that already no facilities exist for the sahukars to recover their debts. The house or the agricultural land of the zamindar cannot be possessed by the sahukar in execution of a decree. The land can be attached and alienated only temporarily for a period of twenty years after exempting such portion of the land as may be sufficient for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and his family. If some amount of land had been definitely fixed for this purpose, it would have been much better. For instance, twenty bighas of land could be set aside for this sake. It is very vague and indefinite to say that such portion of the land be exempted from attachment or temporary alienation as may be sufficient for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor and his family. A zamindar can easily increase his expenses and say that the whole of his land is insufficient for his subsistence. The bigger a zamindar the greater will be his requirements and the land required for the maintenance of his family will naturally be much larger. Thus in that case no amount of land will be attached. Now the clause under discussion proposes that standing crops and standing trees shall not be liable to attachment or sale in the execution of a decree. I am really at a loss to understand how the sahukar will realize any money and recover his debts, if all avenues are closed. It will really be very hard and cruel on him. The law should treat everybody alike. It has been argued that the object of this measure is to help the poor. But the condition of the sahukar also is quite changed now and he is as poor as the zamindar. He deserves as much pity as anybody else. Previously, if a zamindar owed forty rupees, the creditor could get from him at least five or six rupees; but in the presence of such provisions and laws it will be impossible for the sahukar to recover anything. If this law had been made ten years before, the condition of the sahukar to-day might have been different. He might not have advanced his money to the zamindars. By lending money to them he has been reduced to poverty. His condition to-day is worse than that of the zamindars. I, therefore, ask, if the purpose of this Bill is to help the poor, why has the sahukar been neglected? It is quite just and fair that some sort of provision should be made for him, too. Our government is well-known for its sense of justice and equity. If the promoters of this Bill are bidding good-bye to their wisdom and sense of proportion, I fervently hope that government will not bid farewell to its proverbial sense of justice, and be a party to this measure. With these words, I strongly oppose the amendment under discussion.

Lala Chetan Anand (West Punjab Towns, non-Muhammadan, Urban) (Urdu) I rise to invite the attention of the House to another important point in this connexion. In our districts of Multan and Lyallpur the government has given land to people on lease. But it has not given any proprietary rights to them. The result is that that land cannot even be attached or temporarily alienated in execution of a decree. Now, if the sahukar is unable to sell standing crops and standing trees in the execution of a decree as is proposed by this amendment, what other avenue will be open to him to recover his debts? Already there are few facilities for this purpose. It will really be very hard on the sahukar, if he is denied even this right. It will be impossible for him to recover his debts and realize any money from the zamindars. I would, therefore, appeal to the House to take this aspect of the question also into consideration.

That clause 10 stand part of the Bill.

Clause 11.

Mr. A. V. Askwith (Home Secretary): Sir, the amendment which have to move is in terms as follows:—

In clause 11, sub-clause (1), for the words 'where an application to execute a decree not being a decree granting an injunction has been made' the following words be substituted:—

'Where an application has been made to execute a decree passed after the commencement of this Act against a debtor as defined in sub-section (2) of section 7 of the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act, 1934, and not being a decree granting an injunction.'

This amendment is designed to serve two objects. In the first place the amendment is intended to restrict the changes which the new clause will effect in the limitation law to the case of decrees against debtors as defined in the Act passed in this Council last year. Civil law is a subject in regard to which, so far as basic principles are concerned, there is uniformity throughout British India. I think that the honourable members of this House will agree, that any break which has to be made in that uniformity should be restricted to the smallest possible dimensions. I believe that I am correct in saying that so far as this particular matter of the limitation period for the execution of decrees is concerned, the uniformity throughout British India is up-to-date an intact uniformity. The House will, I think, agree that the break which it is now intended to make in that uniformity should be kept to the smallest possible limits. It is not merely an abstract principle that the breach in the uniformity should be as small as possible. It can also be said that real practical inconvenience would be likely to result if the clause were given the wide effect contemplated by the honourable promoter of the Bill. In its present terms the clause applies not merely to transactions between money-lenders in the Punjab, and their debtors but to decrees of all kinds, including decrees obtained in Punjab courts by commercial firms having their place of business in other provinces of India or perhaps in countries outside India. If the clause were enacted in the form in which it has emerged from the select committee the limitation period would be changed in respect of those decrees. One can well conceive that a firm having its place of business in the United Kingdom or in some foreign country might be genuinely ignorant of the peculiar local law regarding limitation obtaining in the Punjab, and that its cases might be prejudiced on that account. I do not think that the promoters of the present measure really intended their measure to be applicable to any kind of decrees other than those in which the ordinary village money-lender and the ordinary village debtor are concerned. I do not think that they really intended that it should be applicable to large commercial transactions. The first object of the Government amendment is to remove doubts on that point and to make it clear that the change in regard to limitation is to be applicable only to cases in which the decrees are held against debtors as defined in the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act, 1934.

The second object of the present amendment is to secure that the new clause shall not be applicable to decrees awarded by courts prior to the enactment of the new measure. If the clause became law in its present form, a person holding a decree six or seven years old might wake up one morning to find that that decree had suddenly become valueless. The decree-holder of whom I am thinking might have decided, for reasons entirely honourable, that it was advisable not to apply for execution immediately after the passing of the decree. Nevertheless he might wake up and find that the decree held by him in his safe had suddenly become of no value whatever. I think it will be universally agreed that that would be a serious injustice. The injustice has, I take it, been recognised by the supporters of this measure, for I notice a number of amendments standing on the order paper, in the name of the promoter of the Bill himself, or in the names of members of his party, in which changes are proposed to be made modifying the retrospective effect which the clause would otherwise have. He proposes, however, to save past decrees only to the extent of a single year. The amendment which appears subsequently on the order paper allows the holder of a decree six or seven years of age a period of one year only within which to apply for execution. I venture to suggest that that is not going far enough. It is a generally accepted principle that when new legislation is enacted it should not be given retrospective effect. The second object of the Government amendment is to preserve the full value of past decrees unimpaired, even after the enactment of the new measure. I move the amendment.

Mr. President : Clause under consideration, amendment moved—

That in clause 11, sub-clause (1), for the words "where an application to execute a decree not being a decree granting an injunction has been made" the following words be substituted:—

"Where an application has been made to execute a decree passed after the commencement of this Act against a debtor as defined in sub-section (2) of section 7 of the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act, 1934, and not being a decree granting an injunction."

Rai Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram (South-East Rohtak, non-Muhammadan Rural): The objects which this amendment has in view have already been explained by the Home Secretary. They are two. One is that no law should ordinarily be given retrospective effect, and the other is that this clause should apply only to debtors as defined in the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act. So far as the members of my party are concerned and so far as the zamindar members as a class are concerned, they are not for making any distinctions to the disadvantage of non-agriculturists. However, as the position on behalf of non-agriculturists has already been explained by Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath and the Government has acknowledged him as being a true representative of non-agricultural interests, I will not oppose this amendment, particularly in view of the fact that the definition of the word 'debtor' also includes practically all members of the depressed classes. But I must not be supposed to subscribe to the view that no law should be given retrospective effect. There may be cases, there may be circumstances in which effective protection can only be given to a class by giving retrospective effect to a measure. So far as the present clause is concerned, if retrospective effect is not given, no serious harm is likely to accrue. Therefore I am not opposing this amendment.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri (Punjab Industries) : The reasons which have been given by the mover of this amendment, the Home Secretary have, it appears been accepted by the mover and the supporters of the Bill. The object of the Home Secretary, as he stated, was to confine, if I may use that expression, confine the mischief of the section of the Bill within as narrow limits as possible by excluding certain classes of creditors from its purview and by not making it retrospective in its operation. By this amendment he wishes to exclude from the mischief of this clause certain classes of creditors, that is, banks, companies, co-operative societies and persons who have lent money to 'traders.' I, however, doubt very much if he has been able to achieve one of the two objects which he enunciated in his speech and which he said, he wanted to achieve by this amendment. One object was to make this provision not retrospective. That has been expressly provided, but the other object was to make uniformity of legislation which exists in India on this subject as little irksome to people residing in other provinces and in the United Kingdom as possible. I wish to point out to the Home Secretary that his amendment would, no doubt, exempt companies and banks, but this limitation of six years would, in spite of his amendment, apply to all partnership and all firms carrying on business not only in this province but in other provinces as well as those in the United Kingdom, in fact to every one who has given a loan to a person who is not a 'trader.' I put it to him, I put it to the House to consider whether if a loan has been advanced, let us say to any of the Honourable Ministers of our Government, Sir Jogendra Singh or Sir Gokul Chand Narang, Sir Firoz Khan Noon by a firm, whether English or Indian at Lahore or in any other province or in the United Kingdom, would that be governed by six years or twelve years? I say emphatically and without fear of contradiction that they would be governed by six years rule of limitation. Therefore the Home Secretary is sadly mistaken, if he thinks he has secured uniformity of rule with respect to firms in other parts of India or the United Kingdom. Again, what justification is there I ask that trade debts, grocers' debts, debts due to merchants who in their bills say that if payment is not made before the end of the month interest at 12 per cent. will be charged, and which are therefore loans, should have their period of limitation, their period for realisation from these elusive debtors curtailed? The Government, I submit, has not succeeded in achieving one of the two objects which the mover of the amendment has in view, because the definition of 'debtors' in the Regulation of Accounts Act which has been bodily incorporated in this Act does not confine to money transactions with the members of agricultural tribes or with agriculturists. It extends equally to any loan which may be advanced by a person (excluding banks, public companies and co-operative societies) to any one who is not a trader. Therefore that object has certainly not been achieved.

Again I do not understand the wisdom or propriety or even the mentality of people who consider a provision, improper in essence and would not like it to be extended to their favourite creditors, but have no objection to its extension to others. I raised my voice last time on this very matter when exemptions were sought to be created in favour of co-operative societies. No doubt, these exemptions are also enjoyed by joint stock banks in which the rest of the community are also interested, but I wish respectfully to bring to the notice of the Government the well-known Persian couplet—

هر چه بر خود نه پسندی بر دیگران نه بدی

"Do not propose for others, what you do not like for yourself."

The Government is interested in its own credit institutions, the co-operative societies. I do not see any reason why in the matter of law of limitation for execution of decrees, these should be favoured decree-holders. When once decrees have been obtained, all decree-holders, whether banks or individuals, should have the same assistance from courts. Therefore my submission is that if the Government views a thing as inherently wrong, as not suitable for certain class of creditors, it should oppose it in its entirety and not be satisfied by having secured their own credit institutions and certain favoured creditors out of its mischief. These are the few observations, which I wished to place before the House and the Government in connection with the amendment.

Mr. President: The question is—

In clause 11, sub-clause (1), for the words "where an application to execute a decree not being a decree granting an injunction has been made" the following words be substituted:—

"Where an application has been made to execute a decree passed after the commencement of this Act against a debtor as defined in sub-section (2) of section 7 of the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act, 1934, and not being a decree granting an injunction."

The motion was carried.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri (Punjab Industries): I beg to move—

In clause 11, after sub-clause (1) (b), the following proviso be added:—

“ Provided that in calculating the said period of six years, the time spent in deciding objections to attachment or sale of the property in any court, and in suits to establish a claim to, or charge upon, or right in attached property or property claimed to be that of judgment-debtor, and in appeals from all these proceedings, the time during which a decree-holder has been prevented from executing his decree by a decree or order of any court and the time during which a judgment-debtor has been absent from British India and the time spent in false plea of payment under Order 21, Rule 2, Civil Procedure Code, shall be excluded.”

It is well-known and has often been pointed out by the Privy Council and the High Courts that the difficulties of a decree-holder commence after he has obtained the decree and when he is confronted by a dishonest debtor by all kinds of subterfuges to deprive him from realising the money due from him. It is known to everybody who is familiar with courts and cannot be unknown to my honourable friend, the mover of this Bill, that the decree-holders are invariably met with pleas of false objections to attachment and sale of property. When those objections fail, the objectors file declaratory suits which have to be decided in accordance with the Civil Procedure Code necessitating the filing of a plaint, the summoning of the defendant who has to put in a written statement. After the written statement is put in, howsoever frivolous the suit may be the courts have to strike issues in accordance with the Civil Procedure Code. After issues have been struck it is the right of the plaintiff to claim a hearing, when he is entitled to call witnesses, the number of witnesses being only restricted by the relevancy of the facts to which they have to depose and the courts cannot in any way cut out witnesses, on the ground that there are 50 or 60 of them and not 5 or 6. After the plaintiff has thus let in his evidence, the defendant is given the same privilege after which the courts adjudicate upon the issues. After one court has given its finding confirming the dismissal of objections by the trial court, that is after the declaratory suit is dismissed, the person who has filed the objections at the instance of the judgment-debtor goes to the appellate court where he carries on his appeal. That appeal in the natural course of events takes a considerable time when ultimately it is dismissed. The decree-holder has thus lost three years as a result of one objection besides expense and trouble. He again starts proceedings against that property. This time another suit is filed by another relation of the judgment-debtor claiming perhaps a charge upon the property or claiming maintenance or claiming a charge on account of dower. That suit again runs its course first in the original court, necessitating a fresh trial which takes more than a year and a half and the same period of time is again taken in appeal. When the decree-holder is again successful and wishes to proceed against the property, he will find that the period of six years is over. Therefore I ask that if the object of this House is that decrees should not hang over the heads of the judgment-debtors longer than it is absolutely necessary, the time which has been taken by the obstructive tactics of the judgment-debtor should in all fairness be excluded in counting the period of limitation for executing the decree, whatever period you may choose to fix, whether it is 12 years, or 6 years or 8 years. Unfortunately no such provision is made in this Bill and the object of my amendment is only to ask this House to put in this proviso which would extend the period of limitation by the period during which all these proceedings or suits arising out of false and obstructive objection proceedings or appeals therefrom are pending. The time during which a court may have issued an injunction to the decree-holder not to execute the decree and the time during which the judgment-debtor may be absent from British India should certainly be excluded. I have also added another provision which is necessitated by the amendment of Order 21, rule 2, Civil Procedure Code. There was a very salutary provision in the Civil Procedure Code, Order 21, rule 2 (3), that no executing court will take cognizance of a payment which had not been certified but which was omitted by the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act, 1935, and which has the effect of prolonging the execution proceedings by false pleas of payment, unnecessarily. Therefore with the omission of that sub-clause (3) of Order 21, Rule 2, the effect has been that it is possible for the judgment-debtor to put up a false plea of payment after the decree has been passed and to keep the execution proceedings hanging for some more time. Therefore what this amendment proposes is nothing more nor less than this, that where the delay has been due to the obstructive tactics of the judgment-debtor, that time might be excluded in calculating the period of limitation. There is section 15 of the Indian Limitation Act, a section which is based on common sense and which Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram, I hope, would also agree, is based on common sense and should be given effect to. Section 15 provides that in counting the period of limitation for any suit or application, the time during which a party has been prevented by injunction or order of a court in proceeding with execution should be excluded in calculating the period of limitation provided for that. But unfortunately that section does not apply to the present law inasmuch as we are amending here section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code and not any period of limitation provided under the Limitation Act. There is that salutary provision, as I have pointed out, in the Indian Limitation Act where the periods of limitation range from a month to 12 years. But unfortunately that provision does not find a place in the Civil Procedure Code which is attempted to be amended here. Therefore, in all justice, in all fairness, where a person has been prevented by an order of the court from proceeding with the application—and you know that injunctions are issued every day—decree-holder is executing a decree and the judgment-debtor's relative or friend files a suit in another court and that court issues an order to the decree-holder that he should not proceed with the execution—the decree-holder must obey that order—and that injunction may last for two or three years—does not Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram know that such injunctions do continue for two to three years and does he also not know that once these injunctions are discharged by the trial court injunctions are again granted by the appellate courts—so where a person has been prevented by an order of the court, is it not fair, when counting the period of limitation, to exclude that period during which the person has been prevented from proceeding with the execution? Already you are reducing the period of limitation to such a small period as six years and therefore you should at least exclude that period in which a person has been physically prevented, not even by the dilatory tactics of the judgment-debtor, but by an order of the court from prosecuting the execution proceeding. I therefore submit that without an amendment like the one I have proposed, this provision is most unjust, lays a premium on the dilatory tactics of judgment-debtors and is calculated to defeat the ends of justice. I commend this amendment, therefore, to the consideration of the House.

Mr. President : Will the honourable member please refer to the last three lines of his amendment ? Unless the honourable member's amendment is complete and full of sense, I shall have to decline to put it from the chair. The honourable member is even now at liberty to make it complete.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : You have only to add the words 'determination of' between the words 'in' and 'false' in the last but two lines of the amendment.

Mr. President : Rule 2 of Order 21 has got three sub-clauses and there can be no false plea either under sub-clause (1) or under sub-clause (3) ; it can be only under sub-clause (2). The honourable member has not specifically mentioned any sub-clause in his amendment.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : It will apply to the relevant sub-clause. If necessary, such things can be done by the drafting committee or I can do it now.

Mr. President : I decline to put the amendment as it stands. I will put it the day after to-morrow, if the honourable member amends it in the meantime.

The Council then adjourned till 2 P. M. on Thursday, 28th November, 1935.

THE PUNJAB DEBTORS' PROTECTION BILL.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri (Punjab Industries): The amendment that I move is the same which I proposed the other day—

That in clause 11, after sub-clause (i) (b), the following proviso be added :—

“ Provided that in calculating the said period of six years, the time spent in deciding objections to attachment or sale of the property in any court, and in suits to establish a claim to, or charge upon, or right in attached property or property claimed to be that of judgment-debtor, and in appeals from all these proceedings, the time during which a decree-holder has been prevented from executing his decree by a decree or order of any court and the time during which a judgment-debtor has been absent from British India and the time spent in adjudicating upon a false plea of payment made in execution proceedings shall be excluded. ”

Mr. President : Clause under consideration, amendment moved—

That in clause 11, after sub-clause (i) (b), the following proviso be added :—

“ Provided that in calculating the said period of six years, the time spent in deciding objections to attachment or sale of the property in any court, and in suits to establish a claim to, or charge upon, or right in attached property or property claimed to be that of judgment-debtor, and in appeals from all these proceedings, the time during which a decree-holder has been prevented from executing his decree by a decree or order of any court and the time during which a judgment-debtor has been absent from British India and the time spent in adjudicating upon a false plea of payment made in execution proceedings shall be excluded. ”

Khan Sahib Chaudhri Riasat Ali (Gujranwala, Muhammadan, Rural): So far as this amendment is concerned, I must make it clear, as is apparent from the very reading of it that it makes no less than five exceptions to the clause which is under discussion. In the first place it takes away the time spent in deciding objections; in the second place, the time spent in suits to establish claims; in the third place, time spent in appeals from all these proceedings; fourthly, time during which judgment-debtor has been absent from British India and lastly, the time spent in adjudicating upon a false plea. The very perusal of this clause shows that the whole object of the section which we are now discussing is marred if we accept this amendment. As a matter of principle it was proposed that six years should be henceforth the period of limitation instead of twelve, and in order to avoid any sort of discussion or to exclude the possibility of any disagreement we adopted in the select committee the language of section 48 of the Code of Civil Procedure. My first objection to this amendment is that it is unnecessary, for the only change that is made in the section is to substitute six years for twelve. There are no exceptions in section 48 itself, or the clause which is proposed in the Bill and there is no reason why we should in this way limit the scope of the clause. If we accept this amendment there is no relief whatsoever under this clause. What was felt by those who are in favour of the Bill was that the period should be reduced to six years for the simple reason that the so-called sword of Damocles might not hang on the judgment-debtor for more than six years. If we accept this amendment the whole object is gone and in one way or other we give the decree-holder the same twelve years in spite of the fact that we adopt the clause as it stands in the Bill. While arguing in favour of the amendment my honourable friend has not taken into consideration the other side of the picture. He said that false objections would be brought forward. If they failed, he said, declaratory suits would be instituted and appeals in those suits would also be instituted and in that way the judgment-debtor would go on for more than six or seven years and therefore he urged that the whole clause should be excluded. My argument is that if people are set up at the instance of the decree-holder or in collusion with the decree-holder to keep alive the decree for so many years, where will the judgment-debtor go? There can be frivolous objections on both sides and not only on one side. The decree-holders are in a better position to buy people than the poor judgment-debtors. We should avoid the situation. By the insertion of this provision we would be simply helping the decree to be kept alive for even more than twelve years, and on that ground alone I would submit that this amendment must not be accepted.

Another reason which was given by the honourable member was that the omission of sub-rule (3) of rule 2 of Order 21 of the Civil Procedure Code had brought in such a situation that this provision should be made. The very words of the rule show that this contingency does not arise. According to Order 21, Rule 2, the liability is placed on the decree-holder to get certified the adjustment or receipt of any money which he receives outside the court during the course of execution proceedings. Sub-rule (2) provides that if he does not get it certified as provided, the judgment-debtor may get it certified. In the case of the decree-holder it is "shall" and in the case of the judgment-debtor it is "may." So the liability which the law places is on the decree-holder and if he does not discharge that liability I do not see the reason why the poor judgment-debtor should suffer for that. Sub-clause (3) only says that a payment or adjustment which has not been certified or recorded as aforesaid shall not be recognized by any court executing the decree. We have omitted only this penal clause on the principle that the judgment-debtor should not in any way suffer for the sin or neglect of duty of the decree-holder. This thing has nothing to do so far as the period of execution or the time during which it is to be kept alive is concerned. It was only to correct the law on that principle that that clause of the Civil Procedure Code was omitted by the Relief of Indebtedness Act.

Another thing which I want to put before the House is that this thing has been omitted on principles of justice, equity and good conscience as well. Nothing abnormal has happened which should give the honourable mover of the amendment and his supporters a cause to argue that unless this amendment is adopted the rights and interests of the decree-holder are not safe. It was said that the time which is spent in appeal or in suits in which injunctions are issued to a civil court to stop the execution of a decree should also be excluded. I do not understand the logic of that. An appellate court only issues an injunction to an execution court when it is satisfied that there is some sort of injustice going on or if there is some fraud or some unfair thing happening. Having gone into that matter when they issue notice to either of the parties asking why the injunction should not be issued, they give the party the chance of representing his case before the appellate court. I do not see any reason why, after a careful consideration of both sides, when an injunction is issued the time spent or the period during which the decree has been stayed should be excluded. After all, the appellate courts are not unaware of the principles of justice, equity and good conscience; they have them in view. The other day I gave an instance of my own district in which in a case the lower court during the course of execution proceedings ordered a judgment-debtor to bring his two hundred heads of cattle to the district headquarters from a place at a distance of about one hundred miles. The man went in appeal and the district judge stayed the proceedings and issued a notice on that man to show cause why the application should not be accepted. The difficulty was that the trial court was, without imputing any motive, I should say, one way or the other bringing the man within the scope of the words "contumaciously avoiding" and unless that man went to the appellate court he could not have had any relief under the circumstances. So an order passed by the appellate court in such cases is not without rhyme or reason. And I do not see any reason why we should exclude the time during which an injunction is issued to stay the execution proceedings. I submit that there is nothing in the original section of the Civil Procedure Code which has not been bodily adopted in this clause and I do not therefore see any reason why this amendment should be accepted.

Shrimati Lekhwati Jain (North-East Towns, non-Muhammadan, Urban) (Urdu): While supporting the amendment moved by the Honourable Member for Industries I would like to point out to him that before insisting on the time limit being fixed at six years he should see whether the sahukar, under the existing law or the law that is being enacted, will be able to realize his old debts. If there is no remedy available to the sahukar, why should the honourable member bother about limitation? When the sahukar cannot realize his debts within one, two or six years where is the need to worry about the time limit? The sahukar is left entirely helpless in the matter. He cannot attach the landed property of his debtor. The standing crops and trees and even the cattle belonging to an agriculturist debtor are not liable to attachment in execution of a decree. How then is the sahukar going to realize his debts? When the case is absolutely hopeless, why should we waste the time of the House in moving amendments which the opposite party will never see its way to agree to and which even if carried will not help the sahukar to any extent? I would also like to say one word to Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram. The honourable member knows that the sahukar has now been left with no legal remedy whatsoever, and his debts have been practically wiped out. I therefore request him not to worry about the time limit whether it should be six or twelve years. Previously the sahukar had a remote chance of having his decrees realized within twelve years. Now you are trying to deprive him even of that chance. The Chaudhri Sahib has achieved his real object and he should not therefore mind whether the time limit is six or twelve years. If the honourable Chaudhri Sahib and other members of his party agree to adopt some reasonable attitude, I am sure, it would not affect their Rao Bahadurship, Khan Bahadurship or Sardar Bahadurship or at any rate their personal dignity or honour. I therefore request them to take a reasonable view of things. If they are not prepared to do that, let us keep silence and refrain from wasting the time of the House. With these words I resume my seat.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri (Punjab Industries): It has been very pertinently remarked by the last speaker, the lady member that when a section of the House is adopting an attitude of unjustified opposition to all reasonable attempts to bring this legislation in conformity with reason and sound sense and is relying solely upon the number of its votes to defeat our proposals whether it is not entirely futile on the part of some of us to waste our time as well as the time of other members of the House by making speeches on the various sections of the Bill. There is a great deal to be said for that point of view, but as long as we do not decide to follow that course as a party and as long as we come to the House to take part in its deliberations it is our duty to place before the House our point of view, and although repeatedly we have been taunted by the representatives of debtor classes for wasting our breath and efforts, I think it is necessary that the point of view of common sense and fairness should be placed before the House, so that if not this House, at any rate the future generations might not be under the impression that reasonable points of view were not placed before the House.

My friend, Chaudhri Riasat Ali, stated that he did not see any logic in excluding the time during which another court had actually by an injunction, that is, by an order prevented the decree-holder from executing his decree. I had pointed out yesterday in my speech when moving the amendment that it is usual for a number of declaratory suits to be filed as soon as the property of a judgment-debtor is attached. And, as soon as a declaratory suit is filed, the court is moved to issue an injunction preventing the decree-holder from executing the decree. And one suit coupled with its appeal does take on an average at least three years, if not more. I put it to the lawyer members of the House, Chaudhri Chhotu Ram himself and the honourable the Legal Remembrancer if they would be prepared to contradict my statement that a declaratory suit along with the appeals which may be preferred from them does or does not take on an average three years or more in this province. I am stating a period of time on the lowest estimate. Supposing I obtain a decree, and I obtain a decree not against a member of the statutory agricultural tribe but against another Hindu. Honourable members are aware that amongst Hindus these suits are more frequent than they are amongst the members of agricultural tribes. My friend from Amritsar, Shaikh Muhammad Sadiq, knows that in Amritsar Hindu judgment-debtors specialise in litigation which is carried on to "dodge" the decree-holder, and it is a very frequent feature in courts. The argument is seriously advanced in this House, that even if a decree-holder who has been ordered by an injunction from the High Court or from another court not to proceed with the execution of decree and those injunctions continue for a period of six years, and his entire period of limitation thus expires, he is not to be given any relief and his decree is to be allowed to be nullified in this way. Is not this clause calculated and likely to encourage the dishonest judgment-debtors to delay execution proceedings much longer than they do at present? The House is familiar with what usually happens in courts. Take one of the most frequent cases. A creditor brings a suit, say for Rs. 50,000 against a person who has got property worth two lakhs. As soon as he is aware that a suit is brought he raises all kinds of false pleas. After two years a decree is passed. Then he appeals. During the pendency of the appeal, or shortly before the decree, he would alienate his property in the name of his son or some other relation. The appellate court confirms the decree. What is under the law the remedy of the poor decree-holder, whose claim has been decreed, but whose debtor has thus made a fraudulent transfer of his entire property in favour of one of his relations? He cannot execute his decree. Before he can attach the property, the decree-holder must file a suit to get that alienation set aside, on the ground that that alienation is fictitious and effected with a view to defraud the creditors, the alienation which has been made during the pendency of suit or the appeal, or immediately preceding the suit. The decree-holder must bring a suit to get the alienation set aside before he can proceed against the property, howsoever obvious and strong his case may be for setting aside the alienation. The suit must take its usual course and this suit will ordinarily take three years and ultimately the decree-holder will succeed. It cannot be decided in one or two months. It has to be decided according to the Civil Procedure Code, and the Evidence Act. Is it not proper to exclude this time, when you are reducing the period of limitation? In asking this House to accept my amendment I have only put in the clause a claim for exemption of time where the delay has been caused or time spent in obstructive tactics of the judgment-debtor, for instance, the time which has been spent in deciding objections in attachment proceedings, then suits which arise out of attachment proceedings and then appeals which arise out of those suits. My learned friend suggested that I had put in five exemptions. I have really put in three only. The objections to attachment, the suits arising out of the attachment proceedings and the appeals therefrom, are really one and the same proceedings. The second is where an injunction has been issued. The third is where a false plea of payment has been put forward. I have not proposed the exemption of time taken when a plea of payment is put forward and is found to be correct. I have only claimed that where a plea of payment has been put forward and has been found to be false, a plea which under the Civil Procedure Code cannot be inquired into because no court of execution could take note of a payment which had not been certified, but which has now to be done under the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act which amended the Civil Procedure Code for the Punjab. May I bring to the notice of the House that during the select committee proceedings in connection with the last Bill—the Relief of Indebtedness Act—this proposal was put forward and at that time I suggested that if the period of limitation is to be reduced, then exemptions on the lines of my amendment will have to be made and I have a distinct recollection that Chaudhri Chhotu Ram agreed that my suggestion was very fair, and should be given effect to? But it appears that he has gone back on that, or is it a price which he has exacted for accepting the Government amendment? As a matter of fact the amendment which was moved by the Government was not in any way contradictory to and did not come into any conflict with my amendment. The amendments were complimentary and not alternative. My amendment should be there in any case whether the Government's amendment was accepted or not. If this amendment is not accepted, the effect will be that in most of the decrees against persons who are governed by Hindu law they will be prevented from proceeding against the property of the judgment-debtor.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : This section deals with debtors only.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : I must thank the Honourable Finance Member for drawing my attention to the fact that this section deals with debtors only as defined in the Indebtedness Act. But it does not make any difference to my argument.

With respect to debtors as defined in the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act it is equally known to Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram that declaratory suits are by no means uncommon amongst agriculturists. As soon as a decree is obtained against a debtor or more frequently as soon as a suit is threatened or contemplated the debtor alienates all or a major portion of his property to his relatives either gratuitously or for nominal consideration. These tactics are equally frequent amongst agriculturists as among non-agriculturists. Again declaratory suits for dower and maintenance are equally frequent amongst the agriculturists as amongst the propertied classes who follow Hindu law. This shortening of the period of litigation is, as I have submitted, an inducement to those people to multiply their dilatory tactics. Its effect on the morality of the judgment-debtor is obvious. But apart from this it is very sad that the period of limitation for execution of decrees should be halved and the House should not even make any exemption for time wasted by the dilatory tactics of the judgment-debtor. This, I submit, is not justified by any considerations of fair play nor is it dictated by any considerations of preventing harassment of the judgment-debtor.

In clause 11, after sub-clause (1) (b), the following proviso be added :—

“ Provided that in calculating the said period of six years, the time spent in deciding objections to attachment or sale of the property in any court, and in suits to establish a claim to, or charge upon, or right in attached property or property claimed to be that of judgment-debtor, and in appeals from all these proceedings, the time during which a decree-holder has been prevented from executing his decree by a decree or order of any court and the time during which a judgment-debtor has been absent from British India and the time spent in adjudicating upon false plea of payment made in execution proceedings shall be excluded. ”

The motion was lost.

Mr. President : The question is—

That clause 11 as amended stand part of the Bill.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : I crave the indulgence of the House for a few minutes more to offer certain remarks in respect to this clause. If I were not convinced as a lawyer and as a person fairly familiar with civil litigation in this province that this reduction of the period of limitation would be detrimental to the administration of justice and is calculated to increase the abuse of process of court I would not waste another word over the clause, knowing as I do the attitude of the persons responsible for this Bill. I wish to assert emphatically that in enacting this clause, the House is entirely ignoring the sad experience which every lawyer, judge and litigant has of the well known dilatory tactics of judgment-debtors in this province. It is a remarkable fact that legislation with respect to relief of indebtedness has taken place in many provinces in India, but no province has so far thought of reducing this period of limitation for execution of decrees, a period of limitation which is in consonance with English law and which is allowed in every other province in India and even in Native

States. In fact when it is found that this period has been curtailed by the usual dilatory tactics of judgment-debtors, the courts are anxious to help the judgment-debtors and revision petitions are accepted by the High Court liberally from dismissal in default of application for execution which are twelve years old. In this connection I would like the House to take note of what the expert advice on this matter is. With respect to clause 7—the clause now under consideration was clause 7 of the original Bill,—it will be found that not a single judge of the High Court has expressed any opinion in its favour. Just read the opinions on pages 1 to 3 of this printed list of opinions which relate to the opinions of the High Court judges and which have frequently been referred to. Excepting for a few judges who are discreetly silent over this clause all others have expressed an opinion distinctly and emphatically against this clause. They have condemned this section in no uncertain language. Honourable Mr. Justice Beckett gives his opinion in two lines and says that he cannot see any justification for section 7. Honourable Mr. Justice Currie who also expresses a brief opinion says, “I am strongly opposed to section 7 of the enactment which would merely set a premium on dilatory tactics which are already only too prevalent in execution proceedings.” Again Honourable Mr. Justice Skemp with respect to this provision says, “Why reduce limitation for execution of decrees, unless you want to favour borrowers in every possible way?” Honourable Mr. Justice Monroe says, “Section 7 is unnecessary and unfair.” The two senior judges who have not expressed any opinion in detail, but have confined to writing only a few lines, Honourable Mr. Justice Addison and Honourable Mr. Justice Coldstream, say that clause 7 is “unnecessary and will encourage obstructive procedure.” Other judges have condemned the Bill wholesale. But the opinions I have just read out go to show that those opinions are based on the experience of these senior judges. The result of their experience is that this provision is unnecessary and will only lead to obstruction. In the light of these opinions and in the absence of any change in law in other provinces, what are the reasons which have induced the Punjab Government to accept this change in an all-India enactment like the Civil Procedure Code? I submit that the Punjab Government cannot be congratulated on its attitude. What was the opinion of the officials of the Punjab Government itself who would be affected by a provision of this type? The opinion, for instance, of the Registrar of Co-operative Societies who has got decrees of his own to execute against debtors as defined in the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act is that it would work hardship against creditors and the co-operative societies should be exempted from this provision. The Government has admitted that this provision is not salutary because it provides exemption from this provision for its co-operative societies. At the time of debate on the Relief of Indebtedness Bill I pointed out that there should be uniformity of legislation for all creditors and my reason was that this was the best safeguard against bad legislation, because Government had a credit machinery of its own. But I am very sorry to find that the Government entered into an understanding with Chaudhri Chhotu Ram to oppose my amendment, if Chaudhri Chhotu Ram did not oppose Government's amendment. And the result is that Government has saved its own credit institutions, the co-operative banks from the shorter period of limitation. What is sauce for the gander should be sauce for the goose. If the section is unfair, unnecessary or inequitable or wrong in principle, Government should oppose it in its entirety rather than save its own friends from its mischief. This is not playing the game. The co-operative societies in the Punjab are not at all affected by the argument of uniformity of law in other provinces and the possible danger to outsiders which has been so ably put forward by the Home Secretary. I therefore respectfully submit that in a matter like this, a matter which amends the Civil Procedure Code and which deals with a rule of limitation which is uniformly accepted in all the provinces of India, in a matter where the Punjab Government without any precedent is trying to embark on a path entirely different from other provinces and the United Kingdom, this House and particularly the Government should take note of the expert opinions which have been made available to it, I mean the opinions of the learned and senior judges of the High Court, and should not accept a change whose only effect is to encourage a propertyed dishonest judgment-debtor in his obstructive tactics.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : May I ask a question of the last speaker through you, Sir? Where does he get his statement from that our co-operative societies will not be affected by this law? I have not studied the question, but I would be glad to be enlightened.

Khan Sahib Chaudhri Riasat Ali (Gujranwala, Muhammadan, Rural): I am sorry that my honourable friend has forgotten the volume of expert opinions which have been expressed in these two books in favour of passing this clause. He has only referred to one or two opinions. But the opinions of those people who have worked the various provisions in districts and who have been responsible for carrying on this machinery of law have been neglected by him as they do not suit his purpose. In this connection I would refer to opinion No. 16, of the Deputy Commissioner of Attock. He says with regard to clause 7 in one sentence, "I would have no objection to the reduction of the limitation for the execution of decrees to six years." The other is No. 19, opinion of the Deputy Commissioner, Shahpur. This is more important because the matter of principle involved is discussed there. He says, "It seems therefore that in tackling rural indebtedness the most that Government may hope to do towards ameliorating the situation is to prevent in future borrowing on the enormous scale which had become possible during the last 75 years" and he thinks that unless somehow we minimise the chances of the people recovering their debts the debtors will go on borrowing and therefore he suggests two means:—

(a) the abolition of arrest for debt. That measure has been passed. Credit is thereby curtailed.

(b) the reduction in the life of a decree. That measure is here proposed. Credit will thereby be further curtailed.

Here is the opinion of a person who has been not only a deputy commissioner of the district but who was also an officer in the High Court.

I next refer to opinion No. 20, that of the Deputy Commissioner, Rawalpindi. He says:

"This is a step towards the right direction as it will curtail litigation to great extent and will also save much time of the courts. It will also remove congestion in the district record rooms, where the files are kept for 12 years."

What do after all decree-holders get by unnecessary litigation? They spend a lot of money on court fees, citing of witnesses, engagement of lawyers and so on. And after they get a decree, in 95 cases out of 100 they do not get anything towards recovery of the debts. So unless we minimise these chances, I do not think there is any relief. The next important opinion is No. 45, which is not by a district officer, but from the Ferozepore District Board, which consists of representatives of people more than 40 or 50 in number, including lawyers and this opinion is given by the senior and junior vice-presidents, both of them lawyers as also the majority of members of the board. They say :

"This clause does not require much comment. The debtor who knows that all his earnings will be taken away by his creditor does not try to make himself a useful member of the society, therefore, it would be in the public interest to reduce the limitation for execution of decrees from 12 years to 6 years."

The next is the opinion of the Bar Association of Jullundur. They say :

"The curtailment of the period of limitation is essential to speed up execution work. The period of twelve years is too long and keeps both the parties in suspense for an unduly long time."

I need not go into further details and arguments. But I submit for the information of my honourable friend that here is the opinion of the Bar Association of Jullundur.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : In reply to the question put to me by the Honourable Finance Member whether co-operative societies are excluded from the purview of this Bill, I find that they are so excluded because section 7 of the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act which defines "debts" excludes money due to co-operative societies from its purview and therefore co-operative societies are exempted.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : I thank the honourable member for the explanation.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit (Hoshiarpur, non-Muhammadan, Rural) : Honourable members who are sitting on the other side and the Government have both forgotten that here in this Bill we are dealing with a person who has obtained a decree after incurring great expense and undergoing hardships and trials. He gets a decree after having passed all the tests laid down in the various regulations with regard to money-lending, the Usurious Loans Act, the Regulation of Accounts Act, the Relief of Indebtedness Act, the Debtors' Protection Act and so on. All these tests have been passed by the decree-holder and then the court grants the decree. Now it remains whether he is to be permitted to enjoy the fruits of that decree. That is the sole point and all abuses and harsh words said about money-lenders and his dishonest ways disappear when we know that he has satisfied all the conditions laid upon him by the laws which we have passed and has obtained his decree. Now if you want to pass this clause as the honourable leader of the Unionist party wants it, it practically means that the Government is a party to telling these people that we are with you in your dishonest efforts to deprive the honest decree-holder from getting the fruits of his decree. The Deputy Commissioner of Lyallpur says :

"I consider that the limit of 6 years laid down in section 7 is also far too short and I see no reason why the provisions of the present law should be interfered with. This provision is only meant to help the dishonest debtor."

[Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit.]

Those of us who practise in the civil courts know that as a matter of fact every day false claims are put in and are instigated by the judgment-debtors whether they belong to this class or that class. Unfortunately an impression has gone abroad that Government is at the back of the debtors and they may play fast and loose with the creditors in every possible way as Government would come to their rescue. Unfortunately this effort on the part of the Government themselves is bound to lead to a suspicion that even the honest decree-holder is not going to be protected in future. Therefore I entirely fail to see the reason which is behind the support given by the Government to such an obnoxious clause as the one which limits the execution of a decree from 12 to 6 years. As a matter of fact the law of 12 years has been fixed and laid down after full experience. It is not that that sort of law exists only in the Punjab. It exists all over India, not only in India but outside in the whole of British Empire and it is based on practical experience. Now we are rushing through a clause or a section of law and this action I may call is broad-day robbery. It is nothing short of broad-day robbery to tell people that they can be dishonest and they will have the sympathy not only of the unionist benches but also of the Government. I therefore strongly protest against this attitude adopted by the Government in giving help to people who are not prepared to pay honest debts. Therefore any effort on the part of the Government to encourage these dishonest people who will not honour the decrees given by the courts after a full investigation and, after all pleas of undue influence and so on have been gone through, is wrong. Now I will read the section relating to co-operative societies and other semi-government institutions, to show that this clause is not to be extended to them but only to an ordinary person who is unfortunate enough to trust a person and lend him money.

Section 7 of the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act runs :

- (1) "Debt" includes all liabilities of a debtor in cash or in kind, secured or unsecured, payable under a decree or order of a civil court or otherwise, whether mature or not, but shall not include debts incurred for the purposes of trade, arrears of wages, land revenue or anything recoverable as an arrear of land revenue or any debt which is barred by the law of limitation, or debts due to co-operative banks or to co-operative societies or to the Imperial Bank of India or to any banking company registered under the Indian Companies Act, 1913, or the law relating to companies for the time being in force in British India.
- (2) "Debtor" means a person who owes a debt and (i) who both earns his livelihood mainly by agriculture, and is either a landowner, or tenant of agricultural land, or a servant of a landowner, or of a tenant of agricultural land, and so on. So people come in here whether they are governed by Hindu or Muhammadan law. The only provision here with regard to a member of an agricultural tribe is :

"Provided that a member of a tribe, notified as agricultural under the Punjab Alienation of Land Act, 1900, shall be presumed to be a debtor as defined in this section until it is proved that his income from other sources is greater than his income from agriculture."

So let us be under no misapprehension that when we are legislating we are not legislating only for people who are governed by customary rules but we are legislating for Hindus, Muhammadans and others who come under the definition of debtor as given in the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act which was passed some time ago. It is absolutely clear and there can be no doubt that the Government feels that so far as it is concerned or semi-government institutions are concerned, they shall not be governed by this limitation rule. It is those unfortunate people who belong to none of these bodies who are mentioned here and who happen to be creditors, whether they are lawyers or doctors or money-lenders or lenders of any kind or even firms or companies, who shall not be permitted to enjoy the fruits of their decree. This law is a lawless law. It is undoubtedly a law which encourages dishonesty, a law which will demoralise the province and I therefore submit to the Government that before giving its final sanction it should see what is the effect of a law of this kind on the morality of this province.

Kanwar Mamraj Singh Chohan (Ambala-cum-Simla, non-Muham-madan, Rural) (Urdu): I have stood up to oppose this clause. I must make it clear that I was in favour of this clause as it emerged from the select committee but I cannot lend my support to it in its amended form. I admit that fixing a time limit for the execution of a decree is very helpful to the debtor. I agree also that all classes of debtors stand to gain by the arrangement of fixing a time-limit. Even if a small sahukar has borrowed some money from a big sahukar or a small zamindar has borrowed money from a big zamindar or an agriculturist has borrowed money from an ordinary sahukar or, to take another instance, an artisan borrows some money from a capitalist, all classes of debtors will benefit alike by such a provision. But I have serious misgivings about the usefulness of the clause as it has been amended by the Government. I think far from being helpful it will create difficulties for the debtor. If the honourable Chaudhri Sahib, the member in charge of this Bill were to fix the limit at 6 years I would have supported him. But I cannot support a provision which makes a distinction between two brothers on the one hand and a father and a son on the other.

Pir Akbar Ali: After all you have had an occasion to oppose the clause.

Kanwar Mamraj Singh Chohan: The definition of a "debtor" embodied in the clause now before the House has been borrowed from the Relief of Indebtedness Act. But the definition has been borrowed only from one sub-section. As we all know 'debtor' is defined in sub-clause (2) and 'agriculturist' is defined in sub-clause (3) of the relevant clause of the Relief of Indebtedness Act. But in the proposed clause the definition of "debtor" has been borrowed from sub-clause (2) and the definition embodied in sub-clause (3) has been ignored. My submission is that the definition ought to have been borrowed from the Relief of Indebtedness Act in its entirety or not borrowed at all. It is ridiculous to follow an enactment in one instance and not in another. Before making a law for the public we should clearly set forth all its limitations. As the proposed clause stands, it is very difficult to know whether one has to take the dictionary meanings of the word 'debtor' or one has to follow its definition given in the Relief of Indebtedness Act. Then it is not clear if one has to take as correct the meaning of the debtor accepted in common parlance. The same is the case with the meaning of agriculture, what meaning is to be ascribed to it whether the one given in section 7 (3) of the Relief of Indebtedness Act or the ordinary English meaning. I think in an effort to facilitate the execution of decrees by fixing a time-limit the Government has achieved the opposite result of making the clause more complicated than it was before.

As I have already explained the period of limitation now proposed to be fixed for the execution of decrees will in no way help the debtors. Supposing a person has obtained a decree against a debtor for the possession of the property of the latter, I ask what period of limitation will apply to him, six years or 12 years? I am inclined to think that this provision goes much beyond the scope of this Bill and it will not help to relieve indebtedness which is the avowed object of this Bill and of other measures on this subject.

There is yet another point which I would like to bring to the notice of the House and which, I think, must be taken into consideration before voting on this clause one way or the other. We know that the decision of this question whether a person is a debtor or not for the purposes of this Bill has been left to the courts and not to the conciliation boards as in the Relief of Indebtedness Act. In many cases the debtors and even their creditors will not be sure whether such debtors have a right to benefit by the provisions of this Bill till the time the question arises before the court concerned and the issue is struck and a decision on the point is invited. This may happen any time after the period of six years when an application for the execution of a decree will be made and when such an application will be made, the debtor will claim in some court that he is a debtor for the purposes of this Bill. Then his claim will be opposed by his creditor and on the decision being given by the court in favour of the creditor or even debtor, the matter will come up in appeal and then in second appeal and in this way a long time will be taken to finally decide the question. This will certainly complicate matters. Even if we admit for the sake of argument that for the purposes of this Bill, the conciliation boards will not have to decide such questions and that their decision will not be final on this point, although there is no express provision in this Bill one way or the other, it will certainly take some time to decide this issue as the decision of the court is subject to appeal and second appeal. I have, therefore, no choice left but to oppose this clause.

Lala Bhagat Ram (Jullundur-cum-Ludhiana, non-Muhammadan, Rural) (Urdu): I rise to oppose the clause under consideration and in doing so I will only say that it will not be very difficult for a debtor to see that the proposed period of limitation, that is six years, expires before payment of debt can be claimed from him. In the first place he will raise any number of objections against the attachment or sale of his property in execution of decrees passed against him and on those objections being set aside, he will have declaratory suits filed in some court because such a suit will cost him only about Rs. 20 or Rs. 30 at the most. He will very gladly incur that expenditure to pass the period of six years and consequently to avoid payment of his debts. It will, therefore, be injustice pure and simple to enact this clause as it now stands. With these few words I oppose this clause and request the House to throw it out.

Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath (Punjab Landholders, General): I simply want to give the Leader of the Opposition an opportunity to answer the point that I wish to advance and which has not been advanced by any one before. I wish to draw the attention of the honourable mover of the Bill to clause 5 and to point out that clause 5 is a novel thing in its character and makes a provision which never existed in the statute book at all. Therefore any litigation or any controversy or any dispute arising as a result of what has been embodied in clause 5 will be something new which does not exist at present in the experience of courts. Appeal to the collector, appeal to the commissioner that the size of the family has been over-estimated, appeal to the commissioner that larger area has been exempted from attachment and from temporary alienation than is absolutely necessary, appeal to the collector on points that the income of the son is sufficient and so forth all these points which never existed in the statute book before and which have been created for litigation for the first time by clause 5 are such that time should be allowed at any rate for litigation on these points. Time ought to be deducted from the period of limitation, time which is spent in adjudicating on these new matters. Mr. Puri's amendment covers a much larger area and wants provision to be made for litigation on many other points, but what I wish to point out to the House is this that the points of controversy now created by the Council itself on matters which are new on the statute book ought to be provided for.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram (South-East Rohtak, non-Muhammadan, Rural): I will first reply to the objection raised by the honourable member, Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath. He says that the appeal to the commissioner is provided for the first time as a result of the present law, and that, therefore, at least the period of time which might be taken in the decision of an appeal to the commissioner ought to be excluded from the period of six years now fixed for the execution of decrees. I do not think there is any difference whatever between the position now and the position which existed before on principle. After all any time that is taken up in the decision of one kind of objection or in the decision of another kind of objection does not make any difference in principle. The only question before the House is whether a shortening of the period of execution from twelve to six years is or is not desirable. I explained before and I may repeat that explanation again that the object is to remove this sword of Damocles hanging over the head of the judgment-debtor as soon as possible. At present it takes a whole generation's time to remove this sword of Damocles and it is, therefore, desirable that the period of limitation should be fixed at six years because the present period is too long, far too long. The length of the present period induces indifference and apathy not only in the court and the judgment-debtor but also in the decree-holder. One effect of the shortening of the period of limitation for the execution of decrees will be that the decree-holder will be more earnest and more active in getting his decree realized than he has been so far. The courts will also be more vigilant and more energetic in execution work than they are at present. And the judgment-debtor will also try to pay as much as he can within these six years as a result of more rigorous proceedings.

I may turn my attention now to a few objections which were raised by the honourable member, Rai Bahadur Mukand Lal Puri. He made a reference to the opinions of certain eminent persons including the honourable judges of the High Court. He has forgotten all along that the provision on which these officers expressed their opinion was very substantially different from the provision with which we are dealing at present. The points of difference are as follows. The original provision was retrospective in its effect. That retrospective effect has been done away with under the provision as it stands at present. Then, provision has been made for the execution of decrees beyond the period of six years in cases of fraud or force resorted to by the judgment-debtor. Again, the operation of Article 183 of the Limitation Act has also been saved. Again, under the original clause 7 there was no reference to any fresh application. Here what is prevented is the making of a fresh application after six years. If an application has already been made and is actually pending it can be carried on up to ten or, perhaps, even twelve years in exceptional cases. Suppose an application for the execution of a decree has been made after the expiry of five years and nine months. That application is within time. And while the original clause provided that execution proceedings will come to a close after a period of six years, under the provision as it stands at present there is no limit of time up to which these execution proceedings can continue. (An honourable member: Is that not practically the effect even now? The honourable member knows it as a lawyer). Practically, as a lawyer, I know that execution applications can be continued for three, four or five years, after they have once been made. I beg to submit that the criticism to which the present clause was subjected by Mr. Puri has no longer any force.

The honourable member, Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit, said that the Unionists and the Government seemed to be forgetting that here we were dealing not with claims but with decrees. I do not think that either the Government or the Unionists forgot that they were dealing with decrees here. All the members representing the debtor classes know quite well that they are here dealing with decrees, and it was in order to provide against the harshness of the present unnecessarily long period of execution that this reduction was sought. In the clause as it stands at present the word "decree" has occurred as many as eight times, and if nothing else could wake up the Government or the zamindar members certainly this use of the word as many as eight times in the clause would remind them of it, and however dense, the honourable member, Pandit Nanak Chand, may think, the Government to be, Government is not likely to overlook the recurrence of the word as many as eight times in the clause.

The same honourable member contended that it was very harsh to deprive the decree-holder of the fruits of his decree. The period of limitation has nothing to do with depriving the decree-holder of the fruits of his decree. The only question is that instead of twelve years he has to depend upon six years for the execution of his decree, and the period of six years can be extended to nine or ten years by the continuation of proceedings under the last application. I think that the period is sufficiently long to secure all realizations which are possible. If realizations are entirely impossible, then it is useless to wait more than nine or ten years. Therefore I beg to submit that the shortening of the period is highly desirable.

and will really result in greater despatch, greater efficiency and greater energy on the part of both decree-holders and courts.

I may also say a few words with regard to the criticism offered by the honourable member Kanwar Mamraj Singh Chohan. He said that the law unfortunately has been made different for different persons. A limitation of six years will hold good in the case of a debtor as defined in the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act and a period of twelve years will apply in the case of those who do not fall under that definition of debtor. I am a little surprised at the change in his attitude. This amendment was moved by Government three days ago and when this amendment was moved my honourable friend did not rise to oppose it on the ground that a difference was being made between one set of judgment-debtors and another set of judgment-debtors. I do not know what has happened in between to bring about a change in his opinion. Of course, he is welcome to change his opinion; he has a perfect right to do so. But the time for opposing this invidious distinction as he calls it was when the amendment was first moved by Government. Again, I have not been able to understand whether he criticised the present amendment in the interests of judgment-debtors or in the interests of decree-holders, whether he wanted to safeguard the interests of judgment-debtors or those of the decree-holders. I have not been able to understand the object or motive of his opposition as clearly as I should like to.

Mr. President : The question is—

That clause 11 as amended stand part of the Bill.

The motion was carried.

Clause 12.

Khan Sahib Chaudhri Riasat Ali (Gujranwala, Muhammadan, Rural) : I beg to move—

In clause 12 for the words following the word "unless" in line 7, the following words be substituted :—

"the consideration is acknowledged by a debtor in his own handwriting or has been endorsed by the registering officer acting under section 58 (1) (c) of the Indian Registration Act, 1908, as having been paid in his presence."

The amendment, as I shall show, is an improvement in the third stage of the original clause. If you refer to clause 8 of the original Bill the only exception you will find which was made in it was in the case of a receipt. And no exception was made in the case of documents which have been registered under the Indian Registration Act or in those cases in which the debtor himself has acknowledged the consideration. Clause 12 as it stands is surely an improvement on clause 6 inasmuch as the words following the word "him" and beginning from the word "unless" have been added. This amendment is surely an improvement on clause 12 as it emerges from the select committee inasmuch as the consideration acknowledged by a debtor in his own handwriting has also been included. According to clause 12, the only exception was in the case of documents which had sanctity on the ground of their being registered under the Indian Registration Act. Under this amendment another exception is made so that we have in a way toned down the so-called severity of the clause as it originally stood in clause 6 of the original Bill or in clause 12 of the Bill as it has come out of the select committee. I may remind the House that the law of the land at present is the same as the amendment seeks to make it. I invite reference to 102 Indian Cases, page 283, where it has been admitted that in the case of a registered document the onus of proving that it is without consideration is on the party alleging it. The presumption in such documents is that they are correct and that everything was explained to the party by the registrar. This is the principle repeated in 2 Lahore 149. My amendment seeks to enunciate the same principle and therefore it is in no way a departure from the present law. With regard to the second part which I have added now, that is the acknowledgment in his own handwriting of the consideration by the judgment-debtor, I would invite reference to 95 Indian Cases 25. It was there laid down that where the defendant admits having signed the acknowledgment in the plaintiff's account book the burden is on him to prove that the consideration, in this case it was grain, was not delivered. This means that I have in a way simplified or toned down the severity of the clause as it stood. With these words I move the amendment.

Mr. President : The question is—

In clause 12 for the words following the word "unless" in line 7, the following words be substituted :—

"The consideration is acknowledged by a debtor in his own handwriting or has been endorsed by the registering officer acting under section 58 (1) (c) of the Indian Registration Act, 1908, as having been paid in his presence."

The motion was carried.

Mr. President : The question is—

That clause 12 as amended stand part of the Bill.

Mr. J. D. Anderson (Legal Remembrancer): Last Tuesday there was a great slaughter of legal enactments in this House. So far as my memory serves me we destroyed section 58 of the Civil Procedure Code; we have knocked out large portions of the Indian Succession Act and we have interfered very considerably with both Muhammadan and Hindu law. The rather extraordinary feature of an extraordinary situation was that so far as my recollection serves, the honourable member who was mainly responsible for this slaughter did not realize what he was doing. He shut both eyes, fired both barrels and waited to see what game dropped from heaven. He thought he was only shooting at custom. As he has invited us to take part in the destruction of more law it is my duty to try to put before the House what I understand that law to be and what the effects of the proposed amendment may be. With your permission, I shall begin by reading to the House part of a statute. Section 102 of the Indian Evidence Act runs :

"The burden of proof in a suit or proceeding lies on that person who would fail if no evidence at all were given on either side.

The second illustration to that section is as follows :—

"A sues B for money due on a bond. The execution of the bond is admitted but B says that it was obtained by fraud which A denies. If no evidence were given on either side A would succeed as the bond is not disputed and the fraud is not proved. Therefore the burden of proof is on B."

There are other enactments which deal with negotiable instruments, but I think it would be simpler if I confine my argument to the Indian Evidence Act. That is the law of British India and it has been the law ever since 1872 when the Act was passed. I place emphasis on this date, since I have heard it said that there has been a change in the law, and in support of that proposition my attention has been directed to two judgments—one of the old Chief Court of this province and the other of our present High Court. The judgment of the Chief Court is commonly quoted as 17 P. R. 1888. Before I discuss this judgment I must remind the House that the head note of a judgment is no part of the judgment. It has not been of necessity drafted by the honourable judges and it is wrong, it is a sin in a lawyer to quote a head note, and also, to mistake the obvious fact that the judges are not the makers of law. They are the interpreters of law. It is their business to apply the law to the particular set of facts which they find is before them. Now in P. R. 17 of 1888 a certain mortgagee sued on the last day of limitation on the basis of a registered mortgage deed for possession of the mortgaged property. The mortgagor defendants resisted the suit on the two grounds that execution was not proved and that there had been no consideration. In the lower appellate court the judge placed the initial onus of proving that there had been no consideration on the defendants. One of the matters before the honourable judges of the Chief Court was whether the onus had been rightly placed. They held that in face of the registered mortgage deed once execution was proved the initial onus of proving that there had been no consideration was on the defendants who had set up the plea. They went on to hold that the defendants had discharged the onus. In the event they accepted the appeal and dismissed the suit. I ask the House to realize that the question was—"in the presence of a registered mortgage deed, on whom does the onus lie?" That was the matter which the honourable judges had to decide. That was the matter which they decided and in making their decision nowhere did they vary and nowhere did they depart from section 102 of the Indian Evidence Act.

I come now to the ruling commonly quoted as 6 Lahore 470. In that trial the matter which was before the Honourable Judges was when an unregistered document is before the court and its execution has been proved, on whom lies the initial onus of proving or disproving consideration? The honourable judges referred to the Indian Evidence Act. They referred also to the rulings of other high courts of India and particularly the view which had been consistently taken by the Allahabad High Court, and they found that there was no distinction in principle between a registered and an unregistered document, and that the initial onus was on the party which set up the plea of want of consideration. They found that the earlier ruling of the Chief Court 17 P. R. of 1888, was quoted before them as an authority for the proposition that if an execution of an unregistered deed was proved the onus of proving consideration was on the party which claimed consideration. The honourable judges pointed out that in 1888 the document before their predecessors had been a registered document. No question of the effect of an unregistered document on the onus of proof was before the judges in 1888 from which followed of necessity that any remarks which the judges in 1888 may have made about unregistered documents were not binding on the courts and were no more than obiter dicta. There has, I submit, been no change whatever in the law. We have the Indian Evidence Act of 1872, we have the judgment of 1888 so far as it is authority for the onus of proof in certain circumstances only and we have the judgment of 6 Lahore which is the authority for the initial onus in other circumstances.

Now, to a limited extent and with respect to certain persons only, the honourable mover of the Bill has invited the House to change the initial onus. I think that the mere reading of section 102 shows that to make a change of this kind is a very serious matter. You are hitting not an isolated fragment of the law but one of the great basic principles on which the law is built. There must be very sound reason, I submit, before the House can even contemplate the making of so great a change.

I am not at all sure that my honourable friend is not confusing to some extent the onus of proof with the quantum of proof. The onus of proof is a matter which is determined by law. If a party asserts any proposition,—take a simple proposition “Red is blue”—the initial onus is determined by the law of the land, which places it on the party which makes the assertion,—which would fail if no evidence at all were led. But, the quantum of proof—the amount of evidence which is necessary to establish any particular fact—is a different thing, and it is a thing which is entirely within the discretion of the judge. It cannot be determined by a legal enactment. One judge would hold that the statement of a single witness was sufficient to prove the proposition, while another judge would hold that 2,000 documents supported by 10,000 witnesses were not sufficient. It is a matter entirely within the discretion of a judge.

In the course of the debates on this Bill my honourable friend and his supporters have on a number of occasions referred to the atmosphere of the courts. I do not think that any one has gone so far as to suggest that the courts are definitely corrupt, but we have heard about the atmosphere of the courts and that the scales of justice are in the present circumstances weighed down in favour of the creditor and against the debtor. If that is so, let us consider what I have been saying about the quantum of proof, what bearing that has on this particular clause—the burden of proving that any consideration required to have been proved should be on the plaintiff. He can no longer rely on section 102 of the Indian Evidence Act. He has got to prove consideration. The obvious way for him to do it is by putting in the box one marginal witness. This witness is bound in the nature of things to uphold whatever is written in the bond—“that the debtor admits payment” or that “in my presence so many hundreds of rupees were paid.” But the thing is too easy. He has only got to lead a single witness, if the prejudice of the court is against the debtor, and if the prejudice of the court is not against the debtor there is no need whatever for the proposed enactment. The partial court accepts the statement of this one witness. The decree is passed exactly as it would have been passed in the present circumstances and the only difference which I can see which will be brought about by this enactment is that the unfortunate debtor will be burdened with a few more costs. I do not myself know whether this is really a sufficient reason for changing a fundamental principle of law.

Now there is another point which I would like to bring forward. Another very ancient, basic, fundamental, legal principle is that before the law all men are equal. I daresay that the lawyer members of this House will remember a succession of judgments in which various courts held that honorary magistrates, policemen, zaildars and lambardars were not witnesses worthy of credence, because of their connection with Government and because they would be desirous of pleasing the Government even at the expense of truth. In the spring of this year a Divisional Bench of the High Court of which one member was the Honourable Chief Justice brought out a ruling that this decision did not embody any correct legal principle. If all witnesses are equal in the eyes of law, you cannot judge a man, you cannot condemn him as a liar because he is a member of any particular class. But in this clause we have money-lenders subject to a different treatment from that which is given to all other classes of His Majesty's subjects. Here again we want very cogent reasons indeed, I venture to suggest, before we deviate in the administration of justice from the well-established principles of law.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram (South-East Rohtak, non-Muhammadan, Rural) : In clause 12 it is proposed to place the burden of proof in respect of consideration on a money-lender. It is intended that the burden of proving consideration even in the case of a registered document should be upon the money-lender unless money has actually been paid in the presence of the registering officer. Further, if the money is acknowledged by the debtor in his own handwriting then also no further proof should be necessary. If, however, neither of these conditions is fulfilled then it should be for the money-lender to prove that the consideration which he asserts he has paid has actually been paid. That is a perfectly reasonable and justifiable proposition. Unless the money has been paid in the presence of the registering officer or it has been acknowledged by a debtor in his own handwriting there is no reason why the debtor should have to prove that he had not received consideration of a particular bond or other document. Now, it has been said that if execution is proved then it is for the person who admits execution of the document to prove that any consideration evidenced by that document has not been paid to him. If the wording of the present amendment is studied with a little care and reflection it will be obvious that this amendment does not cover the cases of all debtors. It covers only those transactions which take place between money-lenders and persons belonging to illiterate classes. If a man is literate and acknowledges receipt of consideration in his own handwriting then he has to prove that no consideration was paid to him whether he is an agriculturist, or a village artisan or a shopkeeper. But is it unreasonable to expect that the money-lender himself should prove the passing of consideration in the case of a person who is quite illiterate? I, for one, think it is perfectly reasonable. The Honourable Legal Remembrancer has made a reference to section 102 of the Evidence Act. But that very Act contains another section which says that the burden of proof of a statement or assertion is upon the person who makes it. The money-lender goes into court and says that he paid so much money to a particular debtor. Is it or is it not reasonable to expect that man ordinarily to prove payment if the same is denied by the debtor? Again, there is a well understood principle that a negative proposition being extremely difficult to prove, perhaps even impossible in some cases, the burden of proof should be upon the person who makes a positive statement and not upon the person who simply negatives it. If a debtor comes into court and says in reply to the claim of the money-lender that he did not receive the consideration entered in the bond or bahi it is perfectly reasonable to expect the plaintiff to prove his statement. It is surely unreasonable to expect the man who simply says "no" to prove his negative statement. Again, while the Honourable Legal Remembrancer has made a reference to section 102 of the Indian Evidence Act, he has overlooked section 114 of the same Act. It is no use quibbling or attaching too much importance to technicalities of law. On the one hand you have the actual experience of so many people in this country. On the other you have the technicality of law. Is it or is it not the experience of almost 99 per cent. of the honourable members even in this House—(An honourable member: No). Even before the honourable member has heard what I am going to say he cries "no," I cannot attach any value to such a "no." I was submitting that the usual experience of the average people in this province is that a person who cannot read or write, usually puts his thumb-impression to an entry without any knowledge of its contents. Yet, if the thumb-impression is admitted the execution is held to be admitted by the court. If the thumb-impression is denied then it is sent for purposes of comparison to Phillaur, and if the expert says that the thumb-impression agrees with the sample thumb-impression then the execution is held to have been proved and the debtor is asked to prove that he did not receive the consideration.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang: Is that so in every case?

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram: Yes, that is the usual practice in all courts.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang: No.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram: The Honourable Minister has been out of touch with courts for six years. I wonder whether he was ever in touch with ordinary simple money suits in subordinate courts. Anyway the usual experience of people who practice in original courts is that if the opinion of the Phillaur expert is to the effect that the thumb-impression on the bahi or on a bond corresponds with the impression on a sample paper, then courts hold execution to be proved, and it is, then, for the debtor to prove that he did not receive consideration. As soon as the court receives the opinion of the Phillaur expert that the two thumb-impressions are of the same person the court asks the debtor to prove that he did not receive consideration. (An honourable member: No, no). The honourable member knows nothing of what happens in district courts. But the usual experience of mofussil lawyers is what I have stated. Is it fair, is it reasonable to expect a debtor to prove that he did not receive consideration if he merely admits that he put his thumb-impression on a particular document? I beg to submit that under section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act the presumption should be in accordance with the usual experience of those concerned in these matters. The usual experience of every average Punjabi is that an illiterate person puts his thumb-impression to a document without knowing its contents. He is never told that he has been advanced so much money. He may be advanced only Rs. 200 and yet the document may mention Rs. 1,000 or even Rs. 2,000 or Rs. 5,000 as having been advanced. Even if he is told the contents of the document he will not be informed of the correct figure that is entered. Therefore it is only fair that the law should be brought into conformity with the ordinary and usual practice of the province and the daily experience of those who are in the best position to know. It is in order to safeguard the interests of illiterate borrowers against the operation of the technicalities of law divorced from the realities of life that this provision has been put forward. The usual practice before 1923 was exactly what has been reproduced in this provision. But the contention of the Honourable Legal Remembrancer is that that practice was not in accordance with correct law. My answer to his contention is that if that practice offended against the exact technical law on the subject, here is an opportunity for him to help us to enact a provision which will be more in consonance with actual experience of people than was the case before. After all law is, or at least ought to be, the instrument of promoting the welfare of the people, and technicalities of law should not be allowed to be so used as to oppress the people who do not know how to safeguard their own interests. With these words, I appeal to the Government benches and also all the members of this House to see that this provision is passed into law. (Applause).

Mr. J. D. Anderson : May I request the honourable member to read section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act to the House? It is possible that certain members do not know the Indian Evidence Act by heart and I hope he will have the goodness to read the illustration (c) to that section.

Mr. President : If the honourable member passes on the book to the Secretary he will read the section as well as illustration (c) to the House.

Assistant Secretary (in the absence of the Secretary) read section 114 of the Indian Evidence Act and its illustration (c) as follows—

"The Court may presume the existence of any fact which it thinks likely to have happened, regard being had to the common course of natural events, human conduct and public and private business, in their relation to the facts of the particular case."

Illustration (c) says—

The court may presume that a bill of exchange, accepted or endorsed, was accepted or endorsed for good consideration.

(Honourable members : Please read further on under illustration (c))—

But the court shall also have regard to such facts as the following, in considering whether such maxims do or do not apply to the particular case before it—

As to illustration (c): A, the drawer of a bill of exchange, was a man of business. B, the acceptor, was a young and ignorant person, completely under A's influence.

Khan Bahadur Malik Zaman Mehdi Khan (Sheikhupura, Muhammadan, Rural) : The Honourable Legal Remembrancer made a statement to the effect that the clause under consideration creates a very extraordinary situation. But I think it is to be borne in mind that obstinate diseases demand drastic treatment. In fact a great mistake has been made by this Government from the very beginning. It has taken no notice of the requirements of the people of this country. The law which was suitable to or was suited for the temper or needs of the people of England was practically transported and applied to this country. There this Evidence Act is a very good law because there the people are literate and when they execute a document they know what they are doing, while here the circumstances are different. Most of the people with whom the sabukars or the shylocks who want their pound of flesh deal are absolutely ignorant of the language and the law. Secondly, the script in which the entries are made in bahis (account books) is Greek to these people, not only to these people but also to us who are B.As. They are absolutely ignorant of the script which varies in different districts or localities. I know of a case which happened in the nineties of the last century as it took place in my district. This was an entry relating to ginger root which is called "sund," which was worth only a pice or two. But after the lapse of some years, when the money-lender asked the zamindar for the repayment of his sum, the latter said he did not remember it. "You don't remember, you have taken a 'sunda' from me," meaning thereby a buffalo, as sunda and sund are written exactly the same way. The case went up to the court and it was decreed against him, probably for several hundred rupees and in the execution of that decree the well he owned was attached and sold. So we have to deal with such people who are very clever on the one hand and with the debtors who are ignorant on the other. Many agencies are employed by the money-lenders to secure thumb-impressions of simple and ignorant peasants. Sometimes thumb-impressions are taken by the patwaris or the police, or civil peons, who say here is the summons, will you put your thumb-impression here? I have got in my possession some blank sheets which I came by during the course of my official career which show that thumb-impressions are taken not only on entries but also on blank pages. I show them to you just for illustration. Therefore it is absolutely necessary that the onus of proof in such cases should be on the person who makes an assertion that he has paid such and such amount. I think generally the civil courts in this country—though I have not been in touch with them for over 20 years—do not frame issues in a negative form—there may probably be orders of the High Court on the matter too. The onus should be on the money-lender who says that he has advanced so much money to a debtor, and who is in possession of the account books. It is well nigh impossible for an ignorant peasant to prove that he did not receive the consideration. I therefore support clause 12.

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan (Ambala Division, North-East, Muhammadan, Rural): There is no doubt that the interpretation of law by the Honourable Legal Remembrancer is right. According to section 102 the burden of proof lies on the party who would fail if no proof were given there. But I say too much importance has been attached to it by him and those people who are acquainted with these things know it. The excesses of money-lenders are well known. They advance Rs. 50 and then a zero is added making it Rs. 500. There was a case in Ambala when Sir John (then Mr. H. J.) Maynard was the Deputy Commissioner and he detected it. He found at once that a zero had been added as it was in a different ink. But the money-lender was adamant and in spite of attempts at conciliation, settlement was not reached between the parties. The result was that the case went to the court and the man was sent to jail for two years. There are hundreds of such examples. So, in such cases you should make an exception. When we know that so many tricks are played, this Council must make an exception in the case of section 102. Of course it is undeniable that in the case which he has quoted this view was held in 1888. But views are often changed and there is no reason why this Council cannot make a change in what he called basic principle. Basic principles will of course apply to all cases in which there is no room for doubt. But when we know that there are such cases where dishonest means are adopted, when we know that money-lenders go to the villages and ask the man to put his thumb-impression on the settled account they themselves entering an amount afterwards as having been borrowed by them on that very day or as having remained in arrears, we must try to meet all such cases of dishonesty. I use the word "dishonesty" advisedly because in most of these transactions there is an element of dishonesty. A great deal has been said by my friends on this side that we are putting a premium on the dishonest debtor. But the debtor is never dishonest. He only tries to undo the mischief done to him by the dishonest creditor. How can this be done unless you change the law? The Legal Remembrancer cannot be ignorant of this. Many cases should have come to his notice when he was a deputy commissioner. He knows that these people resort to all sorts of subterfuges to increase the amount of the debt. That being so, what is the remedy except the one suggested? Every member of this House is aware that since the High Court adopted this method of entry in the bahis as the conclusive evidence of money lent, many dishonest decrees have been given by sub-judges who have to follow the lead of the High Court. If there is any doubt, you must be well aware of that case which occurred recently in the High Court, where the amount lent by a money-lender in the district of Gujrat was Rs. 300 in 1888 and in 1934 the decree was for Rs. 2,10,000 which was maintained by the High Court. Do you think that there is any other way of meeting or stopping such cases except by the shifting of burden of proof? (Interruption). This is of course an exception. I am prepared to accept if you suggest any other method of meeting this. If the money had been fraudulently and dishonestly piled up on the debtor and if a huge sum had been put up, what is the alternative except that this burden of proof should be shifted? In this case we are not affecting any basic principle of the law as the honourable member says and I submit this with due deference to the learned Legal Remembrancer. It is only a matter of convenience. Does he mean to say that all cases are decided on this basic principle? The burden of proof is placed on the man who asserts a fact, so this is not a basic principle we are touching. We know as a matter of experience that the burden of proof should be on the money-lender about the money which passes as consideration and particularly with regard to entries in bahis. My friend here was very lenient in his amendment, though I wanted to oppose him, that if there is any entry in the handwriting of the debtor then the burden of proof will be on him. For instance a man has made a signed entry and got another as a witness and then put a sum over it to say that the money has passed and the transaction took place; in such cases the burden of proof should be on the debtor. Even that was a concession from us and with that in view the burden of proof should be surely put on the money-lender in all these transactions which are not registered. With these words I support the motion.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri (Punjab Industries): It is hardly possible to add anything to the learned exposition of law given by the Legal Remembrancer, but certain wild statements have been made on the floor of this House which ought not to be allowed to go unchallenged. Some members have talked glibly of the dishonesty of the creditor, but if one were to go by the experience of courts for the last ten years in this matter or if an enquiry were made from the district and subordinate judges in the province in whose courts these suits are tried, a dishonest debtor and a dishonest judgment-debtor would be found to be a far more frequent phenomenon than a dishonest creditor. False pleas of payment, palpably and transparently false pleas of discharge of debts by alleged payments in money, grain and cattle, propounding of false and forged receipts of alleged payments by defendants and judgment-debtors and particularly by zamindars would be found to be a far more frequent phenomenon, permit me to repeat, during the last ten years than false claims by creditors. Only day before yesterday in the High Court it was found that a false and forged receipt of payment of Rs. 2,800 was put in by a debtor from the Ambala district and it was found to be clearly a traced forgery. Curiously the plea was that he had paid Rs. 2,800 by the receipt and discharged the entire debt, but if the courts found that it was not paid, then instalments may be fixed. Therefore it is too late in the day, I want the House to note, that with this prevalent dishonest mentality of the debtor, and which the senior officers of the Government like the Financial Commissioner have reported, has been intensified by recent indebtedness legislation and the propaganda, that it is the dishonesty of the debtor which needs to be curbed, and not any possible dishonesty of the creditor.

Khan Bahadur Malik Zaman Mehdi Khan: On a point of order. The Rai Bahadur referred to a case. If the case is sub-judice he is not right in commenting upon it.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri: The case is not sub-judice. The District Judge of Ambala found that the receipt was forged and the judgment was upheld by the Division Bench consisting of Honourable Mr. Justice Addison and Honourable Mr. Justice Rashid day before yesterday and I was a counsel in the case. I appeal to my honourable friend the Legal Remembrancer than whom I know there is no greater friend of zamindars—I know this because he was my colleague on the indebtedness committee presided over by Mr. Calvert, when we discussed the problems connected with indebtedness—I ask him to make a statement on the floor of this House if the phenomenon of a false oral payment or even propounding of false and forged receipts of alleged payments by debtors is not of as frequent occurrence as a possible false claim by a creditor. He has worked as a district judge and he is in a position to give authoritative opinion on this matter. I will accept his verdict based on his experience unhesitatingly. If there are any other retired judicial officers either on these benches or other benches in this House, I should like them also to enlighten the House in the light of their experience and I make hold to say that they will endorse every single word of what I have said which is based on my experience as a lawyer. Therefore it is time that this outcry of dishonest creditor and of an honest innocent lamb of a debtor were given the good-bye as it should be, by all decent people who do not wish to distort facts.

Again another wild statement was made contrary to what our legal expert had pointed out that if thumb-impressions are proved to correspond execution is proved. The courts only hold execution proved if they find that the thumb-impression was affixed to a particular document with knowledge of its contents. It is only then that any court would be justified in holding execution proved and this is the correct statement of law on the subject.

Pir Akbar Ali : That is what is desirable.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : This is what the law is. Further, the effect of this clause is that what was held in their favourite ruling in P. R. 17 of 1888 should also be given the good-bye. When these honest innocent lambs have executed a bond or a receipt written by a petition writer on judicial or stamp paper in the presence of witnesses and when further afterwards they have appeared before the registrar and have acknowledged the execution of the receipt after it has been read out to them by the registrar in open court and in the presence of witnesses, and when the registrar, after satisfying himself in the presence of the witnesses endorses in his own handwriting that the executant has admitted the execution of the document and has admitted that he has received consideration, even this is not enough to place onus probandi on him unless cash has been paid in the presence of the registrar. This is what this clause which has been placed before the House means and by this clause the sanctity of the registered document is also being thrown to the winds. Is it an attempt, I ask, to improve the legislative and administrative machinery of our province by throwing a doubt on most solemn acts of our registrars. Rao Bahadur Chhotu Ram has often said that he wants to go back to less civilized methods of administration prevalent before the British. This is what he actually wrote in his minute of dissent as a member of the select committee on the Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Bill. There would be time enough, under the new constitution to revise all that the British administration has done in introducing a rule of law in this land and what they considered to be civilised methods of dealing between man and man. I think we are on the eve of a situation when all those standards are going to be revised soon. This Bill has been rightly described by the Legal Remembrancer as a "Slaughter of legal enactments" Bill. Let me hope that this attempt to amend section 102 of Evidence Act, Act I of 1872, is not the beginning of the end, the end of a system of jurisprudence introduced in this country by the British.

Mr. President : Question is —

That clause 12 as amended stand part of the Bill.

Clause 13.

Mr. President : The question is—

That clause 13 stand part of the Bill.

The motion was carried.

Clause 14.

Mr. President : Clause 14.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit : Clause 14 refers to the registration of money-lenders and I wish to oppose the clause. I gave detailed reasons in the speech which I delivered the other day. I only wish to say something of what I said that day. First of all, registration of money-lenders is entirely a new thing. It is not known to any law in India so far. The question of the registration of money-lenders was taken up by the Government of India in 1919 and the Government of India after consulting the provincial governments came to the conclusion that the registration of money-lenders was an impossible task. In 1923 the question was taken up by the Legislative Assembly and a debate was then held in the Legislative Assembly on the Bill moved by Mr. Muhammad Yamin, but the Bill was resisted by the Government of India.

Mr. President : The honourable member is repeating word for word the argument advanced by him already.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit : Quite so. I am not repeating word for word, but I am only giving the arguments briefly. In 1923, as I was submitting, the question of the registration of money-lenders was discussed in the Legislative Assembly and on behalf of the Government of India, Mr. Haig controverted that proposition. I will not repeat what I said the other day, but will only give the various facts. In 1925 again this Council, the Punjab Legislative Council, considered the question at great length when a Bill was moved by Mir Magbool Mahmood. It was then found that the registration of money-lenders was an impossible task. The Government of India was of the opinion that the registration would work great hardship and would really kill rural credit. Moreover, the registration of money-lenders is impossible from other points of view because here in India everybody is a money-lender as well as a debtor. (Interruption). I am talking of the majority in India. The minority may be left aside for the time being. Considering the past history, this question was definitely tackled and a decision on all occasions was given against the idea of registering money-lenders. Then again, the penalty imposed here is unheard of. I would therefore submit that the Government and the Council should not support the idea of registration.

The Honourable Sardar Sir Jogendra Singh (Minister for Agriculture) : There are just a few facts which I should like to lay before the Council. The number of agriculturist money-lenders excluding those who advance only against mortgages is about 19,000, according to the report of the provincial Banking Enquiry Committee. The percentage of land-owners on the total population is 20.5. According to Mr. Darling 88 per cent. of the proprietors are in debt. The main point which I think the House might consider is, that so far as the registration of money lenders is concerned, there is a very large number of agriculturist money-lenders who should also be affected. (Honourable members : Let them be.) It is very easy to talk lightly about the interests of other people. Have the honourable members consulted those who are going to be affected? Would they welcome their advocacy? I do not propose to speak on the merits of the clause. I just wished to give this information, so that the House might be aware, that there were a very large number of zamindar money-lenders who would be affected by registration.

Khan Sahib Chaudhri Riasat Ali (Gujranwala, Muhamimadan, Rural): I would like to submit that this is one of the most important clauses so far as this Bill is concerned. The honourable member, Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit in making his remarks has evidently forgotten sub-clause (3) of clause 1 of this Bill which provides that chapters 2 and 3 of the Bill are to come into force at once and chapter IV, the chapter dealing with registration, is to come into operation at the will of the local Government. So that the question whether the local Government wishes to apply this part of the Bill to any particular area makes it safe, as it is left in the hands of the local Government to decide whether there has been such a situation created as would justify the application of this part of the Bill to a particular area. So the argument that this House considered it as undesirable in 1923 and that this was thrown off in 1925 by the Council does not hold water at all. As I was submitting the other day, a law which is absolutely necessary to-day might be absolutely useless to-morrow and circumstances do differ from day to day in this province, what to talk of year to year. It goes without saying that at present the financial position in the province is such that it certainly justifies the registration of money-lenders. Moreover it is in the interests of the money-lenders themselves that this clause should be incorporated in the Bill. The simple result of it will be that the undesirable men who are the black sheep in the profession would be eliminated, and those people who are leading a lazy life as money-lenders will look to other enterprises to invest their money in. Consequently there will be an improvement in the wealth of the country because people would invest money in factories, in trade and industry and the money-lenders will no longer be sitting idle like the bagla bagat in a pond of small fish, on the chabuthra of his shop waiting for his prey.

There is also the other important thing to note, the intellectual disparity between the creditor and the debtor which now exists. It is an undeniable fact that the money-lender is as a rule clever, crooked and greedy while the debtor is simple, ignorant and needy. Taking into consideration this state of affairs it is extremely necessary that we should put some sort of check on the undue and unlimited activities of the money-lender.

As to the remark of the Honourable Minister for Agriculture that there are 19,000 agriculturist money-lenders in this province I would submit that even if there be one lakh of them we should have this clause. The wording of clause 14 applies the provision to all money-lenders as defined in the Act and there is no distinction between an agriculturist and a non-agriculturist money-lender. The clause requiring registration will apply to all money-lenders without any difference of creed or colour. It is the money-lender as such who is to be registered neither the agriculturist money-lender nor the non-agriculturist money-lender. There is no need in fact for this distinction. He may be anybody. We want that he should be registered in order to save the debtor. In this view, I would like to say, I am supported by at least two honourable judges of the High Court. The first is the Honourable Mr. Justice Abdul

Rashid and I will read out one sentence in which he says—

"I am strongly in favour of the provisions relating to the licensing and registration of money-lenders as this would improve the tone and the status of the profession of money-lending and ultimately benefit both the debtors and the money-lending class itself."

Then the Honourable Mr. Justice Monroe says in one sentence—

"I am strongly in favour of a system of licensing."

The next opinion is No. 17 and another No. 45. I am not going to quote them, but they say that taking into consideration the difference of mentality of the money-lender and the debtor it is extremely desirable that there should be registration. With these words I support the clause.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri (Punjab Industries): I do not wish to advance any lengthy or numerous reasons against this provision, but it is necessary to meet one argument which is the basis of the entire argument for this part of the Bill. It is said that in England there is a Money-lenders Act and that if there is an Act in England, why not have one here? That seems to be the entire basis of the two, if I may use the word, solitary opinions of judges who confronted with this fact have, contrary to the chorus of hostile opinions said in two short sentences, without discussion, why not have registration and licensing here if it exists in England? In order to determine whether registration or licensing should take place here, an examination of the conditions here is necessary, and the examination of those conditions has been made under the authority of the Government itself, not on one occasion but on several occasions and always with one result. The first time the Government of India was called upon to consider this matter was when they for the first time in 1918 introduced the Usurious Loans Act which was bodily taken out of the British Money-lenders Act of 1900. The provisions as to registration and licensing of money-lenders, formed part of the British Money-lenders Act of 1900, along with the provisions relating to the usurious loans and other provisions, but the Government of India, if you go into the history of the proceedings leading to the Usurious Loans Act, specifically did not adopt the provisions relating to the registration of money-lenders as definitely unsuitable for conditions in India and adopted those provisions of the British Money-lenders Act relating to usurious loans which could be adopted in India and proposed and passed an Act called the Usurious Loans Act of 1918. This is a circumstance which cannot be familiar to everybody except to those who have studied the literature dealing with the problem. That was in 1918.

Again, it was pointed out in speeches opposing the consideration of the report of select committee that this question of the registration of money-lenders was definitely taken up in the Legislative Assembly on the motion of a private member. The Government of India, as is their practice, invited the opinions of all provincial governments; and all the local governments unanimously, without a single exception gave it as their definite opinion that the provisions of the British Money-lenders' Act as to registration and licensing of money-lenders, or any system of licensing of money-lenders was unsuitable for conditions in India and was impracticable. I particularly refer this House or at any rate those members of the House who wish to pursue this matter further, to read the opinion of the Bombay

[R. B. Mr. Mukand Lal Puri.]

Government who drew special attention to the conditions in England and the conditions in this country and pointed out that the conditions in the two countries on this matter were entirely different. I shall not reiterate the reasons in detail but anyone who wishes to study the opinion may find it in the reports of the Legislative Assembly in the speech of the Finance Member which was read out to the House the other day. That was the second occasion when the conditions in India were investigated by the Government of India, and the registration and licensing of money-lenders in India was found to be unnecessary, undesirable and impracticable. That was, I think, in 1926.

Again, the matter does not rest there. Two expert committees were appointed, the Central Banking Inquiry Committee and also the Provincial Banking Inquiry Committee of which the chairman was our late Financial Commissioner, Mr. Calvert who was, if one may say, one of the sponsors of most of the agrarian legislation and also an advocate of the theory of restriction of credit as a panacea for the ills of the zemindars. These committees, the Central Banking Inquiry Committee and the Punjab Banking Inquiry Committee again investigated the matter, and with the full knowledge that there were enactments in the United Kingdom as to the registration and licensing of money-lenders, reported against any system of registration and licensing of money-lenders in India as the conditions in India and in the Punjab were different and found such licensing to be both undesirable and impracticable. In the light of that experience and in the light of expert material which has been collected by those committees, is the mover of the Bill justified in asking the House to discredit that material and embark on a line of his own? We had this very experiment tried in this very Legislative Council. Mir Maqbool Mahmood introduced a Bill called the Money-lenders' Bill, the object of which was registration and licensing. It was passed by the Council as, I apprehend, the present provision will be passed. But the Governor of the Province was Sir Malcolm Hailey. He did not give his assent and did not even consider it worth his while to return the Bill for reconsideration of the House, giving a promise to the House that he would on behalf of Government introduce a legislation which would meet the exigencies of the situation. The Punjab Government did in pursuance of that promise introduce the Regulation of Accounts Act which contains all that the Punjab Government thought was necessary in the circumstances. Is this attempt being made again with the hope that they might be able to secure under the present conditions what the previous Governor thought was not in the interests of the province? I would submit that there is absolutely no case made out for this. Anyone who is acquainted with actual conditions is also of the same opinion now. Honourable Mr. Justice Currie, who has worked as Collector, and Settlement Officer and now adorns the High Court Bench remarks "It is practically impossible to introduce such a system in this province where anyone with money is a potential money-lender." Honourable Mr. Justice Skemp agrees with him.

Again, I do not believe that there are no Chhotu Rams in other provinces. I do not mean any disrespect, but people who are enthusiastic about legislations of this kind have tried this experiment in other Councils, for example, the Bengal Legislative Council, but always with the same result. If you look at the original draft of the Bengal Money-lenders' Bill, you will find that in the Bill there were sections 5, 6 and 7 relating to the registration of money-lenders, but when the Bill came before the Council and the whole situation was explained, the Council did not consider it advisable to enact those clauses and the Bengal Money-lenders' Act does not contain any provision as to registration of money-lenders. That was in 1933.

Again, may I respectfully submit my own reason for opposing these provisions. We have been told, on reliable data, by the Honourable Minister for Agriculture—I find that all the Sikh members are absent, I do not know whether they are holding a meeting—that according to the Punjab Banking Inquiry Committee there are 19,000 agriculturist money-lenders (the number must be much larger now), and if I were only mindful of the interest of the non-agriculturists or what Chaudhri Chhotu Ram chooses to call the banias, I would be the first person to ask for the registration of money-lenders. My friend Pir Akbar Ali says that he and his party are for registration of money-lenders without distinction of caste or tribe. I can very well understand the reason which actuates him and his Muslim friends, because of the 19,000 agriculturist money-lenders, a vast majority must be Hindus and Sikhs and this registration does not materially affect the Muslims. But Sikhs cannot look upon it with that amount of indifference, as a very large number of both agriculturist and non-agriculturist money-lenders are Sikhs and that is why it appears, they are holding a meeting to decide their attitude in this matter. I repeat, if I had only the interest of any particular class, of non-agriculturist Hindus I would say that the registration of money-lenders is the only method of throwing the agriculturist back at the mercy of the non-agriculturist sahukar because by insisting upon registration and licensing, large number of agriculturist money-lenders will disappear in no time. I have given considerable thought to this matter, I have really given anxious thought to this matter and I have come to the conclusion that the effect of this registration will be that the big money-lender will be more influential and will be more powerful and the smaller fry will disappear and the big money-lender will become a real power in the land. But if this were the only effect, I would say, as my friend Pandit Nanak Chand has said, that registration and licensing may be tried, but I apprehend other effects—effects which not only I anticipate but those people who have studied these problems much more carefully, have repeatedly pointed out, that is, this registration would lead to the extinction of the casual money-lender, the retired officer, the retired doctor, the retired soldier and the widow with money, who provide the credit facilities, not only to the agriculturist but to the petty shop-keeper, petty artisan and the petty pedlar and also it may lead to restriction of credit to such an extent that it would affect trade and industry. There are no banks in the Punjab as in other countries. The existing banks do not touch even the fringe of credit. My fear is that by abolishing the money-lender you may not curtail the credit facilities to such an extent that you may dislocate the entire credit fabric of the province and that is my reason for opposing the registration in this country. We have not got the banking facilities in this country which exist in other countries where you would find a bank in every corner, in every district, in every place or in every group of districts. Here you have one or two indigenous joint stock banks for the whole province. They are no banks and whatever trade and industry is being carried on is being done, by the credit facilities provided by the much abused money-lender. This registration will restrict their number and will restrict credit to a great extent. I oppose the clauses relating to registration and licensing of money-lenders.

Mian Nurullah (Lyallpur South, Muhammadan, Rural): I do not agree with my honourable friend who represents Industries on one or two points and, therefore, I have got up to support this motion. I think that this is the most salutary provision in the whole Bill. If we had resorted to such legislation earlier we would not have been in the position we are now in. Most of the troubles would have been avoided and by registration the right sort of money-lending would have grown up. My honourable friend the member for Industries said, how can we function unless we have got money-lenders? I say that if we adopt this registration as one of the provisions we are sure to encourage banking—and it would be through banking that we will get a fairer deal—and thus we will be encouraging the industries of the province too.

My honourable friend also remarked that because registration is prevalent in England, therefore, it is argued that we should also have registration. I say certainly that is a very cogent argument. Registration was adopted in England in 1900 and for about 27 years there was no effective control over money-lending even after registration had been adopted. I might here quote from a little book "Money-lending in Great Britain" by Orchard and May. The very first two sentences in Chapter V 'The Beginnings of Administrative Restraint' read—

"The abuses in money-lending practices existing in 1927 were the same abuses that had existed in 1897. The Money-lenders Act of 1900 had failed to prevent them because the select committee of 1897 and 1898 had been timid about prescribing remedies and Parliament itself had been even more timid."

From this we should take a lesson. We should not be timid in any way now. We should go ahead with the provision and as this book says the registration had very little effect up to 1927 when the second measure was passed, that is, for thirty years this registration had not much effect. This measure will become effective only after a number of years. It must therefore, be passed now. Administrative control over the money-lenders can be had only by licensing them. The book further says—

"Any person desiring to carry on the business of money-lending could, under the Act of 1900, be registered upon payment of a small fee. There was no guaranty of his character or qualifications."

We are not at all very strict about the clause that we are now considering. In England they have stricter control over money-lending. If we were to go so far as England has gone, then each money-lender who wants a certificate will have to show that he possesses good character and qualifications. In England certificates can be had only under certain conditions. This measure is very mild compared with that prevailing in England. I may also point out that if we pass this clause, its effect will follow only after two years. I, therefore, whole-heartedly support the clause.

Mr. President: The question is—

That clause 14 stand part of the Bill.

PUNJAB LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

5TH SESSION OF THE 4TH PUNJAB LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

Friday, 29th November, 1935.

The Council met at the Council Chamber at 2-30 P. M. of the clock. Mr. President in the chair.

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT.

ASSAULT ON BAWA JIWAN SINGH.

Sardar Bishan Singh (Sialkot-cum-Gurdaspur, Sikh, Rural) (Urdu) :
I move—

That this Council do now adjourn to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the situation created by the dastardly and murderous assault of Bawa Jiwan Singh on the 28th instant in Lahore, and to urge upon the Government to take necessary steps to ensure safety of life and property in the province.

The atmosphere which has been created in Lahore during the last few months makes every Punjabi hang his head in shame. The Punjab has always enjoyed a noble reputation for chivalry, integrity and uprightness of character. But now when peaceful wayfarers are being assaulted and assassinated in the streets of Lahore that noble reputation has been seriously damaged. Is it not deplorable, I ask, that an innocent person who is walking in the street totally unaware of the impending danger should be suddenly stabbed? What is worse is this, that nobody comes to his help nor does anybody pay any attention to the groans of the poor man. Nobody comes forward to lift him up. Can you imagine a greater depravity of mankind? Is any fair-minded Punjabi or any member of this Council prepared to raise his voice against such dastardly attacks? At least nobody has done so, so far. What is most surprising to me is this that even the Government has not been able to discharge its duty of maintaining law and order effectively. We hear people complaining now that the Government is perhaps bound by some pact which it has concluded with the Mussalmans and therefore it has refused to do anything in this respect. Anyhow the people have been unable to assign any cause to this inertia of the Government when prompt action is expected of them. I want to invite the attention of the Government to a saying of Baba Farid which means that it is useless to expect grapes if you sow the seeds of a kikar tree, just as it is futile to expect a silken cloth if the yarn is made of wool. In the same way the Government cannot hope to see law and order established in the country if it takes no steps to improve the state of affairs.

We are on the threshold of a new constitution which will give us political autonomy. Under this constitution a community has been given permanent majority. It is, therefore, necessary for this community to win the confidence of the rest of the people living in this province. A democratic form of Government will not be able to work well without the co-operation of all communities in the Punjab. The Government should realise that if the state of affairs is allowed to continue as it is the trouble will spread throughout the province and then it will be very difficult to control it. I will appeal to my Muslim brethren that they should not sully their fair name by making or conniving at such dastardly attacks. They should make every effort to remove the present tension and create an atmosphere of peace and tranquillity.

Mr. President : The object of an adjournment motion is not always censure. Sometimes it is made in order to obtain fuller information than can be given by an answer to a question ; sometimes in order to rivet attention on a subject.

Now what is the object of the mover ? I suppose his object is to invite the attention of Government to the state of affairs prevailing in Lahore and to request the executive to ensure safety of life and property in the Punjab. Is that so?

Sardar Bishan Singh : Yes, Sir.

Sardar Bahadur Sardar Buta Singh (Multan Division and Sheikhupura, Sikh, Rural) : I rise to give my wholehearted support to this motion. This is not the first incident of its kind, when a peaceful Sikh while going along his own way, immersed in his own thoughts, is set upon all of a sudden by some ruffians who are armed to the teeth either with hatchets or some other lethal weapons. Every great religion, every code of morality, has always condemned such cowardly attacks on persons who are in pursuit of innocent callings. Such a person who makes such an attack in my opinion—and I think everybody will agree with me—is a mean wretch, a despicable creature, a standing menace to the peace and tranquillity and a traitor to his country, and last though not the least a disgrace to his own faith and religion. (Hear, hear.) There is a Urdu couplet which says—

مذہب نہیں سکھانا ایس میں بیور رکھنا

On the other hand every great religion stands for peace, toleration, goodwill, fellow feeling and even spirit of sacrifice for others. I may be allowed to quote a couplet from our Holy Scriptures—

اول اللہ نور آپایا۔ قدرت دے سب بندے

ایک نور ہے سب جگ آپچایا۔ کون بھلے کون بندے

لوگا ! بھرم نہ بھولو بھائی۔ خالق خلق خلق میں پور رہا سب نہ تھیں۔

Then again another great Muhammadan saint whose sayings are also incorporated in our Holy Scriptures, Baba Farid, says—

حو تھیں مارن کیڈان تھیاں نہ مارین گھم

آپڑے گھر جائیے پیر تھیاں دے چم

Then again there was a great saint named Abu Bin Adam and while I was a student perhaps of 8rd year class I read a poem about him. It is said that once upon a time he saw an angel writing something and he enquired from it as to what it was doing. The angel replied that it was writing down the names of those who love their Lord. He requested the angel to write down his name as one of those who love their fellowmen. The next day when that angel again re-appeared, it was found that his name was topping the list. So loving one's fellow brothers is the best and the most wholesome advice which has been given by all great religions. Sometimes misguided youths think that they will become martyrs by such foul actions, but I think the doors of Heaven will be shut against such persons. He will never be admitted there and his soul will be burning there for all the time in everlasting shame and misery. So I would request all honourable members of this House that such like deeds be condemned in no uncertain terms to-day. On the other hand I am very proud of my Sikh brethren that in spite of the fact that they were in possession of swords they have not perpetrated such a deed, and I would enjoin upon them that they should always have in view the fair name of their religion and their community and they should not perpetrate such a thing as has been done during all these days, because according to Sikh religion, and, I should say, even according to the Muhammadan religion, it is a sin to stab even one's enemy in the dark. What is done here? A person going unawares is followed by two or three ruffians and all of a sudden he is stabbed. I therefore request the Government to kindly take note of this fact and try to find out ways and means in which the security of the citizens of Lahore and of the province is kept in view. I would like to suggest one or two things which I should like the Government to adopt. A punitive police should be posted in the locality.

Mr. President : I am inclined to doubt whether under the terms of the motion under discussion it is open to the individual members to suggest the steps which Government should take for the safety of life and property in the province. I think it is for the Government to consider and decide what steps to take.

Sardar Bahadur Sardar Buta Singh : But can I not suggest some steps?

Mr. President : I am doubtful. The honourable members, who may offer any suggestions, will be expressing their individual opinions and not the opinion of the House.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit : Why cannot the honourable member suggest as to how peace can be maintained, so that Government may take into consideration his suggestion?

Mr. President : The motion is for discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, the situation created by the dastardly and murderous assault on Bawa Jiwan Singh on the 26th instant at Lahore and to urge upon the Government to take necessary steps to ensure safety of life and property in the province. It appears, therefore, that it is for the Government to decide what steps are necessary. If individual suggestions are allowed to be made, I am afraid, instead of improving the situation, they might increase differences, widen the gulf and create more hatred and further bickerings.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : How can you discuss the situation without discussing the causes, the effects and the possible remedies ? Is the fact that a man has been murdered only to be mentioned and nothing more ?

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : I sincerely hope that members will not go deeply into the matter. We have already spent four days in debating the Shahidganj affair. So for mercy's sake let us get rid of it.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit : That is entirely different. It is open to the honourable member to show how this disease is prevalent and to suggest remedies and it is for the Government to take what measures they think proper. Our view point may be different from that of the Government but I submit that we have got a right to suggest these things to the Government.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : The desirability or otherwise of saying anything which would lead to undesirable consequences is an entirely different matter from the constitutional right of members to say or not to say anything which they like.

Mr. President : The motion consists of two parts. The first part is to discuss the situation created by the dastardly and murderous assault on Bawa Jiwan Singh on the 26th instant in Lahore. The second part is to urge upon the Government the desirability of taking necessary steps to ensure the safety of life and property in the province.

Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath : And one of the steps is what the mover is suggesting.

Mr. President : But the steps the honourable members may suggest will not be put to the vote of the House. I am disinclined, therefore, to allow any suggestions as to the necessary steps the Government should take.

Sardar Sahib Sardar Ujjal Singh : Under the terms of the motion every member is within his right to suggest steps which he thinks necessary for the Government to take and it depends upon the Government to adopt those measures or not.

Chaudhri Afzal Haq : How can you judge what will be the result of our speeches ? If we cannot suggest the steps which the Government ought to take while discussing the necessity of taking steps for the safety of life and property in the province I do not know why we are here.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : I have no objection to hear reasonable suggestions provided that they do not provoke communal feelings. One thing I would urge and that is that we should avoid in this House any unnecessary exacerbation of communal feeling, and so long as suggestions avoid that I have no objection to hear them.

Mr. President : Subject to the limitations, suggested by the Leader of the House, the honourable members may make suggestions.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : Is that a constitutional limitation or discretional ?

Chaudhri Afzal Haq : When the Government have given permission to discuss a motion, I do not see any reason for the Government to put any limitations on the debate.

Mr. President : Subject to our Rules and Standing Orders the honourable members are free to say what they like. I shall be the last to impose unnecessary restrictions on speeches. It is my duty, however, to see that the honourable members do not come to blows on the floor of the House.

Honourable members : No, no.

Sardar Bahadur Sardar Buta Singh : I was drawing your attention to certain suggestions which to my mind were very necessary for the Government to consider. The first was punitive police to be posted in the locality in which such murders take place. I do not want to give reasons, they are already known to the Government. Then the Press and especially the vernacular Press should be curbed in their propensities towards propagation of class and communal hatred. Thirdly, there is a wrong impression outside the House in the province and in districts that by issuing certain communiqués an impression has been created that the people can carry all sorts of weapons although only swords have been exempted from the Arms Act. There is that impression not only among the illiterate classes but even among educated people. Yesterday I came across a retired head constable of police who told me that every weapon, hatchets and spears and everything was exempted. That impression must be removed. The next thing for the Government to do is to impress upon the minds of the subordinate police officials that they should remain loyal to their duty irrespective of their caste, creed and religion. The Government must also be sparing in their eulogy of the spirit of restraint evidenced by one community or the other. Some of the bad people think that restraint allows the killing and murdering of one or two persons, and that they can do anything they like within the limits mentioned above. I have also an appeal to make to my Muhammadan brethren. I would request them that they should try to condemn such foul deeds and also to keep the masses under control. False leaders are trying to take their places. If the real leaders were there, I do not think these masses could be decoyed to do something which they ought not to do. Then I would also request them to try to appreciate their position as a majority community with respect to the new constitution which is coming along. I think peace, good-will and a spirit of co-operation should be there so that all of us might be able to carry on the new constitution when it is before us. Because I think it is time that we should try to make up all our differences, and the people in the country should come to know that we are trying to be one, so that they might follow us and thus end this stagnation. Remember the sayings "that it is not what we take but what we give up that makes us rich," "he is truly happy who makes others happy." I will conclude my speech with a quotation from Shakespeare—

"Love thyself last, cherish those hearts that hate thee.

Corruption wins not more than honesty.

Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace.

To silence envious tongues be just and fear not.

[S. B. S. Buta Singh.]

Let all the ends thou aimest at be thy country's Thy God's and Truth's.

Sow good services, sweet remembrances will grow out of it.

Just the art of being kind is all this sad world needs."

Khan Bahadur Mian Ahmad Yar Khan Daulatana (Muhammadan Landholders): It is the duty of every peaceful citizen to condemn a murder and as a matter of fact all crimes that disturb the peace of a country and particularly of an unhappy province in which we have a lot of explosive material and where numerous candles of religious fervour and historical misunderstandings are burning all along and all round with an intellectually mischievous breeze blowing at the top of it. Our creed is the creed of humanity and our religion the religion of human brotherhood and we always consider it our duty to condemn any murder committed with any motive or under any provocation, however, great. Perhaps you remember that the members of our party and a muslim member of the Legislative Assembly and Pir Jamaat Ali Shah very strongly and promptly condemned the murder of a Sikh by a Muslim. We shall always do it and expect others to do the same. But it was rather disappointing to discover the failure of my Sikh friends to condemn the Shahdara murders and I am sure that that omission was neither intentional nor deliberate. Without being in possession of facts of the murderous assault under discussion, I condemn it. This part of the House is sincerely and genuinely anxious to see peace and harmony and goodwill prevailing in the province, friendly, nay, brotherly relations between the various communities of the province and genuine co-operation between the Government and the public.

The members of this party in January 1931 requested you and His Excellency the Governor to call a special session of this 3 P. M. Council and in that session on behalf of this party I moved a resolution which was adopted by this Council, in the following words:—

"This Council recommends to the Government that adequate measures be adopted forthwith to cope with anarchical crime."

And in moving that resolution, I said—

"As we all know, during the time of disturbance, generally bad men have the most power; Mental and moral excellence always requires peace and quiet." (Punjab Debates, Vol. XVII, page 250.)

I really fail to understand the importance and significance that is being attached to this particular incident. You know that the conditions in this province were not very satisfactory sometime ago, but I am sure no one will have any cause of complaint against the members of my party that they have failed in their duty in any way. Whenever there was an occasion we always condemned actions of this kind. It is with disagreeable surprise that one finds unnecessarily frequent mention of the attitude of the majority community towards the minority communities in this province and its effect on the future constitution. That, to my mind, is somewhat irrelevant on occasions like this. It is really very fortunate that in this province the strength of the various communities is so well-balanced that apart from being undesirable it is impossible for the majority community to ignore the wishes of the minority communities. And the fear of any minority community in this respect is without any foundation. It is no good telling us that minority communities suspect your shaking shoulders while walking and that a strong case is being made against you by the minorities because you put your hands in pockets while standing. We have neither the remotest desire of getting anything more than the majority community of any other province nor have we the slightest fear of getting anything less. It has been always the keen desire of members of this party to maintain law and order in this province. And our views on the subject are truly represented in the famous verse of that great Eastern philosopher, Dr. Sir Muhammad Iqbal, who says—

دھر میں عیش دوام آئیں گی پابندی سے
موج کی آزادیاں سامانِ شہر ہو گئیں۔

Its meaning in English would be this : The observance of restrictions as applied by the recognised laws whether of Nature or of society is basic principle on which the eternal happiness of men and the regular movement of the spheres depend. Whoever breaks himself loose from the rigours of this law comes to grief. The surging waves of the ocean that break from their regular course soon find themselves scattered and lost in the unabated fury of their uncontrolled freedom.

In the end I would request all my colleagues through you, Sir, who wish to take part in this debate, to make speeches short, to the point and in a way the effect of which would be rather soothing than irritating on the healing of the somewhat wounded peace of this province.

Mr. A. V. Askwith (Home Secretary): I should like, with your permission, to say a few words regarding two or three sentences which occurred in the last speech but one, the speech made by Sardar Bahadur Sardar Buta Singh. The Sardar Bahadur referred to certain misunderstandings which he suggests at present exist as to the effect of the notification which was published recently by the Government of India (on the suggestion of the Punjab Government) regarding the unlicensed possession and carriage of swords. The Sardar Bahadur informed the House that according to his information that notification had given rise to a popular impression that persons are now permitted to possess and carry without license all kinds of arms, chavis, daggers, spears, axes and the rest. Actually, Government caused a communiqué to be published in the Press some ten days or a fortnight ago explaining that that was not the case. The notification which was published by the Government of India a few weeks ago related exclusively to swords. It had no effect whatever on the position in regard to the possession and carriage of daggers, spears, chavis or any kind of weapon other than swords. That has already been made clear in the Government communiqué. It is of course possible that that communiqué has not yet reached the general masses, but I am certain that Government can rely on the honourable members of this House to do their utmost to explain the true position to the public.

Chaudhri Afzal Haq (Hoshiarpur-cum-Ludhiana, Muhammadan, Rural) (Urdu): In the whole of the province there is not a single Muslim who does not respect the life and property of the Sikhs. When the first murder in connection with the Shahidganj affair occurred there was not a single individual amongst the Muslims who did not condemn it unreservedly. Not only this, but a Muslim leader, who when he came here declared that the killing of an innocent man was murder pure and simple and against the Quranic law. I assure the honourable Sikh members through you, Sir, that it is far from our minds to injure the feelings of or cause any hurt, howsoever trivial it may be, to any of the members of our sister communities. If a Muslim kills an innocent man whether Muslim or non-Muslim he is a murderer and not considered a member of the Muslim community. We Muslims do not regard such a person as one of us. The total population of this province is about 2½ crores out of which the Muslim population is about one crore 20 lakhs. How can you expect that every individual of any one community can be prevented from committing murderous assaults on individuals either belonging to his own community or to other communities? I assure the Sikhs and Hindus of the province that their idea that an agency is at work to commit such murders is quite unfounded. I request them to remove such an impression from their minds. Individual cases of assault or murder will continue to occur but we should abstain from giving them a communal tinge, and regard them only as signs of our country's misfortune.

شہر

The failure to lay before the people real facts about the Shahidganj affair was responsible for creating the present situation. Unfortunately for us all people who were in the know about the real facts of the Shahidganj affair did not come forward to lay them before the public at large. Some did not do it on account of the fear of Government while others did not do it on account of some private reasons of their own. Had this simple fact been brought to the notice of the people when still there was time for it, that responsible Sikh leaders had assured the Government that the mosque would not be demolished until and unless the Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee had arrived at a decision about it in its meeting which was to be held on the morning of the 8th, the relations between Muslims and Sikhs would not have been strained. If the position of the Sikhs had been cleared by making such facts known to all sections of the people, no deplorable incidents would have occurred. The situation would never have been aggravated had this been done at the proper time. But who could take upon himself the responsibility of bringing all these facts to light. Had the newspapers published the real facts about Shahidganj and convinced the masses that it was not the fault of the Sikhs that the mosque had been demolished, the next natural question would have been to find out the real authors of this misdeed, and if this question had cropped up it would have gone against the interest of Government. No one in the Punjab Press dared to take up this question and point out the real authority responsible for disturbing the peace and tranquillity of the province. I often tried to muster up courage to do it and expose the real authors of this unfortunate incident but the fear of the consequences which naturally would have followed such a step always kept me back from doing it. I can put before the House documentary evidence to prove the fact that the Sikhs actually wanted the Government not to allow such circumstances to crop up as would lead to unrest and disturbance on such a large scale as are at present being witnessed. The information published in a communiqué that a Sikh leader had sworn before Guru Granth Sahib to demolish the mosque was later on found to be incorrect.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : Must Shahidganj affair be raked up once more ?

Chaudhri Afzal Haq : I am not subordinate to you.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : You are certainly subordinate to the Honourable President.

Mr. President : The honourable member should not raise discussion of the Shahidganj affair.

Chaudhri Afzal Haq : I am entitled to submit before the Government through you that it was their duty to inform the people that responsible Sikh leaders had agreed to wait until the Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee had decided the question of demolishing the mosque one way or the other instead of publishing that the Sikhs had failed to abide by their word.

Mr. President : How is that relevant to the discussion now before the House ?

Chaudhri Afzal Haq : What I want to submit is that so long as the Government do not themselves take steps to enlighten the people about the actual facts connected with the Shahidganj affair the agitation will not stop. The Government should first themselves enquire into the real facts and then inform the public about them. The Government have not appointed any enquiry committee up to this time to go into this matter. An honourable Sikh member had made a statement in this House that winches were supplied by a certain Sikh gentleman named S. Dhayan Singh. The Government did not contradict this statement but it was incorrect all the same. It shows that up till now no one has tried to find out the real facts about this affair. Here is a statement given by S. Dhayan Singh. In it he denies that he supplied any winches for the demolition of the mosque. He also deposes that although he was in Lahore from the 7th to the 10th July he did not go to the Shahidganj during all this time. Here is a written statement of S. Dhayan Singh before the House. He has nowhere admitted the charges brought against him. All this shows that up to this time everything connected with this deplorable affair has been allowed to remain in the dark. Four months have passed since the time this sad incident occurred and the Government have not tried to discover the real facts of the case. Wrong facts are circulated among the people and still nothing has been done to inform them of correct facts. Then, the Chief Secretary stated that it was at one o'clock in the morning that they were informed that the mosque had been demolished.

Mr. President : Will the honourable member please speak to the motion before the House ?

Chaudhri Afzal Haq : What I want to submit is that the Government should set up an independent enquiry in order to find out the real facts and inform the people of the results of that enquiry. So long as the Government do not themselves make an enquiry and inform the people about the real facts connected with the Shahidganj affair the trouble will continue unchecked. I assure you, that, if once the people are made to understand the real facts of the case the trouble will cease and the strained relations between the Sikhs and the Muslims will once again become cordial. The other day Maulana Sayyed Habib declared before a gathering of 25,000 men that a very responsible officer of the Police Department had informed the Governor at 4 P.M. that the mosque would be demolished at night. Such facts are bound to create great misunderstanding in the mind of the public. But if the Government continues to deny such things, there will naturally be confusion and disorder in the country, and communal riots will break out everywhere. It is, therefore, the foremost duty of the Government to hold an inquiry into the whole affair and place the actual facts before the people. I am sure that the misunderstanding in the mind of the Muslims about the Sikhs is quite unjust. I would strongly appeal to all the members of the House to call upon the Government to institute an independent inquiry into the Shahidganj affair. I am at a loss to understand why the Government refuses to hold an inquiry about a matter which is a question of life and death for two communities, when it does so about small and trivial matters. This is the only way of improving the present state of affairs. When true facts come to light, the clouds of doubt and misunderstanding will disappear, and the two communities, which are now at daggers drawn, will once again live in peace and amity.

[Ch. Afzal Haq.]

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit (Hoshiarpur, non-Muhammadan, Rural) : I am sure the House feels gratified after hearing the speech of the Secretary of the Unionist Party, my friend on the right Nawab Ahmad Yar Khan Daulatana. His condemnation of this attempt at murder does, I hope, represent the feelings of the honourable members of those benches. Murder whether due to political motives or to religious motives or worldly motives is a murder after all and the murderer should not be praised and raised to the sky. It is undoubtedly true that the situation in Lahore and in the province is such that it is causing great apprehension in the minds of the minority communities. It would be no use our hiding this fact that so far as the minority communities in this province are concerned, they are feeling that there is such a situation likely to be created which the Government may not be able to control if certain effective steps are not taken by the Government for the future. It is undoubtedly true that the maintenance of law and order, the protection of the life of the peaceful citizens is a paramount duty of the Government whether that Government is a Hindu government or a Muhammadan government or a Sikh government or a European government, and this fact should not be lost sight of at this critical juncture when religious feelings are running high and are permeating even the villages of the Punjab. I am speaking with a full sense of responsibility. I have received complaints from various villages where certain sections of the people are oppressed by the other section—I shall not name the section but it is a fact and Government should take note of this fact when we bring it to its notice. I was specially gratified when I heard my friend Nawab Ahmad Yar Khan Daulatana when he placed the anarchical crime and the crime due to religious motives on the same footing. They do stand on the same footing and I would respectfully ask the Government that they should make no distinction between these two sorts of crime which the Government has been making in the past. While the dead bodies of murderers who commit murders on account of political motives and are consequently hanged are not permitted to be taken out in processions, and they are not eulogised, Government has been failing in its duty by permitting the dead bodies of murderers who commit murders with religious motives and are subsequently condemned to death to be taken out in procession. If the Honourable Finance Member wants instances they can be given to his satisfaction. Government should make no distinction and should not permit two thousand, five thousand or ten thousand men to assemble and do homage to the murderers whatever the cause of the murder may be. That is the first point which I would submit for the consideration of Government.

I wholeheartedly support the proposal made by Sardar Buta Singh that there must be the imposition of punitive police on those communities and in those localities where such a state of affairs occurs. This is absolutely essential. I would quote an instance that in the case of Bijwara in the Hoshiarpur district the Hindus and Sikhs were made to pay punitive tax in order to pay the police located there. The Muhammadans were not so made to pay because it was considered that the Sikhs and Hindus were giving protection to Babbar Akalis. Please turn to the debates of the Legislative Council and the questions put by me and the answers given by Sir John Maynard to the questions that I put. There is the instance. The same thing should be done if the peace of the province is to be maintained. Government should make no distinction whether it is a Hindu government, or a Muhammadan government or a European government. Otherwise there will be no peace.

I would say that the taking out of processions with drawn swords and with other weapons of warfare should be prohibited. These processions to the tune of 20,000 or 40,000 pass through the streets of Lahore and other places and people have actually begun to think that the Government has ceased to function and those who have got murderous intentions begin to think that the old order has changed and some new order has come into being. Government should promptly prohibit such processions which come out with naked swords. No doubt the concession of keeping of swords has been given to the people but it does not mean that they should parade them in the streets and in the bazaars and the peaceful population should be given the impression that the old order has changed or that the ruffians should think that they would be permitted to parade about with drawn swords and armed with pick axes and hammers. I do feel that honourable members will co-operate with the Government wholeheartedly if Government is really going to hold the scales even between the various communities. Whatever wrong impression there may be it is the duty of Government to remove it at the earliest possible opportunity and I know respectable Muhammadans, responsible Muhammadans, Hindus and Sikhs are all very anxious that the peaceful atmosphere should prevail once more and that the communities which have lived in peace in this province and want to live in peace and want to take the full advantage of the reforms should be permitted to do so, and they do feel that some very strong and prompt action is needed at the hands of Government.

Sardar Sahib Sardar Ujjal Singh (Sikh, Urban) : A most brutal, cowardly and unprovoked attack made on Jiwan Singh a few days after the murder of Bishan Singh has created a sense of insecurity and terror in the province. If it were a solitary instance of its kind we would have left it alone but unfortunately it is one of a series started four months back. The circumstances of this particular instance are very tragic. Jiwan Singh is a prominent Akali worker. He is said to have taken active part in Shahid-ganj affair. He is an electrician by profession. He passes through a thickly populated bazaar after performing his day's work. All of a sudden he is attacked by two or three persons. No one comes to his rescue. No one tries to catch the perpetrator of this heinous crime. Not only that, the most inhuman part of the affair follows. He is allowed to remain in the street bleeding and almost dead. No one in that locality renders him even first-aid. No one in that bazaar tries to take him to the hospital or to the police station, till a young Sikh comes and takes him in a tonga to the police station. The whole population in that locality has been watching the fun in a manner in which such brutal deeds were watched in the old Roman Forum. Even in the open warfare the deadliest of enemy is not treated in such callous and inhuman manner in which Jiwan Singh was treated by the Muslim population of that locality. (An honourable member : Question.)

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan : Is the honourable member quite certain of the locality? Even the police have not yet come to any conclusion as to where he was stabbed.

Sardar Sahib Sardar Ujjal Singh : It has been definitely stated that he was stabbed in the Sheikupurian bazar and that locality happens to be a predominantly Muslim locality.

Pir Akbar Ali : The honourable member is condemning a whole community without stating facts.

Mr. President : Is that a point of order?

Pir Akbar Ali : Yes, Sir, I think it is.

Sardar Sahib Sardar Ujjal Singh : An attempt to murder an innocent person in such tragic circumstances requires to be condemned universally and particularly so by the followers of the Muslim faith for the supposed promotion of which the assailants are alleged to have perpetrated this detardly crime. (An honourable member : Question.) Rather than condemn this action a section of the Muslim Press has tried to throw mud on the incident and has tried to debase the victim. Condemnation, spontaneous and immediate would have soothed the wounded feelings of the Sikhs and would have had the effect of discouraging such crimes in future, but not a word has so far been said except to-day on the floor of this House. All honour to those who in the last murder of Bishen Singh condemned the action of the assailants, but it is a matter for the greatest regret that such actions have not been universally condemned by the Muslim public in general. The duty of the Government is clear in a matter like this. It must ruthlessly suppress such terrorist crimes. It must assure by deeds the panicky public of the province that it means to govern. Hindu and Sikh lives in this province have become unsafe. I do not say that in certain Muslim localities every Muslim is a murderer; but unfortunately the murder of Jiwan Singh has thrown a different light. Unless the population of that locality had some sympathy with the assailants, the assailants could not have made good their escape. The Government should treat these offenders and the people who sympathised with such assailants in the same way in which the Bengal Government were treating the Chita-gong population. These places have become asylums of terrorist crimes and unless Government takes up a firm attitude the danger is that crimes of this nature will multiply.

Another great source of this evil is the gutter Press of the province. (Hear, hear.) The Government must control this gutter Press. If I may say so, it is mostly responsible for spreading communal hatred. (Shaikh Muhammad Sadiq: And also speeches in this Council.) Yes, also some of the speeches in this Council and the honourable member has no small share in that. If I may point out, one paper that goes by the name of Shaukat had the hardihood to use filthy language about the Sikh Gurus. Government must control such papers. I am not able to understand the object of these unprovoked attacks on innocent Sikhs. If the object of these misguided people is to overawe the Sikh community and to coerce them to surrender to their demands—

Chaudhri Allah Dad Khan: Is it proper for the honourable member to say that a Muslim was concerned in this affair? The culprit has not yet been detected.

Sardar Sahib Sardar Ujjal Singh: If the object of these people is to coerce the Sikhs into surrendering to the demands of the Muslims, they are living in fools' paradise. There has been no retaliation on the part of the Sikhs. That goes to the credit of the Sikhs. It is not a sign of the fact that the Sikh are demoralised. The Sikhs do not believe in such cowardly acts, the Sikhs believe in open fight and not in such inhuman deeds. I do not know how long the Government is going to allow such crimes to be perpetrated. The Government should move all the machinery at its disposal and mobilise all its force to stop such assaults on innocent and law-abiding citizens. The evil is spreading rapidly and it should be nipped in the bud. In this task of suppressing lawlessness I believe the Government will have full support of this House and the full support of all right-thinking citizens. (Hear, hear.)

Shaikh Muhammad Sadiq (Amritsar City, Muhammadan, Urban): I unreservedly and without any hesitation condemn all murders and murderous attacks by Muslims on Sikhs and Hindus and by Hindus and Sikhs on Muslims. It is not only a question of Jiwan Singh being murderously attacked. We stand here to condemn all murders whether perpetrated by one community or another. Just as man is controlled by five senses, a community and a nation ought to be controlled by the five senses, namely honour, humour, toleration, sense of proportion and common sense. (Hear, hear.) I am sorry to find that the speeches in this House are devoid of at least one sense, sense of proportion. I strongly resent this foisting of all blame on the Muslim community. This will have only one result and that will be to proclaim to the world that the people of the Punjab did not condemn such murders. I ask my honourable friend, is it necessary for all Muslims that as soon as a Sikh is killed they should at once howl that they condemn the murder? At that rate what about the several murders that are being daily committed all over the province by the Sikhs themselves? Has my friend raised a single voice against those murders? That is not the practice in this province. We do condemn this murderous assault. Every Muslim child and every Muslim adult condemns this assault made on the Sikh gentleman. But it should not be for the honourable members to call upon us to condemn through papers and resolutions every such act. Such acts stand self-condemned once for all.

Now, what is the position? As soon as the assault took place all Muslim papers condemned it. I never expected my learned friend on my right (Sardar Sahib Ujjal Singh) to make such a venomous attack. It is not fair on his part to say, if a murderous attack takes place in Hira Mandi, a notorious place in Lahore where prostitutes live, that because that attack was made by a Muslim, so all Muslims should be blamed for it. Again he complained that no Muslim came to the help of that gentleman when he was lying wounded. I refuse to believe that statement unless there is evidence clearly to that effect. (An honourable member : But no one took him to the hospital.) I am not in the police department and so I am not in a position to say anything on the matter. Unless these facts come to light in a court of law I refuse to believe any of them. I strongly resent that these attacks should be given a communal colouring. Murders are taking place in the Punjab almost every day. (Sardar Sahib Ujjal Singh : But is this an ordinary murder?) My friend has in his brain that this is a special murder. I am sorry but there is no proof of it yet. I have already said that every Muslim condemns this murderous attack. He should be satisfied with it.

A remark was made that these Muslims carry swords and hatchets. For 75 years my Sikh friends never carried swords. I did not want to refer to this matter, but I have been forced to make some remarks about it. (Interruption) I do want peace in this country.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : Then please talk more peacefully.

Shaikh Muhammad Sadiq : Sir, the Honourable Minister knows that I never make a wild or provocative speech. Only God has given me very powerful voice.

Mr. President : The honourable member is, no doubt, endowed with a very loud and strong voice. But if he speaks a little less loudly and less rapidly his speech will be better understood and more appreciated.

Shaikh Muhammad Sadiq : I may assure my honourable friend that the lives, honour and property of Sikhs and Hindus will always be safe in the hands of Muslims. We look upon them as our brothers. We do not make any difference between one human being and another. But if unfortunately such cases occur as the present one under consideration, for which we are all very sorry, they must also remember that in many cases Sikhs have killed Muslims. We must also remember that a Muslim is very sensitive and will not tolerate his religion or the Holy Prophet being attacked or that any insulting word being uttered against Islam. (An honourable member : Nobody has attacked the Muslim religion.) I may also tell them that if a single Muslim behaves in an improper way the whole community should not be condemned for that. The whole community cannot be responsible for the acts of a few individuals. For 75 years there was no question of kirpan. All at once the Sikh friends woke up and said that this kirpan was an implement of their religion and began to carry them without permission from the Government. Now that the sword has been exempted from the operation of the Arms Act the Muslims also have begun to carry a sword. Why should the Sikhs grumble at this? For two years the Sikhs in Amritsar, hundreds and thousands of them, were carrying naked swords in processions and no Muslim complained about that. But now that the Muslims carry swords I do not see that the Sikhs can make a complaint of it. I do condemn murders and murderous attacks.

Sardar Bahadur Sardar Buta Singh : What we say is, do not stab us in the dark.

Shaikh Muhammad Sadiq : What I am saying I am saying openly on the floor of this House ; there is no back and there is no stabbing. The honourable Sikh members appeal to us and to the House that we should condemn such actions ; but they say these things in a provocative manner. Do they think that by these small pin-pricks the political status of this country is going to be affected? In other words they should come and appeal to the good sense of the Muslims instead of starting these pin-pricks. We are all human beings as such we are brothers. It is our duty to live in peace for the sake of the prosperity and happiness of the country and if we possess different religions, it is our duty to live in peace with each other. If God has willed that we must live, then what right have we to take another's life simply because he is a Muslim, a Hindu or a Sikh ? Now in Bishan Singh's murder case who are the chief witnesses? They are Muslims. Does this not sufficiently show, when Muslims have come forward to give evidence, that their heart is sound and that they are not actuated by base motives? My friend ought to have appreciated it. On the other hand he has tried to pour oil on the burning fire. Instead of stopping these things and trying to minimise the thing, they want to give the incident a bigger status than it really possesses. An ordinary thing, an attempt to murder, should not be brought into this House as if it was a gang of Muslims trying to do such things. I can quote an instance which happened in Amritsar where two Sikhs were quarrelling and a Muslim asked why they were quarrelling and he was stabbed by them. Does this mean that I should say that all the Sikhs in the province have joined in an attempt to kill Muslims? Now my honourable friend who bears the name of Guru Baba Nanak, the great peacemaker, but acts in a contrary way says, employ punitive police. Would he have liked if punitive police had been employed in his vicinity where Bhagat Singh killed Mr. Saunders? (Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit : I do not mind). I do not believe it, but probably he has many clients to rob, so he does not mind. I appeal to all my friends, let us have good-will and that can only be done by minimising these things. Let us sit together and consider all pros and cons. If they had any difficulty they ought to have come to us and we would have condemned such actions strongly. But to rush this matter to the House without our knowledge, without our consultation and make provocative speeches which will appear in the press with provocative headlines, will this help the people of the Punjab? It is for them not to make a political capital of this incident but put it at its own value. A murder has been committed. If it is proved that some Muslims have intentionally murdered the man, let the men concerned be hanged. They should certainly be hanged and if it is found that no person helped the victim, we should condemn them. They are cowards ; they are brutes or worse than that, whether they are Muslims or anybody else. But to make a political capital and try to show that it is all communal and to call Government by names and say that it was done on account of the Shahid Ganj affair and so on, is not right. I know Government is to blame to a great extent. But did the Government force the Sikhs to demolish the Shahidganj mosque? Had the Sikhs not the sense to know that the demolition of the mosque would exasperate the Muslims? Have we not the sense to realise that if Muslims murder the Sikhs and Sikhs murder the Muslims then we would exasperate each other. But to say, we are good people and only Government are rascals, I do not believe in that. We do not want to rise to the height to which, for instance, the English people have risen. We are pigmies. Our intention may be good. But our actions are rotten. For their own interests and for their own benefit they are trying to put the whole of India on fire. Condemn the Government; but first condemn yourselves also.

The Honourable Sardar Sir Jogendra Singh (Minister for Agriculture) : It is with a deep sense of humiliation that I have heard this debate and I trust that this sense of humiliation is shared by every member of this House. (Hear, hear.) We who are standing on the threshold of a new constitution, what are we doing to equip ourselves for the task that awaits us? Indeed the fair name of the Punjab is being tarnished by a series of crimes which we have been witnessing within the last few months. It is true that these crimes have been condemned and I am sure condemned with a full sense of responsibility. But we want something more than mere condemnation. We want purification of the hearts. (Hear, hear.) We want every Hindu, Muhammadan and Sikh to be animated by a new sense of fellow-feeling moving towards solidarity. We must make such crimes impossible in this province of ours. (Hear, hear.) As long as we can continue to provoke ill-feeling by processions, demonstrations and other means, we are not closing down the springs from which the poison flows. I do hope that all of us who have taken part in the debate and are present in this House to-day would carry with us the message of reconciliation; and the words of condemnation which we have uttered will not remain merely a lip condemnation. We would make this condemnation a reality, would uphold it in our private talks, in our friendly meetings, in our conferences and wherever we gather together. This kind of crime is eternally condemned and no Punjabi, whatever his race or religion should stand for or condone such a crime on any grounds whatsoever. (Hear, hear.) It lies with us now to create a better atmosphere. It is the duty of every citizen of whatever race or religion in this city of Lahore to co-operate in educating opinion and in controlling forces of disruption and disorder. You can rest assured that so far as the Government is concerned, we who are your representatives on these benches, will do our best to promote good-will and feelings of love and fellowship between all communities. (Applause.)

Diwan Bahadur Raja Narendra Nath (Punjab Landholders, General) : I will strictly abide by your advice, Mr. President, that nothing should be said in the course of the debate which would arouse bad feelings and inter-communal jealousies. I will, therefore, not refer to the facts of the case and the circumstances under which it has occurred, where it has occurred and why people did not come forward to arrest the assailant. This incident is unfortunately one of a series of events which have lately occurred and it cannot be denied that communal tension at present is at its height. As observed by my honourable friend, Sardar Sir Jogendra Singh, it is most deplorable that this should be the state of things whilst we are on the threshold of getting and enjoying provincial autonomy. I will not allude to the immediate causes which have brought about this result. Those immediate causes have also some remote underlying causes to which these immediate causes on the surface are due. It cannot be denied that we are a people divided into communities, but I respectfully submit that it was a mistake to put a hall mark of approval on those divisions. However, we are not to deal with them now as the solution for it lies beyond our power or even beyond the power of the local Government. The mover of the motion has rightly suggested some measures. I will not deal with all of them, because some of them, I think, will lead to administrative complications which it will be difficult to solve. But I give my whole-hearted support to the suggestion which has been made by a prominent member of my party, the honourable member from Hoshiarpur, Pandit Nanak Chand, that demonstrative processions ought to stop and should not be allowed in the free manner in which they have been allowed, especially when these are taken with swords, hatchets, spears, etc. My honourable friend alluded to the mistake which was committed in the case of one murderer whose procession was allowed. Before that procession was taken I myself remonstrated before His Excellency the Governor that it was a mistake to give permission for it. Beyond this I should not say anything. But processions of all kinds on occasions like this must be stopped and should not be permitted to be taken out in such large numbers. Another suggestion which has been made is about exercising of control over the vernacular press. That, I believe, is already being exercised and it was right that some members of this Council invited the attention of Government to the necessity of exercising proper control. I am glad that the English press is comparatively better conducted and has been conducted in a better spirit. Beyond these suggestions I have nothing else to propose for the Government to adopt to create good feeling and to prevent a recurrence of such unfortunate incidents as have happened.

Of course to bring about a compromise between the communities is a very good thing to be desired, but the first thing which is essential in order to bring about the compromise is to improve the atmosphere and to lower the communal tension which we see. I call these measures superficial because there is something which lies deeper and about which we cannot do anything. However, even if these superficial measures are adopted, something will be achieved. With these words I resume my seat and I hope that there will be a genuine desire to promote good feelings between the communities.

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon (Minister for Education): Every member of this House, I am sure, feels it his duty to uphold the dignity and sanctity of all laws. Unless there is that spirit and feeling in a legislature and in a country, it is impossible to carry on any administration. I say all laws, whether they are for the prevention of serious crimes or for smaller offences. There will not be a single member in this House or in this province who will not condemn the action of persons who break laws of the land. If our friends had realized the great value placed on human life in the Holy Quran and in the Islamic religion, it would not have taken them two minutes to realize that no Muslim who is a Muslim can condone or shut his eyes over a murder or a murderous assault. Just ponder for a few minutes and consider the trouble that is taken in bringing up a human being, in educating him and making him a useful citizen. You can then imagine the madness of a man who cuts short this valuable national asset. It is not necessary for our Sikh friends or for anybody to ask for sympathy on an occasion like this, because I believe humanity demands it, and every human being will sympathise with another human being in suffering. The fact that a particular assault has been made on a person and that certain members of a community do not come together and hold meetings in order to condemn that act does not mean that the members of that particular community do not condemn that action. I personally on several occasions have seen cases, definite cases, mentioned in the papers where a Sikh has assaulted and murdered Muslims even this summer. I read of a case where one Muslim was walking along with his nephews when he saw two Sikhs quarrelling with each other. He tried to make peace between the two. At this one of the Sikhs pulled out his kirpan and murdered him. Does it mean that Muslims should expect the Sikhs to collect together and condemn this? I know that every Sikh in his heart of hearts condemned it. I could quote the case of Harphul, a Hindu, who murdered 27 Muslims including a Government officer because they were Muslims. We know that every sane Hindu condemned it in his own mind. I know that every sane Muslim condemns all murders of Sikhs by Muslims or murders of Hindus by Muslims or of Muslims by Sikhs or Hindus. Unfortunately our province has now fallen into a state of affairs where all of us whether Hindus, Muslims or Sikhs have to hang our heads in shame. We quarrel over very petty matters forgetting that very large interests are at stake and when we think over this matter coolly and calmly, I am sure, everybody will regret having created this communal tension in this province. Therefore the sooner, we can bring this to a close, the better for us. I personally think that this difference of opinion over these religious matters between the Sikhs and Muslims is due to the fact that the Muslims do not know what the Quran says and the Sikhs do not know what the Granth Sahib says. We all know that very cordial relations existed between the Muslim Sufis and the Sikh saints. We also know that the foundation stone of the holiest of holy places of worship from the Sikh point of view was laid by a Muslim saint. If we knew our religions and our past, I am sure, we would try and restore the cordial relation that should exist between the two sister communities. I would appeal through this House to the whole province to try and avoid acts of provocation because provocation by one community leads to provocation by another. The sooner we realised that not even a coward can be cowed down by acts of provocation the better will it be from the point of view of peace, tranquillity and good-will of the province. Unfortunately in this country we seem to be divided into three definite communities and I have often thought of things which might remove these differences between us and lead us towards the path of becoming one nation which should be the goal of all sensible people who want the good of the province. One thing I would like to mention through you, Sir, to the members and to the public, that at least in the matter of dress we can try and wear clothes that look alike so that when a man is walking through the streets of the city, it may be impossible for another man to guess whether he is a Hindu, a Muslim or a Sikh.

Mr. Manohar Lal : What about Sikhs ?

The Honourable Malik Sir Firoz Khan Noon : I am not touching that delicate problem. I have often read in the newspapers things which will be considered curious in other countries ; for instance, that a golf match was being played when a ball struck a Hindu boy and he was killed or that a Hindu or a Sikh or a Muslim fell down from a train and was killed ? Why on earth can you not say that a boy was killed or a man was killed. What has his religion to do with the death. I hope that the Press will also co-operate with us and try to bring about peace in this province and avoid saying things which are likely to create communal bickerings. This summer I was much interested to read in the newspapers that an Italian threw out a challenge to Major Atlee, a labour member of the House of Commons and who came out to this country as a member of the Simon Commission. The Italian said "we have a difference of opinion on a particular point let us have a duel, come and fight it out with pistols." Major Atlee simply ignored the challenge and replied that civilized people had means other than shedding blood to decide their differences of opinion. I think we ought to take a lesson from that and we ought to adopt constitutional and lawful means for deciding our differences. A suggestion has been made by certain members of this House that processions ought to be stopped. I do not think that there is anybody in this House or in this country who does not realize the dangers that are involved in these processions. I have often talked these matters over with Muslim leaders of Lahore and they realize that taking out of processions is a very dangerous affair. The procession may be peaceful but some mischief maker from one of the houses of the street may throw a brickbat on the procession, immediately a misunderstanding will arise and the people will start fighting with each other and thus a riot is started. The matter gets entirely out of the hands of the leaders who are unable to control the mob. Therefore I think the suggestion has a good deal of sense in it and I hope that all communities will realize the dangers of these to the citizens of a peaceful city like Lahore. In the end through you, Sir, I would like to appeal to all sections of this House and the public to try and restore communal peace and amity as soon as possible so that we may feel proud of living in a peaceful and progressive country. (Hear, hear.)

Sardar Sampuran Singh (Lyalpur, Sikh, Rural) : We feel very much gratified to hear the sense of condemnation from all parts of the House and to know that so far as the condemnation of this offence is concerned the whole House is one, but I cannot help replying to some of the insinuations which have been made so far as this political incident is concerned. I was one of those people who reached the hospital where this gentleman Bawa Jiwan Singh was taken soon after this dastardly attack upon him. I happened to be the first man to put him questions and as a matter of fact I made notes about his statement and it was in my presence that the Magistrate arrived and took his statement. It is quite correct to say that he was going from his work of an electrician, which he was doing in a tailor's shop, whose name I have now forgotten. He left that place and was proceeding towards the Khalsa High School. When he arrived at the corner of Sheikhpurian Bazar, he was attacked by three Muhammadans. One gave him a slap on the face, and the other gave him a knife thrust on his forehead and the third gave him a knife thrust in the abdomen. He fell down. This is all recorded in the statement taken by the Magistrate. He also stated that all shopkeepers around him were sitting in their shops and nobody approached to help him. He raised a hue and cry, and later became senseless for some time, and it was after sometime that a Sikh student came whose name he did not know and whom he called Sardar Sahib. It has been indirectly insinuated that there was some brawl which led to this crime. This is totally wrong. If it were so, he would have given the Magistrate the names of his assailants or he would have at least given their names to me. Because such a brawl would indicate previous acquaintance. Those persons who attacked him had no enmity with him before that. He did not know them before. And therefore it is quite clear that he was attacked because he was a Sikh and that people who attacked him attacked him because they were Muhammadans. That is the only conclusion. I do not say I blame the entire Muhammadan community, nor do I blame any large number of that community. But what I wish to convey is that there is a class of people in that community who are killing people simply because the latter happen to be Sikhs. Our object in bringing this motion before the House is to press on them that we have to produce the mentality of not appreciating this kind of offences of condemning the same by condemning and bringing home to Muhammadans and their leaders that this House disapprove this kind of activities.

I want to say one or two things in reference to the speech of my honourable friend Chaudhri Afzal Haq. If, after my last statement, my friend is not yet satisfied I am ready to bring the people who owned that winch, the people who brought them and the vouchers and bills which we had to pay for the use of that winch. If the honourable member wants I can satisfy him personally on some other occasion, not only here but outside the House as well, if he so wishes.

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd (Finance Member) : As was to be expected this murderous assault upon Jiwan Singh has been condemned from every quarter of the House. And though it was to be expected that that would occur it is gratifying that universal condemnation has been expressed. The Government must join in this condemnation and it has probably stronger reason than any quarter of the House for regretting this murderous assault and all those that have preceded it. In the first place, we deplore it on grounds of humanity just as everybody else does. In the second place, we deplore it because of the very serious risk of a general conflagration that continuous murderous assaults of a communal nature may cause. I am not going to prejudge this case at all, because up till now we do not know the facts. We do not know what has occurred. All we know is that Jiwan Singh was assaulted in a quarter, I should say, a low quarter of the town. There are one or two other facts known; one or two clues have been traced. But we are not yet in a position to say whether this was a communal murder or whether the motives behind it were of another nature. But in any case it is quite clear that if assaults of this kind continue, the danger of a general conflagration is going to be very serious indeed. And I sincerely trust that members of the House will realise the serious position that we are in and will do their level best to remove the causes which lead to these murderous assaults. If by any chance the Sikhs were to lose their self-restraint and try to retaliate, there would at once be a blaze all over the province. So, I sincerely trust that this is the very last of the assaults of which we shall hear. Other honourable members have already expressed their regret that these assaults should give rise to an atmosphere which is most unsuitable for the introduction of the reforms which are coming in a little over a year's time. Government itself naturally is very anxious indeed that a calm atmosphere should prevail before the introduction of the reforms. And this is one extra ground why we deplore such murderous assaults. Again, it is quite obvious that assaults of this kind cause an immense amount of work and anxiety to Government officers. Our police in Lahore at the present moment are worked off their feet. It is extraordinary how well their patience has stood the daily trial to which they are exposed by having to work on cases of this kind by having to provide against trouble that may arise from processions, by accompanying these processions and at the same time standing the vilification to which they are as usual exposed. But above all we deplore this assault, because it is our duty, practically our fundamental duty, to preserve law and order. And for the sake of our own reputation we naturally feel the deepest regret that any disturbance to the public tranquillity should occur. I have mentioned all these reasons because the honourable member, Shaikh Muhammad Sadiq has said, Government is always wrong, Government is always to blame, but I think that his appeal to commonsense may again be made here. We have more reasons than anybody for deploring and trying to prevent murderous assaults. And the suggestion which was made in, I think, the opening speech that Government is supine in this matter because of some alleged alliance with the Muslim ranks is totally incorrect.

What are the causes of these murderous assaults? I think the causes are quite clearly the unfortunate atmosphere that is prevailing at present. This atmosphere is created in various ways; it is partly created in the Press, partly in speeches at meetings, partly by provocative processions, partly in the private conversations that go on all over the city. Various suggestions have been made to us for dealing with the causes of these troubles. We have been urged to prohibit processions carrying drawn swords or other weapons. We have been urged to keep the gutter Press in order. We have been urged to put punitive posts on the areas where these murderous assaults occur. I have noted each one of these suggestions and they will be very carefully considered. As the House is aware, we have already, and quite recently, taken action and severe action to curb the gutter Press. With regard to the other suggestions, all I can say is that I have noted them and they will be considered by Government. But the members of this House and the public generally have it much more in their own hand than has Government to stop these murderous assaults. It is by calming the atmosphere, by trying to live in a neighbourly way that feelings will calm down and quarrels will not find a fruitful ground for breaking into a real affray. It was just yesterday that the Inspector-General of Police himself was returning by the Multan Road and he suddenly found two Muslim boys and two Hindu boys having a scrap. By good luck the Inspector-General turned up at that moment. The crowd was quickly beginning to gather and had he not chanced there, I have no doubt there would have been a big riot probably attended by loss of life. Why I mention it is to show how difficult it is to prevent assaults when the atmosphere is surcharged with electricity and tempers are as high as they are at present. The only way to get them calm is to keep free from all provocative action, stop your processions, stop unpleasant and provocative writings in the Press, stop meetings at which provocative speeches are made and in your private conversations try to restrain yourselves and inculcate a neighbourly way of living.

Members may want to know what Government themselves have been doing up till now. This problem of serious communal feelings engages our attention every day and for a considerable part of every day. The actual cases themselves of assaults are very carefully investigated and in every one of them the investigation has been supervised by a European gazetted officer. This absolutely ensures fairplay and at the same time it ensures careful investigation. It also affords an opportunity for probing the possibility of a conspiracy lying behind these assaults. In the case of the last assault but one the Inspector-General of Police himself organised the investigation and instructed those engaged in it at every turn. His particular object was to probe the rumour that there was some conspiracy behind these attacks by one community upon another. He has been entirely satisfied that there is no organisation, no conspiracy whatever behind these attacks and that is at least one satisfactory result because we may hope that sporadic assaults will cease as soon as feelings get a little bit calmer. Patrolling by the police is done to the maximum both by night and day. In order to be able to do so and to preserve the peace we have raised a force of 300 additional police and are in the process of raising another force of the same number. That is to say, the ordinary police will be increased by 600 of whom 300 will be either Hindus or Sikhs so that no one community will have a monopoly of the ranks of the police. Another step that has been taken is that a list of dangerous "goondas" residing in certain parts of Lahore has been made by the police and action against them is being contemplated. I think that this particular action will have a very great effect indeed and will probably go farther than anything else to prevent a continuance of these assaults. Finally the police are, as members probably know, engaged in arresting and prosecuting those who carry unlicensed weapons—swords are allowed, kirpans are allowed—other weapons like spears are not allowed. And the police are at present conducting a campaign against them.

As my time is up I am afraid I cannot say anything more.

Mr. President : The question is—

That this Council do now stand adjourned.

The motion was carried.

Mr. President : I congratulate the honourable members, who have taken part in the debate, on the sobriety of the language in which they have made their speeches. With one or two exceptions, they were not exciting or provocative ; and I am glad that my disinclination, at the beginning to allow the Shahidganj affair being re-opened has, on the whole, proved effective.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang (Minister for Local Self-Government): I beg to move—

That the Punjab State Aid to Industries Bill be passed.

Mr. President: The motion is—

That the Punjab State Aid to Industries Bill be passed.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram (South-East Rohtak, non-Muhammadan, Rural): I have no intention to oppose the passage of the Bill itself but there are just a few points which I should like to make clear so that it should not be understood that I or my party are satisfied with every clause of the Bill. There were certain points to which I drew the attention of the Honourable Minister in charge but he refused to accede to most of those points. I think I should once again draw the attention of the Government to those points. The composition of the Board of Industries is entirely unsatisfactory from my point of view. If it was necessary that industrial interests as such should be represented on this board there was no reason why agricultural interests as such should not also be represented on the board. Similarly there was need for labour being represented on that board. The plea of the Honourable Minister that the Government may be trusted to see that agricultural interests and labour interests are also properly represented on the board has no force. If the Government could be trusted to see justice done to labour and agricultural interests there is no reason to suppose that Government could not have been trusted to see justice done to industrial interests. Again, it is simply ridiculous that the three members of the board assigned to industrial interests should be selected by three selected commercial bodies in this province. Those commercial bodies may disappear to-morrow, they may amalgamate or other commercial bodies may come into existence. Is it fair, is it reasonable that those three members should be definitely assigned to these three particular bodies? Suppose half a dozen more commercial chambers come into existence. Would it be right that these commercial chambers should be deprived of any voice in the election of these three members?

Then another point to which I wish to draw the attention of the House is the fact that whenever there is a competition between two industries one of which will consume provincial products and the other will not, then preference ought to be given to the industry which consumes provincial products. No notice was taken of this suggestion. I hope when the time comes for granting state aid this point will not be lost sight of.

Again, with regard to the question of guarantee, I desire to make just two suggestions. Whenever the Government is approached with a request to guarantee a certain amount of return on the capital, I hope Government will see that some proportional limit is fixed to expenditure. We should see that the return is fixed with reference to the actual amount of capital paid up. Another factor in the same connection which I should like to draw the attention of Government to is that overhead charges should not be allowed to go beyond a certain proportion of the paid-up capital. If these points are borne in mind the chances of any unnecessary loss to Government will be minimised. I also wish to draw the attention of the Finance Department to the need of caution in spending provincial revenues for granting aid to industries which are of doubtful prospects. Any demands for and any obligations in respect of state aid to industries should be very carefully scrutinised, particularly in view of the fact that our finances are not, at present, in a very prosperous condition.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri (Punjab Industries): I am surprised that Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram should have taken up the attitude with regard to this Bill which he and his party displayed throughout the discussions on this Bill. At the time of the last budget every member of his party came out with suggestions for improving the industries of the province and they even found fault with the Minister for Industries for not having done anything for the development of industries. But when a practical proposal is laid before them in the form of this Bill, not one with great possibilities of course, but one which contains the germs of future development at every stage and with reference to almost every clause which is calculated to benefit industry, opposition has been offered by the members of his party. (An honourable member: That is entirely wrong.) One of the provisions of this Bill was the constitution of an advisory board. It is only reasonable that the board should be a board of experts. Government had, however, made provision for the selection of only a few experts, that is persons who must be nominated by the chambers of commerce. Objection was at once raised that those experts should not be there, because they would not be agriculturists. No objection was at all raised to the selection by the Legislative Council which of course would not secure representation of experts. Efforts were made to bring in more agriculturists, more labourers, in fact more persons unconnected with industries than those connected with it. A Bill like that should have contained provisions for inclusion in the board of men like the Principal of the MacLagan Engineering College, Lahore, the Principal of the Agricultural College, Lyallpur and the Professor of Organic Chemistry of the Punjab University and such other men as ex-officio members of a board of that type. Instead of making a provision of that type the agriculturist party attacked it as if it were a board which was to distribute patronage and not to offer expert advice. Thus an effort was made to make the board as ineffective as possible.

Another matter which came prominently before the House was the various forms in which state aid could be given under the Act. The amendments moved by Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram were calculated to decrease the forms of state aid to industry. Fortunately those amendments were not accepted by the House. As far as it lay in his power and in the power of his friends who professed lip sympathy with the industrial development of the province in the course of the budget debate, every effort was made to whittle down the forms in which that aid could be given. Again the only effective way in which the Bill hoped to help industry was by making available to possible industrialists money at reduced rate of interest. But as soon as this proposal came up there was an outcry, "Why not give agriculturists money at a reduced rate of interest also".

Mr. President : The honourable member is not speaking to the motion before the House.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : I am discussing the Punjab State Aid to Industries Bill.

Mr. President : No, the honourable member is not speaking to the motion.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : If you had allowed me to continue my remarks you would have observed that I was speaking to the motion. Efforts were made on the floor of this House, unfortunately those efforts were not successful.

Mr. President : The House is not at this stage concerned with those efforts.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : Efforts were made on the floor of the House to increase the rate of interest.

Mr. President : The honourable member is irrelevant.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : Please permit me to complete my sentence, before you give your ruling. The Bill as it emerged out of the select committee laid down a particular rate of interest.

Mr. President : If the honourable member persists in irrelevance, I am afraid, I shall have to ask him to resume his seat.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : I submit that this House has deleted certain provisions which were to be found in the original Bill and which were approved by the select committee with respect to the rate of interest on the loans which had to be borrowed by industries. That was done with the help—

Mr. President : What has that to do with the motion before the House?

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : What I say is that the good which was intended to be conferred by this Bill has been so whittled down by the efforts on the other side that it is for the House to consider whether it is worth while to proceed with the Bill any further.

Mr. President : The honourable member may oppose the Bill, when the motion for its passage is moved.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : What I am going to do will be seen presently. But what I wish to point out is that a salutary provision inserted by the Government and supported by the select committee was whittled down to the dictation and with the aid of the agriculturist majority in this House. I respectfully submit that I am afraid whether with this attitude of some members of the House this Bill will at all do any good to our province. I for one am very pessimistic about it. I am afraid that this Bill in their hands will share the same fate which the Pure Food Bill which was passed four years ago has suffered. I am afraid, with this mentality, the Bill will remain a dead letter and will not justify the time and trouble the Honourable Minister and this House have taken over it.

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : I am not going to make a long speech at all. I only want to thank the House for the assistance that it lent me so ungrudgingly in seeing this Bill through. I know that I have not been able to comply with the desire of Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram in respect of a number of his amendments. I very much regret it, but for reasons which I stated at the time, it was impossible for me to accept those amendments. I tried to meet the arguments which were advanced in favour of those amendments which were rejected and I found myself unable—I say that with great regret—to meet with the desire of the Leader of the Unionist Party. Those amendments which appealed to me I ungrudgingly accepted and the members of this House may remember that several of the amendments were accepted. I may assure the House that the Bill as it has emerged out of this House is much better than it would have been with the amendments proposed by the opposition leader. I need not say that the apprehension that labour and agriculture have not found proper representation or express representation on the board is really unfounded. I need not go into all the things that I said in this connection. Under the present constitution of the Council and under the constitution of the new Assembly there is no justification whatsoever for entertaining any apprehension that agriculture and labour would not find proper representation on this board. This board is after all intended not to distribute favours but only to tender advice and I have no doubt that the present Government and the Government that is to follow will always select the best men available representing all interests. As regards his grievance with respect to the amendment relating to preference being given to those industries which use the products of the province, I am not to blame if it was rejected. If anybody is to blame it is the honourable mover himself. He drafted that amendment too wide. I was unable to accept it as it was drafted. It is possible that if he had not made that amendment a bit wide I might have accepted it. His amendment was that preference shall always be given to certain industries. That was too tall an order to be accepted by Government. Unfortunately something happened at the time when this amendment was before the House and I had no opportunity to speak, otherwise perhaps I would have asked the honourable mover to amend his amendment and his amended amendment might have been accepted. But that was a pure accident. I need not say anything more except that I am very grateful to the House for the help that it gave me in seeing this Bill through the Council.

Mr. President : The question is—

That the Punjab State Aid to Industries Bill be passed.

The motion was carried.

THE PUNJAB DEBTORS' PROTECTION BILL.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram (South-East Rohtak, non-Muhammadan, Rural) : I beg to present the report of the drafting committee on the Punjab Debtors' Protection Bill.

(f) In sub-clause (iv) of the same definition in place of the words "the Companies Act" the words "the Indian Companies Act, 1913" be inserted.

(g) In sub-clause (v) of the same definition between the words "to" and "trader" the word "a" be inserted.

4. In clause 5 after the words "income from all sources" the comma be deleted and between the words "except such" and the words "as is" the word "income" be inserted.

"Clause (c) of sub-section (1) of section 58,"

9. Clause 13 be deleted.

10. In the Preamble in place of the words, figures, letter and brackets "under section 80-A (3)" the following words, figures, letter and brackets be substituted:—

"Under sub-section (3) of section 80-A."

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram (South-East Rohtak, non-Muhammadan, Rural): I move—

That the Punjab Debtors' Protection Bill be passed.

There is no argument which could have been advanced either for or against the Bill which has not already been advanced on the floor of the House more than once. Therefore I do not propose to make any speech on this motion.

5 P. M.

Mr. President: Motion moved is—

That the Punjab Debtors' Protection Bill be passed.

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri (Punjab Industries): Sir, I will follow the example of the mover of this Bill by confining my opposition to very brief remarks. I can very well understand his reason, the reason which induced him not to make any further comments. The reason is that he has won all along the line. There were provisions in the Bill relating to registration and licensing of money-lenders. But the Bill contained a provision, in view of the fact that this was an impracticable proposition at the present moment, that the provisions relating to registration and licensing of moneylenders, i.e., provisions of Part IV were only to come into force on such date as the Local Government may by notification appoint in this behalf, i.e., only when the Government may be of opinion that a suitable opportunity had arrived. Therefore as far as the provisions which were to come into force at once his effort has been completely successful. What has been stated on the floor of the House therefore with respect to the various provisions of this Bill applies to it to-day as much as it did when it was being discussed clause by clause. The effect of making a statutory provision for providing maintenance for the family of a judgment-debtor and an insolvent is to make the security of the statutory agriculturist debtor to a zero, that is reducing it to a vanishing point. This is the provision with respect to which competent observers have pointed out that it is expropriation and exploitation, sheer and simple. Now, Sir, you would readily see how it is so. The average holding in this province is about 8 or 9 acres. Now if the landlord's share of that holding is to be taken that would hardly be ever sufficient, unaided by the other resources of the judgment-debtor, for the subsistence of his family. Therefore, the average holder of land in this province, belonging to a statutory agricultural tribe, whose land is immune from sale by this legislation, his land has now been rendered immune from temporary alienation for lease for 20 years which was permissible under the Land Alienation Act. I am afraid, Sir, that this immunity will be claimed not only by the owner of the average holding but will be claimed by persons who possess a much larger area. Taking a district like Amritsar or Gurdaspur, for example, the average rent or the average batai or the average rent in cash which is available to the landlord is between Rs. 3 and 4 per bigah; let us take it at Rs. 4 per bigah. Deducting land revenue which ranges between annas 14 and Re. 1-2-0 and taking an average of Re. 1 it leaves Rs. 3 which is available for the landlord. If a landlord were to claim subsistence for himself and his family, let us say at the rate of annas 4 per individual, which is the lowest rate available for civil prisoners, for a family of five, he would be requiring Rs. 87-8-0 per month or Rs. 450 per year. Perhaps 4 annas per day is too much. Take it even at two annas. Now how many bighas of land should be immune from lease before this statutory provision for subsistence is given effect to? Previously no doubt there were directions given to the collectors and to the civil courts to provide for the maintenance of the debtors; but that rested upon the discretion of the courts and the judgment-debtor could not insist upon it as a matter of right, and he was content with what the courts and the collector gave him. When it is made a statutory right, things would be different. The Government unfortunately failed to carry through its amendments containing the words "other resources." That is very unfortunate. The amendment passed in the House in its place on the spur of the moment does not fully carry out the original intention of the Government. This provision is expropriative, pure and simple and it is to apply retrospectively. So far as the members of the statutory agricultural tribes are concerned, their present debts which were difficult to be realised even in part previously have now become absolutely impossible of realisation. No improvement has been made in the Bill in this Council which would in any way not justify the criticism which has been made upon it by competent officers that these provisions, if left as they are, mean the wiping out of the entire debt in its entirety, due from members of statutory agricultural tribes, coupled with the previous legislation of course. Therefore, I reiterate the opinion of the joint committee of the Northern India Chamber of Commerce and the Punjab Chamber of Commerce that this legislation is expropriatory in its nature. The argument of Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram that the interests of a few are to be sacrificed for the interests of many, if it is good, I submit, is also a very dangerous argument indeed. It was pointed out yesterday by Honourable Sir Jogendra Singh, Minister for Agriculture, and quite correctly from reliable data that the total number of landlords, people who own land in this province are less than 20 per cent. of the population of this province. Therefore, would it be a fair proposition to put to Chaudhri Chhotu Ram that this 20 per cent. of the population should share their land more equitably in the interest of the rest of the population who are landless and who have nothing to fall back upon? The iniquity of this provision is that this provision for maintenance is not enacted for the benefit of the poor. You would realise that a shopkeeper, a trader, an artisan, a carpenter, a lohar, a dhoby, a tailor, a tradesman, a merchant—if a decree is passed against any of them, their entire property is liable to be sold, including whatever land or houses including the scales and weights that they may own and out of that property no maintenance is secured to them. Of course there is a provision in our Civil Procedure Code, that a debtor may be allowed to retain a moiety of what he earns by his personal effort for his maintenance and the maintenance of his family. But no civilised system of administration has so far provided that out of his property a judgment-debtor may be allowed to maintain himself and his family at the expense of his creditors with whose money he may possibly have built up that property. In the case of statutory agriculturists, the sale of property has already been prohibited. Therefore the corpus of the property is saved for them in any case. Only a usufruct for twenty years of landlords' share was the only property available for the creditor. This usufruct is also now saved to him by this Act by enacting a statutory obligation of providing subsistence for him and his family, out of this usufruct, before a creditor can get anything out of it. How can you say that this provision has been enacted to help the poor sections of the community? That is not a provision for the poor, that is a provision for the pampered rich, for the pampered propertied classes, for the pampered few, a provision for those who are owners of property and not landless tenants, a provision for those whose property is already safe from attachment. It is a provision for the richer classes of our province, who form far less than 20 per cent. of the population say 12 or 15 per cent. only. The landlords who number less than 20 per cent. of the population belong both to statutory agricultural tribes as well as to those who do not belong to statutory agricultural tribes. I own land and so does almost every member sitting on our benches, but we are not members of statutory agriculturist classes. The provision as to subsistence will only be claimed by members of agricultural tribes, because it is their land only which would be given on lease, the land of others will be sold. Therefore this provision for subsistence is being claimed for the privileged propertied men who form about 12 per cent. of the entire population.

Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram : Are you prepared to make it wider?

Rai Bahadur Mr. Mukand Lal Puri : This question of lease as I have pointed out does not arise with respect to persons whose lands can be sold. It can never arise in the case of persons not protected by the Land Alienation Act, nor with respect to tenants. Therefore this subsistence which is being claimed is being claimed for that pampered class, which has got hold, somehow or other of the machinery of the Government in this province and which has been selfishly using the machinery of this Government to its own advantage, to the detriment of all the other classes of this province. The whole province knows to its cost that if there are any appointments to services to be made, the question is at once raised whether applicant is a statutory agriculturist or not. No tenant's son has ever been appointed. By manipulating the electoral machinery this particular class which is now wiping off its debts, has got a representation in Council out of all proportion to its proportion in the population, and during the last ten years, has used the governmental machinery to help itself at the expense of other communities in every sphere of life. They have been using it to get more employment for themselves, they have been using it to get grants of land for themselves and now they are using it to wipe off their debts. As I was pointing out this provision for subsistence out of property has been made in favour of the improvident few of a very limited class whose lands are already immune from sale. They should have been quite content with that protection. This is further an infringement of the oft repeated declaration of policy by the Government, that period of lease of twenty years shall not be reduced. Is it not being reduced by creating a statutory charge upon it in preference to debts. I say that this is very unfair and that this is a class measure of the worst type. So much with respect to maintenance. I crave the indulgence of the House for taking their time in this matter.

[R. B. Mr. Mukand Lal Puri.]

because I had no occasion to speak on this clause before. With respect to the provision relating to ancestral property and the burden of proof, I do not wish to add anything to what has already been said by myself and various members yesterday. I can only say that this Bill rides rough shod over most of the important legal enactments of British India and if this Bill were named the "The Slaughter of Legal Enactments Bill" in the phraseology suggested to me by the speech of honourable the Legal Remembrancer or "The Creditors Expropriation Bill," they would be far better names, than the title given by the mover of the Bill. Sir, I oppose this Bill.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit (Hoshiarpur, non-Muhammadan, Rural) : I sympathise with the honourable members of the House who are anxious to go away. I myself am very anxious to go away. But duty requires, duty to my constituency and my conscience requires, that I must enter my strong protest even at this last stage when the Bill is going to be passed with the help of one party of this House. In the first place let me say this that with the passing of this Bill the credit system of this country, the old credit system of this country will be entirely destroyed and nobody knows what new system will replace it. I say deliberately that the old credit system which has existed here in India since the time of Kauravas and Pandavas and has subsisted through Muhammadan times and has come up to this time of the British Government, that system will be destroyed. I said in the beginning when I opposed the motion for consideration of the report of the select committee that the Bill has to be looked at from all points of view, one from the point of view of moneylenders and the other from the point of view of decree-holders. So far as the moneylenders are concerned, the registration of moneylenders has not been accepted by the Council. That part of the Bill was entirely out of keeping with the whole scheme of the Bill and the Council must be congratulated in not accepting that part.

Mr. President : The honourable member will please speak on the matters contained in the Bill.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit : The other part deals with the decree-holders, the Bill practically nullifies the decrees obtained in courts. It would be impossible for the creditors who have obtained decrees to get the fruits of their decrees and therefore I am submitting that the old money-lending system which was spread throughout the length and breadth of this province that system will be destroyed. Even such a person as Mr. Haig in the Legislative Assembly admitted this fact that the whole rural credit of India is dependent not only on the regular moneylenders but on the casual moneylenders. That system which supplied the needs of the rural community and which came to the help of the needy and which supported the widows and the orphans, that system I submit, is now entirely being destroyed as a result of the passing of this Bill in its present form. I respectfully say that this Bill, if passed, will hit hardest the small peasant proprietors, the poor men who live in villages of this province, and who cannot always command credit from banks and co-operative societies. We must not forget the condition in which the Punjab peasants, the labourers, the artisans, the shopkeepers and the traders in the villages live. There are, as I submitted before, no banks to which they can go and even if there are banks, they do not lend unless there is sufficient security. Now what possible security can an ordinary labourer who earns 6 annas or 4 annas a day offer and what security can a small peasant with a small piece of land give, and what security can a widow in trouble and at the time of need give? It would be impossible for people of this kind to get money from co-operative societies or from banks. It was the old sahukar who lived in the village and who knew his men and understood their habits and from whom he could realise his money who came to their rescue. But now the position in which the labourer, the position in which the artizan, is placed is difficult to imagine. I therefore do submit that these people who can offer no security to the banks either in the shape of land or house or even the lease of land will be hardest hit if this Bill is passed. There would be entirely no place for these people to go to and they will not be able to go to any person at the time of their extreme need. I submit that co-operative societies and banks are not under the purview of this Bill and therefore an unfortunate distinction has been made between creditors and lenders of one class and sahukars of the other class, a distinction which should not have been made by the Government, who should regard every class of lenders in the same way. Therefore I submit that it is hitting the small peasant proprietors the hardest. The third point that I would make is that the Bill, if passed, will bring into prominence the shylocks of every other kind, lawyers, doctors and Government servants of agricultural tribes.

Mr. President : The Council stands adjourned for 15 minutes, that is, till 5-45 to enable the Muslim members, who are fasting, to break their fast.

The Council re-assembled at quarter to six. Mr. President in the chair.

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit : I was submitting that the Bill will really strengthen the shylocks, people who would always be prepared to take advantage of the poverty and the needs of other people. It will give birth, though that class exists even now to some extent, to a greater extent than now, to that class of people, agriculturist lawyers, Government servants, doctors and businessmen, who would try to swallow the land of the small peasant proprietor. If we consider and place before our minds the state of society which would exist after this Bill is passed and after this point is realised by the people that even decreeholders after five years of obtaining their decree cannot realise their dues, it would naturally be a state of society in which there would be no moneylending at all. The members of the agricultural tribes such of them as are lawyers, medical men and the like would be approached by the needy people and they would naturally grab the lands, houses and property of such needy borrowers. On the one side we see as a matter of fact in various districts it is the agriculturist landholder, the agriculturist lawyer or Government servant who has profited mostly by the Land Alienation Act. Even Mr. Darling has stated in his book that the Land Alienation Act has given an opportunity to the agriculturist moneylenders to rob right and left of course, I cannot quote Mr. Darling's actual words. We must remember there are 19 or 20 thousand non-agriculturist moneylenders and about that number of agriculturist moneylenders. And the agriculturist moneylenders will have to face no competition of any kind and will have the opportunity of his life and will really be looting right and left. That is a state of things which should not be permitted if we are in sympathy with the small peasant proprietor. As a matter of fact, Mr. Darling when talking of Muzaffargarh and other districts has pointed out that the landlords in that locality have been greatly benefited and that the small peasant proprietor and landowner has entirely been at the mercy of these classes. This process of exploitation which has been going on will be really completed by this Bill if it is passed in its present form. This is a matter for the honourable the Leader of the Unionist Party to take into consideration. I thought at one time that he was in sympathy with the small peasant proprietors, whether they belonged to the agricultural tribes or not. Really when he was proposing a clause to be put in the Bill I was of the opinion that we should really support the honourable member, Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram, but on closer examination we found that it was merely a trick, and did not confer really any benefit.

Mr. President : The honourable member will please withdraw the word 'trick.'

Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit : I withdraw it. I meant to say device. We who believe that the non-agriculturist peasant proprietor should have the same privilege that is enjoyed under the Land Alienation Act by a particular tribe and class, found that it was not there and all this assertion on the part of the honourable member, Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram was entirely groundless. I have carefully examined the provisions of the Bill at its final stage and it is quite clear that the small peasant proprietor will be the hardest hit, and as I have submitted, the agriculturist doctor, the agriculturist trader, the agriculturist moneylender, the agriculturist Government servant and the agriculturist lawyer would be the persons who would be greatly benefited beside the big landlords by this measure. That is undoubtedly a very serious situation and I trust that before His Excellency the Governor gives his assent to this legislation he will carefully take this point into consideration.

Next, I want to refer briefly to the two points which are contained in the Bill, namely, the provision with regard to ancestral property, limitation and the burden of proof. These are the most obnoxious clauses in the Bill. The term 'ancestral property' is such a wide term that no property can be excluded if it is once entered as ancestral property. It was stated by the honourable member for Lyallpur, Sardar Sampuran Singh, who is fortunately here now, that what the Act sought to legislate was what was in fact existing before. Unfortunately it seems that the honourable member has not read the decision in P. R. 4 of 1913. That decision was confined to land only, and it definitely stated that if agricultural land was charged by the holder of the land who took a debt that agricultural land could be brought in to pay the debts. I submit with all respect that that ruling was not based on any specific instances or rivaj-i-ams. Even the learned judges of the High Court had been feeling that P. R. 4 of 1913 had gone too far. That decision was really not a proper exposition of the custom that prevailed in the Punjab. The customary law is contained in the riwaj-i-ams or in the wajbul-arzes. In no document, in no customary law or riwaj-i-am is it stated in any way that the just debts shall not be paid. I challenge my honourable friends on the other side to get up and show any riwaj-i-am exempting a just debt from payment. Unfortunately relying upon certain observations made in certain rulings logical inferences were drawn by the learned judges in P. R. 4 of 1913. I may mention, by the way, that I was present in the court when that case was argued. Unfortunately on account of the powerful eloquence of Pandit Shiv Narain, the people who were contending for the view did not succeed. I state this with full confidence that the learned judges in P. R. 17 of 1919 wanted to tone down the harshness of that ruling. I would submit this to Government that if they would carefully examine what is decided in P. R. 4 of 1913 and ransack the customary laws of the province through the riwaj-i-ams of various districts and wajbul-arzes they would find that nowhere in any document is there any mention that the just debt of any person shall not be paid by the heir or even by the next holder. What has been laid down by Hindu law, Muhammadan law and all other laws by which people are bound is that the just debts should be paid and it is an unholy thing not to pay them. This has been definitely laid down and is found in every system of law prevailing in this province. Therefore when the honourable member, Rao Bahadur Chaudhri Chhotu Ram was boasting that we are not here governed by Hindu or Muhammadan law but that we have got a code of our own, I would request him to show even from Rattigan's Digest on which he relied whether it is so laid down and in which part of the province, tribe, tahsil or town it is said that just debts are not to be paid. Leaving aside that ruling of a full bench of three judges in P. R. 4 of 1913 I ask honourable members to kindly show me anywhere by citing authority from riwaj-i-ams or other records of custom which lay down the proposition that even just debts should not be paid. That proposition is one to which I as a member of this Council and a representative of a rural constituency am not prepared to give my adherence. I must therefore protest in the name of those thousands of people whom I represent and who are honest men and who, if it is shown to them that just debts have been incurred, would like to pay them back. It is entirely a different matter if a person becomes an insolvent, if he is too poor or indigent to pay. There are creditors who meet such contingencies in the matter of repayment of the debt. But to rule it as a positive law, a positive enactment that in those circumstances the ancestral property of all kinds shall not be available is a monstrous proposition and the Council should not accept it. As I submitted in another connection when I was talking of the period of limitation, we are really putting a premium on dishonesty, we are inviting people to be dishonest and that, I submit, no civilised country, no legislature which is representative of civilised people should be prepared to do. It is entirely a different matter if the honourable Chaudhri Chhotu Ram or his friends come forward and say: "Persons are groaning under the burden of debt. Kindly find out methods and means of giving relief to them." But to rule it for all times, to place such a law on the statute book of this province, that even when there is property, ancestral property, ancestral houses, ancestral money available in the hands of a person and he can pay his debts he should not be permitted to pay. That I regard as unjust and unfair, that is what it comes to. Property is there, houses are there, lands are there, jewellery which has descended from ancestors is there, but the law says "you shall not pay even if you have the power to pay." That is exactly what Chaudhri Sahib wants us here in this Council as representatives of people who are honest to a great extent, to tell them. Government would be wise if they brought forward a Bill making such a law that interest shall not be paid by the people who have not got it and the principal shall be paid by Government. Government should come to the help of both creditors and debtors and say, we are prepared to grant a loan without interest to the borrower to be paid to the creditor and he should make it up in so many instalments. That is something which I can understand and to which I would give my full support. But what we are doing to-day is unheard of. Therefore even at this last minute I would ask my honourable friends who sit on my right, the members of the rural classes as they call themselves, the landlords and the lawyers and the retired Government servants not to accept a proposition of this kind. I know that I am talking to persons who would feel in their heart of hearts that such a state of things is unjust and unfair. Let them not for the sake of winning votes in future,—if that be their motive, I do not say that that is their motive, but if that be their motive—stand for a dishonest proposition. The honest proposition is that when a person has, he must pay. When he has not then some law should come to his help and laws do exist to help him. That, I submit, is one of the darkest blots on the clauses that have been passed.

[ Mr. Nanak Chand Pandit. ]

Now, with regard to limitation, unfortunately I have not been able to understand how the Government supported that. What I have not been able to understand is the clause which was moved by one of the Government officials. This question of limitation was thoroughly discussed and explained on both sides and I do not find any justification for cutting down the period. When you have a judicial machinery in the country to which the dishonest people can resort and they can pass the six years in this way defeating the creditors by their dilatory tactics, why should you give protection to these people? That is the question which I put to the Government to consider when they are taking the whole matter into consideration. It is a thing which has been discussed by us as lawyers between ourselves and we regard it as a total negation of all legal principles which have governed this province so far. That is a matter which does require the serious consideration of Government and they must not—because they are out to sympathise with the debtors—they must not lead them on to the path of dishonesty. They must therefore make it a rule that any person who from dishonest motives adopts dilatory tactics or takes resort to courts or brings a false suit or raises false objections shall not have the protection of this law. On the other hand I find that for the honest person who wishes to pay his debt a limitation of twelve years was the proper limitation. He could have said, I will pay in twelve instalments, and in that way he would have been helped and he is helped. He generally finds this help from the creditors. You are now taking away that help from such a man and you are telling him to somehow pass these six years and his debts shall be wiped off ipso facto.

With regard to the burden of proof, a very learned speech was made by the Legal Remembrancer yesterday, and I do not want to add anything to it. After taking into consideration all these facts I would ask my honourable friends at this last minute that they should be honest and help honesty in this province. So far as their grievance against the sahukar is concerned, they have got all the laws, laws which have been referred to by me on various occasions—the Usurious Loans Act, the Regulation of Accounts Act, the Relief of Indebtedness Act—all these are there. Now the person who is hit is not any one of these money-lenders but it is the person who has obtained a decree. The question is whether the Government will be a party and the Council will be a party to help the honest man who has obtained his decree or whether they will promote dishonesty in the land. That is the question. Let the Council decide.

Mr. F. H. Puckle : I beg to move—

That the question be now put.

The motion was carried.

Mr. President : The question is—

That the Punjab Debtors' Protection Bill be passed.

The motion was carried.

The Council then adjourned sine die.

Cultivated area in 1923-24.

Acres.

11,578

Cultivated area in 1934-35.

JUDICIAL FORMS.

(Answer to question No. *4820, page 457 ante.)

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : (a) There are only three judicial forms which strictly speaking come within the description in the honourable member's question. These three forms are—Opening Sheet for Civil Appeals .. Sold at three pies per copy.

Opening Sheet for Revisions. .. Sold at three pies per copy.

Application for Compensation by Workmen—Form F. Sold at six pies per copy.

Workmen—Form F.

In the case of a number of other court applications it is the practice for litigants to use regular forms, which are printed and sold by non-official agencies. In many kutcheries one or more dealers are given an exclusive right to sell these forms within the limits of the court compound, this being generally put up annually to public auction ; but there is no law or rule prohibiting litigants from using copies of these forms printed and sold elsewhere, or from using hand-written forms.

(b) Government have no special information, but believe that in some cases departmental forms are supplied to the public free of cost, in others not.

(c) In the case of the three judicial forms which alone are printed by official agency the charges made are designed solely to cover the cost of printing and distribution.

EXECUTION OF MONEY DECREES IN ROHTAK.

(Answer to question No. *4825, page 460 ante.)

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : It would not be possible to obtain this information without an examination of the records of all civil suits and execution applications disposed of by the Subordinate Judges in the Rohtak district during the years in question. To carry out such an examination would entail an expenditure of time and money out of proportion to the result to be attained and the Government regret that they cannot supply the information.

ASSESSMENT OF PROFESSIONAL TAX BY THE DISTRICT BOARD, FEROZEPORE.

(Answer to question No. *4906, page 604 ante.)

The Honourable Dr. Sir Gokul Chand Narang : (a) Yes.

(b) Yes.

(c) The assesseees did file some objections but the objections were not rejected arbitrarily. Three of the eight objections were accepted. The petitioners were not summoned as under the directions published with Punjab Government notification No. 20259, dated the 14th September, 1925, it is not incumbent on the Board to inquire into the objections filed by the assesseees. The Board made inquiries into these objections through circle members, but they did not consider it necessary to summon the petitioners.

(d) The practice referred to in clause (b) has existed for some years.

(e) Government do not propose to take any action as an appeal from the assessments made by the Board lies to the Commissioner and it has been ascertained that no such appeal has been made in recent years.

SPEECH BY M. IHSAN AHMAD, AN AHRAR, IN CHAUK AKBAR SHAH, FEROZEPURE CITY.

(Answer to question No. *4942, page 621 ante.)

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : (a) Yes.

(b) Yes.

(c) It is doubtful what actual words the speaker used, but their purport seems to have been as the honourable member states.

(d) The speech aroused little interest and no action was considered necessary.

WATER RATES, OWNER'S RATES AND LAND REVENUE.

(Answer to question No. *4944, page 622 ante.)

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) Yes.

(b) The schedules of water rates applicable to the Eastern and Sirhind Canals as well as a statement showing water advantage rate (khush hasiati or nahri parta) obtaining on these canals are laid on the table. As regards land revenue the attention of the honourable member is invited to chapters XXXI and XXXII of Settlement Manual which explain the system of the distribution of revenue over estates and holdings, respectively. From these instructions it will be observed that land revenue is imposed on estates and the incidence per acre varies from village to village and again according to the bachh it may differ from holding to holding and even from well to well. The preparation of these statistics require an amount of time and labour out of all proportion to the results obtainable, and I do not feel justified in calling for them under the circumstances.

(c) The requisite figures are not available and consequently it is not easy to ascertain the comparative income. The prospects of agriculture have no doubt fallen since pre-Sutlej Valley Project days owing to world causes.

(d) Varies: depending on river supplies, opens some time in April, closes early October.

(e) Yes. The abiana rates are higher than on the uncontrolled Grey Canals.

Schedule of Occupiers' Rates applicable to Sirhind Canal.

RABI CROPS.

(Answer to question No. *4968, page 688 ante.)

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) There is no report as no officers of the Agricultural Department were specially appointed in this connection.

(b) In Garhshankar tahsil (Hoshiarpur district) the condition was about normal. Similar was the case in the Nawanshahr tahsil (Jullundur district).

(c) Yes. Only 12 per cent. decrease in Garhshankar tahsil and a little above 10 per cent. in the Nawanshahr tahsil as compared with the preceding year.

(ii) No damage was done to the rabi crops by rain and hailstorms in the Nawanshahr tahsil. The yield of both irrigated and unirrigated wheat crop experiments was 13 per cent. below the normal. In the Garhshankar tahsil the season no doubt was unfavourable, but the rains in the month of April improved condition of the crops. Yield of wheat crop experiments of barani per acre in rabi 1935 was 427 seers, i.e., 7 seers more than the normal rate of produce.

(d) Such slight decrease did not justify a remission under the rules.

DISTURBANCE DURING DUSSEHRA.

(Answer to question No. *5100, page 872 ante.)

The Honourable Mr. D. J. Boyd : (a) Government has now seen the article.

(b) No action was taken by the local authorities as after enquiry it was found that the disturbance occurred when certain shopkeepers attempted to obstruct the passage of a Muhammadan procession through the grain market on the 20th of September, 1935. In the scuffle which ensued one shopkeeper received a slight injury on the nose.

(c) The Anaj Mandi is not private property but nazul land.

(c) Sikhs form 4.7 per cent. of the total population of the Rawalpindi division. If they are not yet represented among the headmasters of district board high and middle schools it does not necessarily mean that they are not receiving their due share of the posts of teachers in district board schools. Nor does it mean that they are not receiving their share in the province as a whole.

COMPLAINT AGAINST TAHSILDAR, KAHUTA.

(Answer to question No. 1275, page 718 ante.)

The Honourable Nawab Muzaffar Khan : (a) Yes.

(b) The local officers made enquiries into the facts detailed in the memorial and the memorialists were allowed an opportunity to substantiate them which they could not do.

(c) A copy of the memorial is laid on the table—

Copy of a memorial, dated the 26th July, 1935, by certain zamindars of Kahuta tahsil, district Rawalpindi.

The overwhelming majority of Kahuta tahsil in Rawalpindi district consists of zamindars being 90 per cent. of the entire population. The ilaga is hilly, and consequently the zamindar is extremely poor and miserable. The Government in order to shake off his poverty and indebtedness has introduced certain movements of which co-operation and village reconstruction are important.

Every tahsildar, whether Hindu or Musalman, hitherto put in charge of the tahsil, bore always sympathetic attitude towards the said movements which undoubtedly promote the interest of zamindar.

2. But unfortunately Chaudhri Jodha Ram, the present tahsildar who is intolerably partial by nature and bania by caste is put in charge of a purely zamindar tahsil like Kahuta, since one and a half year ago. Since then the interests of the zamindar, lying at the mercy of a bania, are hopelessly precarious. Soon after his appointment, as ill-luck would have it, he presided a gathering on "Co-operation-Day" and there he vomitted poison against the zamindar, highly praising the sahukar and his credit and unsparingly condemned the co-operative credit. This was extremely objectionable, especially on the part of a public servant.

But the Chaudhri could not help it because he is by blood inclined towards the bania. The matter went up to the press.

One of the Urdu daily papers at Lahore drew the attention of the Government to this fact, but they remained as unaffected as ever. A quarrel cropped up between sahukars and Brahmins at Nala Brahmanan, a village in this tahsil. Here too, he was not an exception to his usual conduct. He sided with his brother sahukars, and opposed the Brahmins, so much so that he submitted diaries against the latter. The only fault of those Brahmins in the eye of the tahsildar was that they were unfortunately zamindars by profession.

3. Since three or four years ago, simply on economical lines and to help the cause of "village uplift" work in the ilaga, the village women were restricted to frequent Kahuta (town) for shopping. This was mainly to protect the painfully earned income of the zamindar, from being wasted through his illiterate wife who was too simple for the greedy bania. The scheme was carried on very peacefully and there was no complaint against this innocent movement even in the sahukar circle whatsoever. But soon after the arrival of Chaudhri Jodha Ram, he began to instigate his brother banias (local mahajans) against the zamindar, and depicted before the former his gloomy future as a result of village uplift work in the villages. Crowds of local mahajans are seen flocking at his house where he lectures them to his heart's satisfaction. He has succeeded to some extent in his well arranged object. Here it goes without saying that the relations between the zamindars and mahajans were exceedingly pleasant and sweet. On 5th July, 1935, there was an ordinary "bol chāl" between a local mahajan and a Musalman on some personal affair.

This is bare reality that neither any other mahajan nor any other Musalman participated in the game. But a few mahajans who were well directed for the occasion by the tahsildar wired to the district authorities making them believe, as if communal riot had taken place. The police immediately arrived at the scene and saw nothing amiss amongst sister communities. The two persons who quarrelled were arrested and challaned. The evidence produced before the police states that the quarrel in question was personal and there was no danger of public peace being broken. Now the false informants amongst mahajans ought to have been proceeded against for wrong information to the police, but Chaudhri Jodha Ram is ever ready to help his bania brothers. He has been all along active to submit false and concocted diaries deceiving the concerned authorities and falsifying the police agency, mainly answerable for the peace of public.

4. To narrate how many non-agriculturists have been recommended to purchase the land of agriculturists, how many zamindar patwaris punished to fines, and how many benami mutations have been sanctioned by the Chaudhri, takes time. On the other hand, on more occasions than one, he has sheltered his bania subordinates who were actually culprits in the eye of law. It is also a serious trouble for the people that he comes to the court senselessly drunk and as result of intoxication abuses those who happen to appear before him.

Therefore we the zamindars of this ilaga respectfully approach the concerned authorities and request that in the interest of public in general, and the zamindar in particular, Chaudhri Jodha Ram tahsildar be removed to some other tahsil or else the ruin of the latter is sure and certain.
